What We Plead For

The Christian-Evangelist pleads for:

The Christianity of the New Testament, taught by Christ and his Apostles, versus the theology of the creeds taught by fallible men—the world's great need.

The divine confession of faith on which Christ built his church, versus human confessions of faith on which men have split the church.

The unity of Christ's disciples, for which he so fervently prayed, versus the divisions in Christ's body, which his apostles strongly condemned.

The abandonment of sectarian names and practices, based on human authority, for the common family name and the common faith, based on divine authority, versus the abandonment of scriptural names and usages for partisan ends.

The hearty co-operation of Christians in efforts of world-wide beneficence and evangelization, versus petty jealousies and strifes in the struggle for denominational pre-eminence.

The fidelity to truth which secures the approval of God, versus conformity to custom to gain the favor of men.

The protection of the home and the destruction of the saloon, versus the protection of the saloon and the destruction of the home.

For the right against the wrong;
For the weak against the strong;
For the poor who've waited long
For the brighter age to be.
For the truth, 'gainst superstition,
For the faith, against tradition,
For the hope, whose glad fruition
Our waiting eyes shall see.

RAILROAD RATES.—H. N. Herrick, R. R. secretary. For Encampment the usual rate of one fare and a third on certificate plan has been granted from all points in Illinois and from St. Louis. Tickets may be procured on and after July 21, and are sold for return trip until August 2. Visitors to Encampment will pay full fare for ticket to Eureka and secure certificate from agent at point where ticket is purchased. If agent cannot grant certificate valid over all the route, purchase ticket only to junction where cars are changed, then purchase ticket from this point for Eureka and get another certificate. When 100 certificates have been received, a rate of one-third fare will be granted for return trip. Do not fail to obtain certificate even at cost of some trouble, in order that reduced rates may be secured. Ministers will please explain these conditions from the pulpit at an early date.

America or Rome? Christ or the Pope?

With the close of the war with Spain the world has learned much concerning the ignorance and superstition that have so long prevailed in Spain and her territorial possessions. Catholicism rules Spain and her colonies. Statistics reveal that 68 per cent. of the population of Spain can neither read nor write. This may account for the predominance of the Catholic Church and the power and rule of the Pope of Rome. Contrast Spain, an old and once powerful nation, ruled by Catholicism, with younger Protestant nations, in which there is but little illiteracy, and where gospel liberty makes them a free, prosperous, happy and intelligent people.

The evils of Romanism are clearly set forth by John L. Brandt in his work, "America or Rome—Christ or the Pope." Now is the time for agents to place this book in the hands of readers. We are now offering extra inducements to agents to handle this work. Peolep will now want to read this kind of literature, and an active agent can do well by showing and selling this exposition of the despotism of Rome. Write us for our special inducements to agents on America or Rome—Christ or the ope.

CURRENT EVENTS.

According to the latest reports, it would seem that a secret treaty has been made between Great Britain, Germany and Russia concerning their respective "spheres of influence" in China, and that the partition of the empire has been practically agreed upon. France, Belgium and Italy come in for their share, also. It is generally understood that the Russians are to occupy Manchuria, where she has already several thousand soldiers. Germany is already in the Province of Shan-Tung, which that government is likely to permanently occupy. Great Britain, it is understood, will occupy the Yangtze Valley, the richest part of China. France is to have the Province of Szechuan for its "sphere of influence," while the other countries mentioned have smaller slices. China seems powerless to help herself, and is entirely at the mercy of these European powers. The Empress Dowager remains in the seclusion of the forbidden city, and appears indifferent to the aggressive movements of these foreign powers. Since the overthrow of the emperor, who was making such rapid strides in progress, China seems to be under the control of a few superstitious mandarins, who are opposed to all change and progress. If China had consented to have gone forward along with Japan in the line of progress she might have preserved her territorial integrity, but resisting progress she has courted her own dismemberment, and henceforth must cease to be reckoned as an independent national power.

Mr. Chamberlain has uttered some strong words concerning the situation in South Africa. In a speech at Birmingham on the 26th ult. he denounced in very strong terms the attitude and action of the Boers, stating that "if the reforms that Lord Ripon proposed in 1894 had been accepted there would have been no raid and no crisis at the present time. But the raid tied the hands of the government and prevented the application of pressure." Continuing, Mr. Chamberlain said that "the way the British subject there is treated is not only a menace to the subjects of other countries there, but interferes with our prestige among the natives, who now regard the Boers, and not the British, as the paramount power." He charged that the Transvaal had flagrantly violated the equality that the London Convention was intended to secure, and said that its misgovernment "is a festering sore, poisoning the whole atmosphere of South Africa." Referring to the past, the minister added, "Four times since independence was granted we have been on the verge of war with the Transvaal. It is erroneous to say the British Government wants war; but it is equally erroneous to say that the government will draw back, now that it has put its hand to the plow." This can only mean that unless President Kruger of the Transvaal yields to the demands of the British Government concerning the rights of British subjects Great Britain will use force to compel these concessions. It is to be hoped that her demands will be yielded to without the necessity of resorting to arms.

Gen. Otis, at the request of Adjutant Gen. Corbin, has sent a long cablegram to the War Department giving a somewhat detailed report of the situation in the Philippines, under date of June 26th. The dispatch states that it is the rainy season, and that little inland campaigning is possible in Luzon. Our forces, he says, "occupy a large portion of the Tagal country, our lines stretching from Imus south to San Fernandina, north, nearly 60 miles and to the eastward into Lagun Province." The largest insurgent force held together consists of about 40,000 in Tarlac Province. The mass of people, he reports, desire peace under American protection. The population within our lines is becoming dense and taking up land cultivation extensively. The chief reliance of the insurgent leaders now, he says, is in the United States. There has been an increase of sickness among the troops lately, due to arduous service and climatic influences, but nothing alarming. Affairs in other islands are comparatively quiet, awaiting results in Luzon. All are anxious for trade and repeated calls for American troops are received. Under instructions from the War Department, the recruiting stations are busy in receiving recruits who are to fill up regiments now in service in the Philippines, and to form new regiments to be officered by Gen. Otis, with men who have distinguished themselves for bravery and ability in the army under his command. It is expected to swell the entire force in the Philippines to 40,000, thus giving Gen. Otis an efficient command of 30,000 with an allowance for sickness and other disabilities.

The crossing of the continent by Gov. Roosevelt, of New York, to be present at a reunion of the Rough Riders in Las Vegas, N. Mex., during the past week, together with the programme carried out while there, attracted wide attention in the public press and constituted altogether a rather picturesque event. There were present only about 200 of the Rough Riders, but there were a large number of spectators and no lack of interest in the programme. There was a regimental parade led by Col. Roosevelt, which was witnessed by 10,000 people. At the tournament grounds where Col. Roosevelt, as he was known for the time being occupied a box, the Rough Riders passed in review and performed their evolutions. At the close of these performances, Honorable Frank Springer in an eloquent and eulogistic speech, presented Col. Roosevelt with a testimonial from the people of New Mexico in the form of a medal as an expression of "their appreciation of his character as an American citizen and their admiration for his conspicuous gallantry in battle." The speaker also intimated that higher honors awaited the Colonel in serving the nation to whose glory he had contributed. The Colonel responded in a very happy speech, in closing which he said: "I claim the same right that each of your sons claims of glory and take pride in the name and fame of New Mexico. I am an American as you are Americans, and you and I alike have the right to claim as our own every acre and rod of country from Maine to Oregon, from Florida to California. All I shall say is if New Mexico wants to be a state, you can call on me and I will go to Washington to speak for you, or do anything you wish." At many places coming and going, Gov. Roosevelt was met by applauding crowds of people to whom, as occasion permitted, he made brief speeches. The journey West certainly affords striking proof, not only of the Governor's popularity, but of his strong attachment to the soldiers who served under him in Cuba.

While the continental powers are planning to divide China up into "spheres of influence" among themselves the United States is taking the lead in the foundation of the new international institute at Pekin, the object of which is to "place the newest inventions both of Europe and America, as well as the latest ideas in science, within reach of the mandarins and learned classes of Pekin, without any idea of religious proselytism." Dr. Gilbert Reid, an American missionary, is taking the lead in this enterprise. The plan is to have each great power, as far as possible, form a museum of its own, constituting a part of the institute, and a large amount of money has been raised for this purpose. Dr. Reid has addressed circulars to the various foreign governments appealing for financial support. The circulars are strongly endorsed by each of the foreign envoys at Pekin. The dispatch concerning this matter states that "Pekin is not only the administrative headquarters of China, but also the intellectual center of the empire and it is expected that through this international institute the work of civilization will be rapidly extended and fostered throughout China. It is only a question of time when the darkness and superstition of the so-called Celestial Empire must give way before the combined assaults of the various agencies that are being used for the dissemination of the gospel, of science and art, and of more enlightened forms of education and government.

To the people of this country the excitement which prevails in France, and particularly at Brest, where the vessel bearing Capt. Dreyfus is expected to land, is utter inexplicable. The volatile French people are controlled on the one hand by an intense anti-Jewish feeling, which for the time being is concentrated on Capt. Dreyfus. The fear entertained by the authorities of the assassination of Dreyfus comes from this source and a strong guard has been provided to protect him. In addition to this anti-Jewish feeling there is strong opposition on the part of a large number of generals in the army to Capt. Dreyfus, growing out of the fact that his vindication means their condemnation and the uncovering of their nefarious plot to destroy him. They are fighting for their own lives and reputations and places. At this writing the vessel bearing Capt. Dreyfus to his native shores has not yet been sighted, though an army of reporters has been waiting for weeks for its arrival. It is reported that the vessel is held back for state reasons. Madame Dreyfus and her son are at Brest waiting the arrival of the vessel bearing the long-banished husband and father to his home and loved ones and, as they believe, to his sure vindication. It is not to be supposed, however, that the generals in the army are going to remain idle and permit the victim of their hatred to be vindicated without another desperate effort on their part to have him condemned. This is a testing period for France and it is well that at such a time there is at the helm such men as President Loubet and Premier Waldeck-Rousseau. The French nation is on trial before the world for more than Capt. Dreyfus, whose innocence of the charges against him has long been accepted as a matter of fact. If the French nation is not able to bring to justice the men who have plotted and lied and forged false documents to condemn an innocent man, it is not strong enough to answer the purposes for which governments are instituted among men and will soon pass away.

The new French Cabinet has weathered the first storm safely, as we predicted last week that it would, and is likety to have a working majority now until it accomplishes its task. The great debate in the Chamber of Deputies, which was to decide whether the Waldeck-Rousseau Cabinet was to stand or fall, came off on the 26th ult. It was a stormy session throughout, marked by unusual disorder for even the French Chamber. The new premier, as he mounted the steps of the Tribune, holding in his hands the manuscript of the Ministerial Declaration, was met with with shouts of "Vive la commune," "Down with the assassins," and other interruptions of a similar character. It was a most difficult task he had to perform, but he performed it bravely. Then followed the heated discussion, closing with the reply of the new premier to his critics. His reply closed with the bold words, "If anybody else has a governmental method better than ours, we are quite ready to retire." The vote that followed was 263 for and 237 against the Cabinet. This victory of the Cabinet is evidently due to the unwillingness of many who were opposed to it, to risk further political disorder. But having passed the first crisis safely, it is believed that the new Cabinet may now go forward to accomplish its work.

It is announced in the newspapers that Dr. Wm. R. Harper, president of the University of Chicago, has ended his long connection with Chautauqua. It is furthermore stated in the public press that back of this fact of the retirement of Dr. Harper from the head of the Chautauqua Collegiate Department, and from the Board of Trustees of the Chautauqua Association, is a battle between the Baptists and Methodists. A scheme was on foot to move the reading circle from Buffalo to Chicago, to take the publishing plant of Flood & Vincent, publishers of the Chautauqua literature, to Chicago and to make that city the center of the popular educational movement. Bishop Vincent, Chancellor of Chautauqua, is said to bein favor of this plan of organization, which included the removal to Chicago and the making of Dr. Harper the virtual head of the entire movement. The Methodists have always been jealous that the Chautauquan movement should remain under Methodist control, and when they got wind of this movement, they claimed that it meant a "sell-out" to the Baptists and that John D. Rockefeller would be the controling spirit of the Chautauquan movement. When Dr. Harper heard of this bit of ecclesiastical jealousy, he cut his connection both with the Collegiate Department and the Board of Trustees, and Cleveland instead of Chicago is to be the center of the educational movement, while the Assembly still continues at Chautauqua. If this little episode of the newspaper accounts be true it illustrates the fact that the millennium is not yet, and that denominational rivalry is a force that must be reckoned with. Chautauqua has been the center of a wide educational movement, and a source of great moral and intellectual benefit to the country, but it is to be hoped that no effort to denominationalize it will ever succeed.

Captain Dreyfus was landed at Quiberon, France, shortly after midnight on Friday, June 30th, and carried by special train to Rennes where he was placed in prison at 5:30 Saturday morning, July 1st. As the landing was much later than had been expected, various rumors had gone out to the effect that Dreyfus was dead, that he had committed suicide, etc.; but the delay was in all probability the part of a plan to escape the crowd awaiting his arrival at Rennes and the possibility of a riot or trouble of any kind. The landing of Captain Dreyfus and his arrival at the Rennes prison was effected without an attempt at violence from any quarter. He is said to have composed himself remarkably well throughout the voyage and his landing at Rennes from the special train. His appearance is said to be much more rugged and vigorous than had been reported, excepting that of his prematurely gray hair. In appearance he is still the soldier that he was before his imprisonment. Three hours after his landing in the Rennes prison his wife was permitted to see and converse with him in the presence of the prison official. The incidents of the meeting seem too sacred for the public, and but for the bearing they have upon the greater question of his knowledge, or rather lack of knowledge, of things in France, should not be told. It is evident from his reported expressions and understanding that he was carried from France with no knowledge whatever of the situation except that he was innocent of the crime for which he was banished, and that he has had but little if any knowledge of the developments in France since his departure. It is said that he still thinks Faure is the President of France, and that his superiors were involuntarily deceived as to the crime of which he was accused. And, worst of all, on some account his mind seems to have been "poisoned" against his wife. It is reported that he was at first cold and indifferent toward her and that it was some time before he began to appreciate the situation. He intimated that his wife had neglected him and even thought that his children were dead. The agony of Mme. Dreyfus at the first meeting under such circumstances must have been most intense, but her courage proved equal to the occasion and as the real situation began to dawn upon Captain Dreyfus, his former love for his faithful, loyal companion returned and he embraced her as his "angel wife." All this seeming coldness on the part of Captain Dreyfus is due to his ignorance of what his wife and friends have done for him during his exile absence. But he will soon be informed of the situation and revise his views accordingly. He still loves his country, believes that he is soon to be a free man, and has expressed a desire to return to the service of his country again. He believes his banishment was the result of an "anti-Jewish odium" and trusts that his unjust punishment will put an end to all racial and religious feuds in the army of France. In the meantime the Government of France has shown great strength in its management of affairs and the revolutionists have not made an attempt at its overthrow, or even to precipitate a riot.

The sale of some of the leading street car systems of this city to the Brown Brothers, New York, has recently brought to the city large sums of money. It is said that $7,000,000 were paid over to St. Louis parties on one day of last week and that when all pending negotiations are completed St. Louis men will have received in the neighborhood of $20,000,000. These are the final steps toward the consolidation of all the street railways of St. Louis under one management. In some respects this will benefit the citizens and traveling public, but what the general effect upon the social and industrial conditions of the city cannot now be clearly foretold. Some of the benefits will be a universal transfer system, the conversion of all cable lines into electric motor lines, and numerous extensions of roads into suburban districts. The plan, as we understand it, contemplates the absorption of all the present electric light and power plants in the city, so that all competition on these lines will be removed. Those using electic lights and power for motor purposes will be at the mercy of this gigantic corporation. The present outer electric power plants are to be closed down or supplanted by two central power statiosn of huge proportions. In the meantime, much labor will be required in developing the system and much money expended. The millions received for the stock of the old systems will also have to be invested and there is no reason to believe that it will all go into other fields. St. Louis has large uses for capital and much of the capital received will be invested here, which ought to give a new impulse to the life and growth of the city.

CONSOLIDATION OF MISSIONARY SOCIETIES.

The Christian Tribune, in a recent issue, contains the following editorial paragraph:

The Journal and Messenger, a leading Baptist paper gives expression to the growing conviction among the Baptists that they have too many missionary societies, and this is true among most communions. The Disciples have too many. The consolidation of the negro work with the Home Society, so as to have only one offering, was wise. Such a move for the Church Extension and Ministerial Relief with the Home Society should follow next. These are all under the Home Society now, but a reduction of forces would mean a reduction of expenses, and one offering a year for this entire work would mean an enlarged treasury. Then a combining of the Home and and Foreign Societies and the C. W. B. M. would place the great and supreme cause of missions in a better shape. We have too many offerings now—too much call for money and too little call for prayer. But it is supposed that we do the latter. Then, why not suppose we do the former? Is it that the first is necessary and the latter is not? We too frequently go upon this assumption, whatever may be our thoughts and practices. There need be but one missionary society and two collections each year, and the cause of Christianity would be better by it.

The attitude of the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST toward the question of the unification and simplification of our missionary machinery is very generally known. We have believed for many years that the best interest of our missionary work and of our churches would be promoted by the union at least of our Home and Foreign Missionary Societies. The editor of this paper at one time introduced a resolution to this effect, and it was endorsed by the convention. Joint committees were appointed to confer upon the basis of union. This basis was agreed upon by the committee and submitted to the next convention. A question as to the constitutional changes necessary to bring about the desired change caused this report to be referred to another joint committee. One of the societies failed to appoint the requisite committee and the matter was allowed to rest. There was some opposition, of course, to the proposed consolidation, and this, together with the indifference which prevailed with others, permitted the matter to go by default.

The plan to which we refer contemplated the union of the Home and Foreign Societies under the title of the American Christian Missionary Society, with boards representing the various interests, such as the board of Home Missions, Foreign Missions, Church Extension, Ministerial Relief, etc. Perhaps a better arrangement in reference to boards would be to have a single board much larger than any one board we now have, with committees having charge of various interests. This would tend still further to unify and to simplify our missionary methods and, as we believe, to increase their efficiency.

It may be asked, What are the reasons for the proposed unification of our missionary societies? We offer the following as most readily suggesting themselves:

1. Mission work is one, whether done in home fields or in foreign lands. The fact that there are two distinct societies, one having for its object the evangelization of this country and the other the evangelization of foreign countries, creates and fosters the opposite idea. As a consequence, there are some who say that they are in favor of Home Missions, but not of Foreign Missions, and others profess to be in favor of Foreign Missions but not of Home Missions. This, of course, is absurd. The man who is not in favor of giving the gospel to all people, regardless of where they live does not know what the gospel is, and has never caught its spirit. The unity of all this work, whether at home or abroad, whether in its church building, educational or in its benevolent aspects, is best manifested by a single organization, brought into as close and vital touch with the churches as possible. Recent territorial acquisitions are bringing this home and foreign idea into some confusion. The American Christian Missionary Society, which we now call our Home Society, has already begun missionary operations in Porto Rico, and we understand that the Foreign Christian Missionary Society is planning to begin work in Cuba, our next door neighbor. Just which society is to have jurisdiction over the Philippine Islands, we suppose, is a political question, which can hardly be settled until after the next Presidential campaign! If one should arise in our Jubilee Convention of the Home Missionary Society and propose that missionaries be sent to Manila, he would likely be branded as an "imperialist." While, if one were to propose such a measure in the convention of the Foreign Society, it would lead to the suspicion that he was an "anti-expansionist." It looks, therefore, as if we would have to unite the two societies in order to keep politics out of our convention.

2. The union proposed would promote economy of administration. It requires but little consideration of the subject to see that this would be the case. It must be, under the present arrangement, that we are under unnecessary expense in the way or rents and assistants in carrying forward the different departments of our work. Secretaries travel long distances, crossing each other's paths, traversing the same fields, each in the interest of his own work; whereas, one man could equally well represent the whole work which, as we have said, is one work. Let us suppose that we have the same number of secretaries that we now have. It is easy to see how they could divide the field between them to much better advantage if each one represented the entire work instead of a fraction of it. Wherever McLean, Rains, B. L. or C. C. Smith, or Muckley went he would represent the whole of our missionary work, Church Extension, Ministerial Relief, and our educational interests. Is it not self-evident that this is just the way that any first-class business house would manage the work? This is the economic side of the trusts, and if we can have the benefit of the economy of administration which the trust secures, without any or its evil effects, why should we not have it? And then, if these interests were all brought together in some central city, and located in the same building, there would doubtless be great economy in rent and office help.

3. It would greatly simplify our convention work. Instead of two conventions with two sets of committees, consuming extra time and producing more or less friction, we should have one convention, one presiding officer, one set of committees covering the entire field, economizing time and avoiding friction. It looks a little like child's play where the same people are organized, now into a foreign society and now into a home society, as if these two works were so different that they could not be done under one organization.

4. This unification would help to solve the problem that is now distressing the the minds of a great many pastors, who fear that the repeated number of calls for so many different objects, instead of cultivating the spirit of liberality and giving will discourage their congregations. They wish the churches to give more and not less, but they fear that the repeated and continuous calls will have the opposite effect. An increasing number of churches are already beginning to consolidate the offerings into two and make the distribution between the different societies themselves. This unification of the societies would lesson the number of special days and special offerings, and enable the churches to concentrate more effort upon one or two annual offerings, that would mean more to the missionary treasury in the way of receipts, and more to the churches in the way of spiritual benefit than the repeated calls for so many different objects. Imagine, too, what a relief this would be to our newspapers which are relied upon to carry all these various appeals to the churches. It can be said, of course, and will be said, no doubt, that these repeated calls on the churches have an educational value, but this is based on the idea that a preacher need not preach on missions unless he is going to take an offering. The work of education in missions and in the other departments of our our work should go on continuously, and will do more and more as our work becomes better systematized.

In this article we have said nothing concerning the relation of the Christian Woman's Board of Missions to other work. Their plan of raising funds is different from that of our other societies, as they rely upon their auxiliaries in the various congregations for their funds rather than upon special collections. Besides, their work is specifically woman's work and has that apology, at least, for a seperate organization. Nevertheless, we are constrained to believe that if even the woman's work was brought into closer union with our other mission work, in some way, it would be better for reasons already stated. It was necessary, perhaps, for their work to begin and to be carried on as it has been, for the enlistment of our women in missionary work, just as it was necessary, perhaps, for the Foreign Society to be inaugurated and carried on as a separate society for a time, until the work received general recognition. But it seems to us that the time has now come when we are large enough, broad enough, and have enough constructive ability to organize our forces more unitedly and give a better example to the world of the practical benefits of that Christian union for which we plead.

Of all Divine institutions, the most Divine is that which secures a day of rest for man. I hold it to be the most valuable blessing ever conceded to man.—Lord Beaconsfield.

BEGINNING AT THE END.

The apostles in the execution of the great commission, began at the end and ended at the beginning. They did not first go and then preach and teach, and then realize the presence of Jesus; they commenced with the fact and the consciousness of the presence of Christ, under the inspiration of which they preached salvation and its conditions, and then proceeded to carry out the marching orders of the King in the "go" of the beginning. It did not enter into the minds of the apostles to go or to preach without the promised presence of their Master, which they began to realize in the coming of the Holy Spirit on the day of Pentecost. Christ told them to wait for it, and not to go without it. They were conscious of their unpreparedness and weakness, for without Christ they could do nothing. They waited according to instruction in the ten days' prayer-meeting for the heavenly illumination, the divine enduement, then they advanced upward from the end to the middle of their commission and commenced the proclamation of salvation to lost Israel, gathered in the capital city. An army must be organized before it can take the field. Disciples must be made and a church established before systematic and world-wide evangelization can be successfully carried on.

The apostles were not the first to go in the original campaign of the Holy Spirit. They were the last to go. After the organization of the first church and its disruption by persecution, the disciples who were scattered abroad went everywhere preaching the Word. The privates of the Jerusalem army inaugurated the first campaign of world-evangelism. The apostles followed, and thus the first item in order became the third in time in the apostolic construction of the commission. So in the execution of their Lord's amnesty proclamation, the apostles reversed the order of its items at every point as they are laid down in the words of the Savior. First, wait for the presence of Christ in the manifestation of the Holy Spirit; second, preach Christ and the conditions of salvation; third, carry out the marching orders of the great Commander, "Go into all the world." This is the historical and the spiritual order of all effective missionary service.

This is the order in which all evangelical denominations have practically interpreted and followed the great constitutional document of Christianity. The Disciples of Christ are no exception to this rule. When our fathers began their work they did so in the consciousness of the presence and power of Jesus Christ. With the Holy Spirit sent down from heaven they preached salvation to the lost, and in the later and better organized years of our movement we have been trying to go into all the world, and help to evangelize the nations. This is the divine order spiritually and historically to be followed by all who would make an effective contribution to the missionary power of the world.

The truth to be emphasized in this article is the necessity for a fuller realization of the great promise of the commission, the presence of Jesus with his people all the days of this dispensation, as the vital source of their power for service. Christ's Spirit indwelling and animating the church is not only the hope of glory; it is the dynamo for the generation of spiritual power, and the inspiration of all fruitful activities. Human orthodoxies and agencies have a place, doubtless, but neither zeal for dogma nor the manipulation of machinery can take the place of the living Christ in the hearts and lives of his servants. Paul could do all things through Christ who gave him strength, but a thousand Pauls without this sufficiency, which is of God, could do nothing in the actual saving of men from their sins. The secret of the declension of spiritual power in the church lies in the failure to grip the conditions of the Lord's perpetual presence in and with the people of God.

A recent report in a state convention representing a hundred thousand Disciples declares that three hundred out of eight hundred churches in the state had ceased to meet on the Lord's day. Dead congregations were these, from which the candlestick had been removed. Indifference and a dearth of spirituality, and, probably sin, had grieved the Holy Spirit away, and the results were ecclesiastical carcasses strewn along the way—a stench in the nostrils of the world and living churches! It is more than likely that these defunct churches were built upon a dogmatic commercialism forced into the middle part of the commission by externalistic preachers, in disregard of the beginning and end of that document, from which the middle derives its vitality. We have a world of this kind of objective and theoretic preaching by unspiritual and half-educated men. Has this condition anything to do with explaining the fact that multitudes of our churches do not meet for worship unless a preacher happens to be present, and that these congregations do not contribute a cent to missions from one year's end to another? If the same amount of emphasis had been laid upon the beginning and the end of the commission as upon the middle, could these deplorable facts be predicted of them?

Brethren, the inner temple must be cleared that the King of glory may come in. It would open afresh the fountains of spiritual life. It would quicken and refresh the spiritually weary. It would arrest declension, broaden charity, fire zeal and purify the life of the church. If every church in the land realized fully the last promise of the presence of its divine Master, the world would be evangelized, social problems would be solved, the drink fiend would be bound, our streets would be morally cleansed, business would become more honest, the profits of trade would become more equitably divided, and justice combined with thrift would solve the problem of poverty without breaking the back of individualism conferred by liberty. The living, conscious presence of Jesus with his people is the one specific for the ills of the world.

The condition of our Lord's abiding presence with his disciples is beautifully expressed in the Twentieth Century New Testament: "Teaching them to lay to heart all the commands I have given you; and, remember, I shall myself be always with you until the close of the age." This is better than "teaching them to observe all things," for a man may observe many things without laying anything to heart. If, however, we lay to heart the commands of Jesus we will observe, in its true spirit and meaning, every one of them. Here is our fundamental mistake, our fatal deficiency we have laid a few of the commands of Jesus to head, but nowhere have we laid them all to heart. Have we laid to heart the precepts of the Sermon on the Mount—all of them? Have we taken to our inmost souls the lofty spiritual teachings in Temple Courts, recorded in the closing chapters of John's Gospel? Have we? Have we done justice to the Beattitudes, the way of entrance into the kingdom of God? Why select two or three of the commands of Jesus, to lay particular stress upon, and these not the most fundamental, but the most susceptible of abuse, and thus discriminate, in a manner of speaking, against the rest? Jesus, our divine Master, did not put it that way. All of the commands are to be taken to heart, as American men lay politics and Mammon-worship to heart, before the promise holds good, "And remember, I shall myself be always with you until the close of the age."

Hour of Prayer.

RELIGION AND THE THERMOMETER.

(Jonah 4:5-11; Luke 9:23-25.)

CENTRAL TRUTHS: God's mercy is wider than man's; following Christ involves the daily bearing of our cross, no matter what danger such cross-bearing may involve.

Jonah had been directed by Jehovah to go and preach repentance unto Nineveh. He attempted to disobey the Lord, but fell into worse trouble, as we always do when we try to run away from God. But having escaped from the perils of the deep, he goes to Nineveh, proclaims his message, warns the people of their coming destruction. Strange to say, "the people of Nineveh believed God." Even the king exchanged his robe of state for sackcloth and issued a proclamation in connection with his nobles, decreeing a fast and calling upon every one "to turn from his evil way and from the violence that is in their hands." Nineveh repented, and God turned away his wrath, and did not destroy it. This act of mercy on the part of God "displeased Jonah exceedingly, and he was angry." He felt, perhaps, that this act of divine clemency would undermine the foundations of justice and imperil the divine government. This is not the only case in which one of God's servants has been offended at the breadth of divine mercy and compassion.

Jonah even makes his knowledge of God's graciousness and mercy the ground of his refusal at first to go to Nineveh, and of his attempt to flee unto Tarshish. But this explanation puts Jonah in the unenviable light of being unwilling to go and preach to a wicked city, foretelling its destruction, because, in case of repentance, he knew God could not inflict the punishment.

In this state of mind, after the Lord had reasoned with him, "Jonah went out of the city, and there made him a booth and sat under it in the shade, till he might see what would become of the city." Perhaps he hoped that God might yet change his mind and destroy the city. But God was still gracious to him in spite of his bad temper, and prepared a gourd to grow up and become a shade over his head. Jonah was glad of the gourd as a protection for himself, even though he was sad over the failure of the Lord to destroy Nineveh. When the Lord caused the gourd to be destroyed by a worm, and Jonah was faint under the power of the heat, he was angry with the Lord again, at which Jehovah said to him, "Thou hast had pity on the gourd, for which thou hast not labored, neither madest it grow; which came up in a night, and perished in a night; and should not I have pity on Nineveh, that great city, wherein are more than sixscore thousand persons that cannot discern between their right hand and their left; and also much cattle?"

There is in these beautiful and tender words the foreshadowing of that univesalism of God's mercy which was subsequently revealed in the gospel of Christ. Jonah's sin was not in leaving the city and seeking shade in the country, but in the narrowness of his sympathies, and his rebellion against the ways of God to men. A preacher of his frame of mind would do much less harm under a booth in the country than in the city, and the farther he can get away from the city the better it would be for it and, perhaps, for the preacher also. We are glad that God in his goodness still prepares a shade for his servants when they are weary and faint, and bids them,in the tender language of the Master, to "come aside and rest a little," when their physical condition requires it.

The passage from Luke enforces the lesson of daily cross-bearing. It is not a matter of acknowledging Christ at the beginning of our Christian life, but a matter of daily service and of daily bearing of the cross. The "cross" here stands for whatever opposition, hardship or privation may be connected with our loyalty to Jesus Christ. If it be necessary to witness for Christ by the laying down of our lives for his sake, we are not to hesitate to do so, because under such conditions, "whosoever shall lose his life for my sake, the same shall find it." Our Savior teaches that it would be a very bad bargain for one to "gain the whole world and lose himself."

It may involve a little more self-denial to serve Christ loyally and faithfully during the heat of the summer season than at other times. If one's post of duty is in the city, and his forsaking of that post would mean dereliction of duty, he would be a poor follower of Christ who, for the sake of comfort and convenience, would refuse to bear his cross daily for the sake of Christ. This must not be interpreted, however, to mean that the Lord is a hard, unmerciful taskmaster, who holds his disciples to certain tasks without regard to their physical needs. He is mindful of the welfare of His servants, and desires them to pursue that course that will enable them to accomplish most good for the world. The lesson simply emphasizes the truth that we are not to turn from following Christ because of hardships, or sacrifices, or dangers, but that we must be loyal to Him at all times and seasons, at home or abroad, in the city or in the country, and quite regardless as to whether the thermometer be at the freezing or at the boiling point.

PRAYER.

We thank Thee, O God, that Thou art full of compassion and tenderness, and that Thy mercy is wider than we can appreciate or understand. We thank Thee for Thy long-suffering toward us, and that in times of stress and trial Thou hast provided protection for us. We thank Thee for the gift of Thy Son, our Savior and our Leader. Help us, we pray Thee, to be His faithful followers. As He bore the cross for us, so may we have grace and strength to take up our cross daily and follow Him, through evil and through good report, in prosperity and in adversity, in times of security and in times of danger. At this season of the year, when many are scattered abroad from their homes and from their usual places of worship, may we all seek to be loyal to Christ and may there be no vacation in our religious duties and obligations. For His name's sake. Amen!

MACATAWA MUSINGS.

The quiet which had prevailed since our arrival at the Park was broken on yesterday by a contest between the forces of Boreas and Neptune. In other words, the winds blew fiercely from the north and northeast upon the face of the deep, and the deep responded with a tumult of waves which thundered upon the shore all day long. Black Lake, or Macatawa Bay, as it is sometimes called, was submerged by the inflowing waters from Lake Michigan, causing the highest water in the little lake which we have ever seen. The little dock for the rowboats was submerged, and there was hurrying and scurrying on the part of the boatmen to save the smaller craft from being washed out into the lake or beaten to pieces against the shore. It is splendid, however, to hear the deep diapason of the old lake when it is once roused to energy of action by a gale, and to watch the long lines of white-crested waves as they chase each other to the beach. A change of this kind is always welcome for those who dwell upon the shore, however uncomfortable it may be to those who are "rocked in the cradle of the deep." The stormy day was closed with a gorgeous sunset, which filled all the western horizon with the glory of its going down. Despite the stiff, cool breeze that was blowing, men, women and children sat upon the sand near the breaking waves, and gazed out over the lake upon the gorgeous clouds that had caught the glory of the departing sun, and seemed lost in meditation.

As we looked upon these gazing groups of people, whose faces were fastened on the glowing portals of the west and the magnificent cloud-scenery, we asked ourself the question whether it was possible for people to look upon such scenes without being made better by them. How can a soul, possessed with any sense of the sublime and of the infinite, look upon such splendid visions of beauty, painted by the hand of the divine Artist, and not recognize the presence, in this world and in their own being, of that God who worketh hitherto and still works in all the changes of earth and sky and in all the forms and manifestations of life and beauty? Once we have received the idea of a divine creative Power, an infinite Being, who has brought into existence the heavens and the earth, and who upholds them by the word of his power, it is easy to see his presence and his continuous operations in all that charms the eye, delights the ear or fills the soul with high and noble thoughts. We cannot believe that one under the spell of the divine beauty as it is painted upon the heavens, or the earth, or the sea, can at the same time be under the dominion of base and sordid desires and ambitions. The two sets of feelings must be mutually repellant. If an art gallery is educative of the taste or sense of beauty, why should not the pictures in nature, which the best of art can only imitate, be more so?

The prophecy of yesterday's sunset is fulfilled. A marvelously blue sky and bracing breeze, a lake reflecting a variety of hues and flecked here and there with white-caps, make almost ideal, yet characteristic Macatawa weather. It is a delight to work and think in such an atmosphere. What an ideal place it is in which to read the books that you have been promising yourself to read for sometime! As an author, we could wish ourselves no better fortune than to have our books read under such conditions as here exist. We are reading two books just now, very diverse in their character, which is better than to be reading two books of the same character at the same time. McGiffert's "Apostolic Age," celebrated by the opposition which it has aroused in the Presbyterian Church against its author, is a book that should be read by those who wish to know the things that are being said by the scholarly men of our time. We have read few books which have raised as many mental protests against its conclusions as this of McGiffert's, and yet there are frequent flashes of insight into the spirit of the times, and a wealth of resource in the way of the world's best thought, that makes the book well worth reading. Herron's "Between Cæsar and Jesus" is an intense book, written by an intense man, who has red-hot convictions on social problems, and who utters them strongly and fearlessly. We do not always find ourself in agreement with Prof. Herron's statements, but at the same time we believe he is doing much to stir up the social conscience and to prepare the way for the coming of Christ into our social and industrial lives. We read him with pleasure and profit even when we are compelled to differ from him.

It is the early morning hour. The household at Edgewood-on-the-Lake is asleep, except the writer. Even the lake seems to be slumbering, like an infant, and only its gentle breathing is heard. There is the steady twitter of a wren or two, with an occasional note from another morning songster. As for the rest there is stillness. Far out over the lake a purple line marks the place where sky and water meet. A few slanting rays of sunlight are falling through the trees like golden arrows from the quiver of the mighty day-god. Morning! As calm and beautiful as upon that first day, of which it is said, "And the evening and the morning were the first day." What a revelation that first morning must have been to the primitive pair! Its fading stars, its glowing, tremulous light in the east, its rising sun, driving back the darkness and gloom of the night, and flooding hill and dale with its glorioug beams, must have been watched with an increasing wonder and admiration which deepened into worship, as they saw the stately advance of day. Each morning since then has partaken of the beauty and wonder of that first morning, somewhere, to some observant, responsive soul. Every morning a new, clean page in our life-volume is spread before us, and the angel, Aurora, reminds us that we may write thereon deeds, words and thoughts, which may contribute to our own and the world's happiness, or quite the reverse. Thank God for the morning, with its quietude, its new energy, it high resolves, and its benediction on the day!

Among the arrivals at the Park, during ing the past few days, is the family of J. J. Haley, and J. Z. Tyler and family. Bro. Bowman and wife, of Chicago, spent a day at the Park this week, prospecting. They were originally from St. Louis, and are prominent workers in the First Christian Church, of Chicago, of which Bro. Tyrrell is pastor. We have also been favored with a visit from Prof. Jefferson, dean of the Berkeley Bible Seminary, at Berkeley, California. Bro. Jefferson has been passing through the deep waters of late, in the loss of his estimable wife, recently, and has come East to bring his children to their relatives. It is always stimulating to meet and commune with Bro. J. on the things of the kingdom. We have few more diligent and competent Bible students and Bible teachers than he. He will return to California in time for the state convention. Next week comes the great Detroit Endeavor Convention, and we hope to meet many of our readers there.

Reformation of the Nineteenth Century

NINE DECADES OF HISTORY

THE TURBULENT PERIOD—VIII.

W. T. MOORE.

Necrology.

THE DEATH OF THREE GREAT MEN.

Not very many eminent men among the Disciples of Christ went to their rest during the period of which I am writing; but those who did go were perhaps the most eminent and influential of all connected with the movement. I cannot now mention more than three, but the death of these three would have amounted to almost a calamity had it not been for the inherent strength of the movement with which they were associated.

WALTER SCOTT.

The first of these heroes, in the order of time, to fall on the battlefield, was Walter Scott, whose death occurred April 23, 1861. He had just returned from a preaching tour and was greatly disturbed on account of the political troubles of the country. At first he seemed to be suffering with nothing more than a severe cold, but soon this developed into inflammation of the lungs, which finally proved fatal, after only a few days of severe illness. He bore his suffering with heroic resignation, and died in the hope of that gospel which he had so often and so eloquently preached to others.

I knew him personally for many years, and to know him was to love him. That which was perhaps most attractive about him was his childlike simplicity. Though endowed with a most superior intellect, which had been enriched by much reading and study, he was, nevertheless, unassuming as a little child. He was probably the most eloquent preacher in some respects that the Reformation had produced. I I have heard him when he seemed almost inspired. At such times he was indeed a master of assemblies.

He was almost equally effective with the pen. Some of his works, though not entirely free from literary faults are, nevertheless, among the best that have been produced by the movement with which he was identified. His power of generalization was remarkable and his works entitled "The Gospel Restored" and "The Great Demonstration" made a profound impression upon all who read them carefully at the time of their publication. They ought yet to be text-books with all young men who are preparing for the ministry of the Christian Churches.

I cannot do better than to quote what Mr. Campbell said of him in the May number of the Harbinger following his death:

"No death in my horizon, out of my own family, came more unexpectedly or more ungratefully to my ears, than this of our much-beloved and highly appreciated brother, Walter Scott, and none awoke more tender sympathies and regrets. Next to my father he was my most cordial and indefatigable fellow laborer in the origin and progress of the present Reformation. We often took counsel together in our efforts to plead and advocate the paramount claims of original and apostolic Christianity. His whole heart was in the work. He was, indeed, truly eloquent, in the whole import of that word, in pleading the claims of the Author and Founder of the Christian faith and hope and in disabusing the inquiring mind of all its prejudices, misapprehensions and errors. He was, too, most successful in winning souls to the allegiance of the divine Author and Founder of the Christian Institution, and in putting to silence the cavilings and objections of the modern Pharisees and Sadducees of sectariandom.

"He, indeed, possessed, upon the whole view of his character, a happy temperament. It is true, though not a verb, he had his moods and tenses, as men of genius generally have. He was both logical and rhetorical in his conceptions and utterances. He could and he did simultaneously address and interest the understanding, the conscience and the heart of his hearers, and in his happiest seasons constrained their attention and their acquiescence.

"He was, in his palmiest days, a powerful and successful advocate of the claims of the Lord Messiah on the heart and life of every one who had recognized his person and mission, and especially upon those who had, in their baptism, vowed eternal allegiance to his adorable name.

"He, without partiality or enmity in his his heart to any human being, manfully and magnanimously proclaimed the truth, the whole truth and nothing but the truth, so far as he understood it, regardless of human applause or human condemnation. He had a strong faith in the person and mission and work of the Lord Jesus Christ. He had a rich hope of the life everlasting and of the inheritance incorruptible, undefiled and unfading.

"I knew him well. I knew him long. I loved him much. We might not, indeed, agree in every opinion, nor in every point of expediency. But we never loved each other less because we did not acquiesce in every opinion and in every measure. By the eye of faith and the eye of hope, methinks I see him in Abraham's bosom."

The true place of Walter Scott in the history of the Reformation has not yet been fully recognized. It is probably true that to him more than to any other man should be ascribed the rescue of the true foundation of the church from the rubbish which had covered it during the ages of the apostasy. He it was that declared that Christ himself and not doctrines concerning him was the true foundation on which to build the church. Doubtless others insisted upon the same thing about the same time, certainly Mr. Campbell did, but no one made this such a distinct fact and emphasized it with so much persistency and power as did Walter Scott; and it is a proof of his almost prophetic foresight that this great, fundamental truth of Christianity has become practically the common ground of fellowship among all well-informed Christians, and the inspiration of all evangelistic work. If Walter Scott had never done anything more than call attention to the true foundation of the church and emphasize the proper place of baptism as he did, he surely would not have lived in vain. But in addition to this, his life was full of active service in building up the churches and in proclaiming the gospel to the unsaved. To sum up his work in a sentence: he was one of the most efficient evangelists in the best sense, of modern times.

WILLIAM HAYDEN.

On the seventh of April, 1863, the beloved William Hayden fell asleep. He was a special friend and associate laborer of Walter Scott, though he was well acquainted with and much beloved by Alexander Campbell.

In his early life Mr. Hayden was sceptical: and after his surrender of scepticism, he was still perplexed by the confusions in the Christian world. He was particularly troubled about the matter of conversion, but through the preaching of Walter Scott and others and his reading of the Millennial Harbinger, he finally saw his way to identify himself with the religious movement of which he afterwards became a distinguished light.

He was a sweet singer as well as an earnest proclaimer of the gospel.

He was greatly beloved, especially by the brotherhood of Ohio. It was in this state that most of his labors were performed, and it is probable that he contributed more to the success of the cause in that state than did any other man.

But as others have made reference to his life and character, it is only needful to say these few words while recording the fact of his death.

ALEXANDER CAMPBELL.

March 4th, 1866, will always be a memorable day in the annals of the movement of the Disciples of Christ. This was the day on which Alexander Campbell fell asleep in Jesus. He had been in failing health for sometime, but no one was quite prepared for the end when it came. His family and friends were so warmly attached to him that it was difficult to believe that he could be snatched away from them by even the ruthless hand of death. Nevertheless, he as well as others had to pass through the valley and shadow of death, though certainly he feared no evil, for he realized up to the last moment that the rod and staff of his divine Lord would be with him and comfort him. Few men have lived more consistent lives, and equally few have given stronger evidence of perfect resignation in death than did Alexander Campbell.

SOME GENERAL CHARACTERISTICS.

Has Alexander Campbell ever been understood? Has his character been properly estimated? Has his influence upon the religious world received the attention which it deserves? These questions probe to the center of an inquiry which needs to be earnestly and honestly made and answered. He has certainly been misunderstood by many of those who opposed his religious teaching. It is impossible to believe that intelligent and candid men would intentionally continue to misrepresent any fellow laborer in the great work of saving souls; and the notion, therefore, is at once rejected that his religious contemporaries designedly meant to place him in a false light before the world. This conviction is deepened and strengthened by the fact that some of his own brethren were not able to clearly apprehend his religious position, and consequently in not a few things they have misstated his teaching at several vital points.

Even at the present time there are those, both out and in the communion with which he was identified, who seem to wholly misunderstand the real significance of much for which he contended. Was his teaching, therefore, obscure? Certainly not. In the main it was as clear as a sunbeam. His literary style was somewhat Johnsonian, but his thoughts were never obscure.

What, then, was the difficulty? Evidently this: he spoke to the prejudices of the age in which he lived. His teaching frequently slapped the convictions of men right in the face. His work was eminently aggressive from start to finish, and it is not surprising, therefore, that he was not understood by his contemporaries, for there is perhaps nothing so blinding as religious prejudice; and this is precisely what he had to meet at every point of the compass toward which he turned.

It seems to me that three great general characteristics may be safely affirmed of Mr. Campbell.

(1) His sublime faith in the Lord Jesus Christ. No one who was not intimately acquainted with him could form a just conception of how sublime this faith was His whole religious system was Christocentric. Christ was with him truly the "All in All." While his intellect swept the whole circle of theological investigation, his heart always rested upon the personal Christ. This fact gave a peculiar charm to his own personality. It lent a childlike simplicity to all of his conduct. He seemed to live with one hand in the active duties which pressed upon him from every side, while the other securely grasped the hand of the personal Savior.

As already intimated, you had to be with him day by day to understand how completely he was dominated by his faith in the personal Christ.

During the months of August and September, 1862, I spent considerable time at Bethany. I had been in ill-health and had visited Bedford Springs, Pa., with the hope of recruiting my health. On my way home I made it convenient to visit the scenes of my college days and renew my personal fellowship with my revered president. He had changed considerably since I saw him. In some respects he was no longer the same man I had known; nevertheless, in the matter of his faith, that seemed to have grown rather than to have decreased. I had many long and intimate conversations with him about almost every current topic of the time. We took frequent horseback rides together along the roads leading out of Bethany, and all who are acquainted with the scenery which meets the eye at every angle around that sacred spot will agree with me that many views are simply enchanting.

In our conversations I freqnently tried to see how long I could keep him from the great object of his thoughts, viz., the Lord Jesus Christ, and in every instance I found that all roads soon led up to Him who is "the chief among the ten thousand, the one altogether lovely." On one occasion I remember that I felt sure I would succeed in diverting his attention for at least a little while. We were riding together and had reached a prominent elevation in the road where a most beautiful landscape was suddenly unfolded to view. The picture was really entrancing. I called him to halt and began to descant upon the lovely scene before us. He at once delivered one of the most eloquent tributes to the great Creator that I ever heard. I listened with almost amazement at his marvelous diction. But before giving me even an opportunity to say a word in response, he began to quote from the first chapter of Hebrews where it is declared that "God hath spoken to us in these last days by his Son," and that now "all things are upheld by the Word of his power." Then for at least ten minutes he held me perfectly spellbound as he went on to describe the matchless characteristics of the world's Redeemer.

This instance furnishes only a sample of what I heard during my brief but long-to be-remembered visit. He seemed to know very little about the things that were passing around him. The Civil War was then at its very height, and yet Mr. Campbell apparently thought little or perhaps nothing about it. He seemed to live entirely in the past and in the future—the present occupied practically none of his thoughts. With a great history behind him that enabled him to say with the Apostle Paul, he had "fought a good fight, finished his course and kept the faith," he could and did say with the same apostle, that "henceforth there was laid up for me a crown of righteousness." It was this "henceforth" that gave a peculiar sweetness to all of his thought. He simply lived in anticipation of the future life, and the special charm of that life to him consisted in the assurance that he should see Christ as he is and enjoy him forever.

This sublime faith enabled Mr. Campbell to look with almost contempt upon the ordinary things around him. It has been said that his mind, at this time, was somewhat shaken and that he was practically a mental imbecile. As to whether this was true or not, much will depend upon the point of view from which we look at the matter. The links of his mind that bound it to earth were undoubtedly broken, but this does not prove that the real mind was in any respects shattered. The mental grasp of heaven was stronger than it had ever been, and may it not have been the intention of Providence to get him ready for the sublime glories of the future by weaning him away gradually from the present life? Possibly what we call a mental break-down may, after all, sometimes mean only a firmer grasp of spiritual things. There is a vast difference between mental imbecility and that cutting loose from those things which hinder our constant communion with the spiritual world.

ACTUAL AND FORMAL REMISSION OF SINS.

A. B. JONES.

Is this distinction fanciful, or real? Is it a distinction without a difference? Let us consider this subject a little—I might say reconsider it. There is a difference between sinning against a person and sinning against a government. If I commit a trespass against my brother and offend him, it is a personal matter between him and myself. I apologize to him and make amends, and he forgives me. It is the same if this person were the governor of the state. If my conduct toward him is such as to offend him, this becomes a personal matter between him and myself. The state government takes no cognizance of it unless I have infracted the laws of the state and thus become a public offender.

When, however, I commit a deed that makes me an offender against the laws of my state or government, it is no personal affair between the governor or the President and myself, but it is a matter of law, which the court and its officials have to deal with. If I am a perjurer it is no personal offence to the governor, but an offence against my state. If I am a counterfeiter, it is nothing personal with the President of the United States, but it is a sin against my government, and it is the duty of the government to see after it.

The same difference that obtains between sinning against a person and sinning against a government obtains between the personal pardon and the governmental pardon of sin. Let this point be clearly seen. If I offer an indignity to the President of the United States and, seeing my wrong, make satisfactory reparation, he extends to me forgiveness. This is an affair between the President and myself wholly. It is a matter of personal relation and personal feeling between him and myself simply. I have personally offended him, I have personally made amends to him, and he has personally forgiven me. His official character as President is not involved. The government has nothing to do in the matter. But if I am convicted of counterfeiting the money of my country, and appeal to the President for pardon, the case is different. The President's personal feelings and personal character are not involved, but only his official character and feelings. I have sinned against the laws of my government, and he is the chief executive of that government, and has lodged in himself the pardoning power. If he pardons me, it is an official act of the chief executive toward a man who has violated the laws of his country. The relations on his part and on my part, are strictly governmental and not personal.

But now there are forms of administration where these two elements, the personal and the governmental, are strangely mixed, where they are indissolubly blended and united. This is the case in the parental government in the family. If a boy goes wrong, and covers himself with shame, it becomes both a personal and a governmental affair. In the nature of the case this is so. The deepest personal feelings known to the parental heart are stirred. The highest interests of the family government are involved. The father experiences strong feelings in both directions. In his own heart he is personally wounded, and his family government has suffered violence. Now, if that boy comes to himself, if he becomes sensible of his sin and seeks the forgiveness of his father and the family, when the father sees that the son is truly penitent, his own heart relaxes with compassion. He, in his heart, feels the impulse of forgiveness. But it is not simply a personal matter between him and his son. Family order and discipline are involved. It may be well to have the whole family understand this. As they sit together in the family circle at night, talking over the matter, all hearts overflowing, the father ends the conversation by saying, "Well, my son, it is all over now. Everything is satisfactory. Kiss your mother, and all is forgiven." The boy, with heart all broken up and with eyes suffused with tears, throws his arms around his mother's neck and kisses her with an affection which the peculiar case only could inspire. They all retire to bed.

Now that boy was actually forgiven by the father when the father saw that the son was penitent. The feeling of contrition in the heart of the boy caused the feeling of forgiveness in the heart of the father. The boy was formally forgiven when he kissed his mother in obedience to his father's request, and in obedience to his own inclination as well. It does not require a philosopher to see this distinction. It exists in the very nature of things. When that boy dropped into bed he felt an assurance of his father's forgiveness. He could not know the workings of his father's heart, and that he was forgiven. Of course, the father knew his own heart, knew that, so far as his own heart was concerned, the son was forgiven by him, personally, the moment his contrition appeared. But, in the interest of the family government, and that the son might be assured of this forgiveness, the father asked the son to kiss his mother, with the added promise that all should be over, all forgiven.

In the divine administration these two ideas, the personal and the governmental, obtain in their highest form. This double relation exists here in its most complete realization. God is the father. He is the ideal father. He knows, not only his own heart, but he knows the hearts of his erring children. Every emotion, every intention, every desire of man, the child, is known to the Heavenly Father before it finds expression in words or deeds. God does not require a man to be baptized or to pray or to commune at the Lord's table, in order that he, the Father, may know what is in man. They are appointed for the benefit of man, for the good of the child as an individual, and for the good of the family in the aggregate, in its corporate capacity. Man knows his own heart, but he does not know the heart of the infinite Father. He needs a revelation from God that he may know his will and be assured of his favor. God reigns over man by direct personal relation, and through the Church of Christ as a governmental expediency. The Father governs every child, but administers his government in the interest of the whole family. We each have our personal relations to our Father and we have relations to each other. We are influenced and affected by each other. We are now considering the question of the actual and the formal remission of sins. When a man's heart is broken with sorrow over his sins, when he is truly penitent, God knows it. The Father's heart instantly enters into sympathy with him. The love of Christ on both sides constrains. The moral conditions are met. Contrition in the child's heart as a moral cause produces compassion and forgiveness in the Father's heart as a moral effect. Each knowing his own heart and the Father knowing the child's heart as well, the personal conditions are met and the Father forgives. This is actual remission. But how is the child to know that he is forgiven? The Father could, in an audible voice, in every instance, speak to the child and assure him by words of his forgiveness. But for good reasons he does not choose this course. Yet, it is important that the child should have the assurance. The act of baptism gives this assurance: "He that believeth and is baptized shall be saved." "Repent, therefore, and be baptized in the name of Jesus Christ for the remission of your sins." The Father gives this pledge to the child, the child accepts and obeys, and receives the assurance that his sins are forgiven. This is formal remission. It is made necessary, as a means of assurance to the individual child that he has received the forgiveness of his Heavenly Father. It is necessary as a governmental measure in the Church of Christ, through which the Father governs his whole family in a corporate way. The Scriptures that set forth both this personal and governmental relation of God and men are abundant and will rapidly occur to every one on reflection.

Considerations like the foregoing led Alexander Campbell, not only in his early ministry, but throughout his life, to teach the distinction between the actual and formal remission of sins; and led Isaac Errett and others of our most distinguished thinkers and writers to always speak of baptism as the "assurance" of remission of sins which implies prior actual remission. A thing must exist before we can be assured of its existence.

Now men are differently organized. Some minds are inclined to look at the inside of things, others are inclined to look at the outside, while others still see both sides. Actual remission of sins is a psychological fact and involves psychological experience, a moral experience in spiritual natures resulting in a moral cause and a moral effect. Repentance produced by the gospel of Christ in the sinner as a cause is followed by forgiveness in the Father's heart as the effect. Formal remission is an expedient of government and a matter of law. Metaphysical minds see the former more distinctly than the latter; while the legalistic minds see the latter rather than the former. The pendulum of religious thought for centuries has vibrated between these two ideas, a spiritual and a legal conception of Christianity. Actual and formal remission of sins is only one point in the discussions and dissensions.

In debates on the subject of remission of sins by our preachers and our opponents of various denominations, each party quotes plain declarations of Scripture maintaining his position. This is done in each case with confidence and an air of triumph. Then each explains away the adverse passage to his own satisfaction, but never to the satisfaction of his opponent in debate. The ingenuity, and I might say, the disingenuity of these disputants, is sometimes very remarkable in their attempts to break the lance of his opponent and to harmonize the adverse passage with his own proof-texts. May not both be right, and yet both be wrong?

For example: Our preacher affirms that baptism is for the remission of sins. And he proves it by Acts 2:38: "Repent and be baptized, every one of you, in the name of Jesus Christ, for the remission of your sins." The case is clearly made out, the proposition is sustained by the text. His opponent holds that faith alone, by which he means the intelligent surrender of the soul through Christ to God, secures to the sinner the remission of his sins. And he proves it by Acts 10:43: "To him give all the prophets witness, that through his name whosoever believeth in him shall receive remission of sins." And his case is just as clearly made out, his proposition is sustained by his text. Our present contention is that this latter text declares the actual remission of sins; that forgiveness in the divine nature, felt and exercised personally toward the contrite sinner; while the former passage proclaims the formal remission extended to men as subjects of law, as living and associated together in the divine government.

There is an actual and a formal communion at the Lord's table as well. There is an actual and a formal communion with God in prayer. There is an actual and a formal confession of Christ. There is an actual and a formal living the Christian life before God and man.

Our God is not a king who rules simply by laws and institutions. He is "our Father who art in heaven." He seeks to establish and maintain a personal relation with every individual life. He numbers the very "hairs of our heads." His "ears are open to our prayers." He "numbers our days." He gives us "our daily bread" and "forgives us our transgressions." And we are not simply subjects under an arbitrary reign of law. We are "the children of God." Each one is a "king and a priest" before the Lord, acting and worshiping for himself. "Every one of us shall give account of himself to God." We sin not so much against the divine government as against the divine Being. "Against thee, thee only, have I sinned."

As there is actual sin in the human heart before its formal appearance in an overt act, so there is actual forgiveness in the divine heart before its formal remission in the act of baptism.

THE MINISTRY WHICH OUR AGE DEMANDS.*

It is becoming cheap to say that we are living in an age of transition. Every age has its revolutions. Some are wrought out through the slow processes of regular development, while others come as the thunder storm or the hurricane, seeming to transform everything which lies in their pathway. Our age sometimes impresses us that it is more like the latter; and yet the great changes in scientific method and in historical and literary criticism have come about in a thoroughly orderly and philosophical manner. It is only the quickness of the change in the point of view and the method of exposition that resembles the hurricane. We are living in a different age from that in which our fathers lived, however short our lives have been. The prevailing thoughts of the seventies were not the dominating principles of the eighties, and we are confident that we have quite outgrown the points of view of a decade ago.

This process is nothing new. Every age has had its peculiar problems and its dominating ideals. The church of the first century had different problems from the church of the tenth century and had to meet them in different ways. To be the redeeming and saving power of the world, the church has at all times "become all things to all men, if by any means it might save some."

The ministry is the spokesman and leader of the church in every age. It is to speak the truth which the church has inherited as its sacred deposit, and it is also to lead the church into the higher and fuller interpretation of the truth which every age must bring. The true minister of the church, therefore, must not only be in most intimate touch with the historic truths and basic facts upon which the church rests, but he must understand his own age and must be able to interpret for his age the underlying principles of Christian thought and life. This I think is what Paul meant in his exhortation to his Ephesian brethren, to "redeem the time," or as the R. V. puts it in the margin, "to buy up the opportunity."

It would be indulging in the repetition of threadbare truisms for me to emphasize the demand which our age is making for a trained and cultured ministry. The church will no longer support men who have not availed themselves of the opportunities so abundantly afforded by schools and colleges, however it may revere the names of those who, deprived of these opportunities, wrought so faithfully in the past under such extreme difficulties. Nor is it worth my while more than to repeat that the ministers of the day must be men among men, acquainted with human nature, and able to meet men upon their own plane. Neither shall I stop to emphasize the need of a knowledge of the principles of science, of the history of philosophy and of national development, of the great religious systems which recent studies in comparative religions have made familiar to the world. It is simply a matter of course that the ministry of to-day must be up to date. There is no excuse for allowing the higher critic to date one of our sermons in the eighteenth century or the early part of the nineteenth, solely on the grounds of the overwhelming internal evidence. Our churches are sending their missionaries to the uttermost parts of the earth, but it is not wonderful that educated Hindus laugh at them and ridicule us because neither we nor our representatives have ever heard of the Brahma Somadj and the work it has done. Of course Christianity is not and cannot be propagated by meeting all the subtleties of Oriental philosophies; but the Christian who shows an ignorance of these philosophies, and an indifference to the soul-strivings which they represent, can never reach the men who shape the thought of India. It was when Paul entered the school of Tyrannus as professor of Christian doctrine and practice that Demetrius began to see that his business was in danger, and it was through Paul's influence over educated men who came to that school, that he was able to persuade and turn away much people. And so in our own land the ministry must be sensitive to every influence which is coming from the ends of the earth and from the remotest ages of the past by which men's views, ideas and beliefs are being greatly modified to-day.

But it is not about these things that I have decided to speak to-day. It is another task that I have set myself. I believe that the ministry which this age demands is a universal ministry, of no particular age, and yet of all ages. We have on our dining tables our breakfast foods and a multitude of modern mixtures. Our food is cooked by steam, or shipped ready for the tables from the ends of the earth, and it has come to be a sign of bad breeding to touch our food with our fingers. But we live on flesh and cereals, on vegetables and fruits, as our ancestors have done from the earliest times. And after all, the important thing for the parent to do is to see that his child has good food and enough of it, incidentally teaching him the table manners of his day. So it seems to me the ministry of to-day needs to be profoundly impressed with the absolute necessity of preaching a universal gospel, though it is of course presented according to the accepted customs.

1. First of all, therefore, it seems to me important to emphasize that the age demands a ministry above any particular school of criticism. I say above, for it certainly should not be below it, ignorant of it, indifferent to it. Many to-day so fear those who are called Higher Critics and the work which they are doing, that these cautious ones are preaching as of the most vital importance a gospel of vituperative warnings, and their jeremiads sometimes must make the Lord himself tremble for the stability of his own cause. On the other hand, one finds a class of ministers who seem to think their special calling is to enlighten the dear people upon the important critical results of the German school, and to prove that Prof. Briggs, because he was loyal to truth, was, therefore, not a heretic; while the Presbyterian Church has proven itself a back number and a narrow sect, even though it still retains the allegiance of a large number of the brainiest and most conscientious men of the times. Now I am convinced that while the age is excited by this tempestuous uproar on each side, and thinks itself highly entertained by the thunderous bellowings, yet it is becoming wearied with its long-drawn-out effusions, and is asking if the ministry has not something more satisfying to offer the world as it passes constantly on through its domestic, social and national tragedies.

2. And in the second place, I am convinced that the age is demanding a ministry above any particular school of theology or sect of religion. We are aggrieved sometimes at the tenacity with which people cling to their denominational traditions and refuse to enter into that completer and higher unity of Christ's disciples, of which we have had such a happy vision and which we believe to be the ideal of Christ himself for his people. And yet the day has gone by when these same people will approve a sectarian emphasis by their minister upon their denominational standards, and many will even resent it. No denomination has an absolute and all-inclusive interpretation of Christian truth, and every denomination has been emphasizing some principle which was of great importance for the world. While we believe that our plea has gone low enough down to reach the bedrock upon which the church in its doctrine and life is built, yet the most zealous advocate of that plea could hardly affirm that we have yet been able to build upon this foundation so broadly that all error has been excluded from us and all religious truth accepted by us. The church to-day requires a ministry bold enough to reject all error whenever found, and to include all truth from whatever source discovered.

This is no small undertaking for us who are coming into the ministry of the church to-day. For on the one hand there is danger that we underestimate the value of the truth which seemed so precious to our fathers, of whose struggles we are receiving the beneficent fruitage. This would be base unworthiness. When the wheat is ripe we take it from the ground and separate it from the straw. But he who would make light of the soil, and of the farmer who toiled to till it, and of the stalk which received the rain and withstood the storms and bore the elements from the soil to make the ripened grain, would not only be ungrateful, but he would be base and false. On the other hand, he who, out of respect for the soil and the farmer and the stalk, should demand that the grain be not removed and separated, and planted again to produce more fruit, would be even more blind, and his incapacity would be his only excuse from the charge of error and folly. So the ministry of to-day must take the truth which it has received from the sowing and toiling and reaping of the fathers, and plant it in the newly prepared soil of the present generation, and cultivate it there with all the machinery which modern genius has been able to invent. But we must be sure that the seed we plant is the truth, itself greater than any party of the past or the present which has tried to realize it, and as ancient and eternal as God himself.

3. And this leads me to say, in the third place, that the age demands, as it seems to me scarcely another age has demanded, a ministry which has been able to grasp and is able to interpret the eternal verities. Moses may or may not have written the whole of the Pentateuch, and the people are very much interested, in a newspaper way, in the discussion of the evidence both for and against its genuineness, but what their hearts are hungering for is to know whether or not there is a God who hears the cry of his people, as Jehovah is said to have heard Israel. My brethren in the ministry of the gospel of Jesus Christ, this age is in danger of starving for want of the knowledge of God, while his servants are in hot debate about the means by which that knowledge is transported. Surely, the all-important thing is to get the truth to them in as wholesome form as possible, and as quickly and directly as lies in our power. To attain a personal knowledge of God is not only medicine for diseased souls; it is also food for growing character. This food is of itself the same in all ages; though it may be served under the new label of science, or through the old medium of the words of Scripture. What we must be sure of is that the people are becoming convinced of the existence and presence of God. Whether we deliver learned philosophical discourses, or weave a most ingenious fabric of Scripture texts—neither of these is of the slightest importance unless by our efforts God is revealed to his people. Count that effort your greatest failure when men praise your subtle arguments or your eloquent words or your combativeness. Count that your real success when men say to you that they have been brought very near to God. To be able thus to convince men that "God is, and that he is a rewarder of them who diligently seek him," one must not only believe this proposition as an abstract truth, but it must be a fact of his own experience. John said, "That which we have heard, that which we have seen with our eyes, that which we beheld, and our hands handled concerning the Word of life, that declare we unto you also, that ye also may have fellowship with us." This is ever the method of the saving ministry. No theological sprig, fresh from the seminary, can long satisfy with his parrot repetitions, or his sensationalism, whether he be conservative or radical. The true minister can help the doubter because he has reached the sure foundations of faith through his dark and determined struggle with doubt. He can bring the troubled heart to find its rest in God because he himself has there realized "a peace which passeth understanding." He can convince the world of the Fatherhood of God, and of his majestic sovereignty, not because he has been taught these things in the creeds, but because they have become the realities of his personal experience.

The question is often asked, What is the attitude of the pulpit to the great moral, social and national problems which are to-day agitating the world. I shall say nothing of these in detail; but I do believe that the ministry of to-day should emphasize the fact of God's presence in the processes of history, the fact that whether we will or not he reigns in our social relations, to reward us if we are true to him and to each other; to recompense with tribulation and death if we ignore his eternal laws; should emphasize the fact that we shall all stand before his judgment seat to render account for the deeds done in the body, whether they be good or whether they be evil. It is just as true as it ever was that God is not mocked, and whatsoever we sow, that shall we also reap. A multitude of people do not believe this to-day, and it must be emphasized with all the persuasive power of logic and with all the authority of God's voice. The ministry which this age needs is one which is so filled with the assurance that God reigns, and is so certain that its message is from him, that its every utterance shall declare God's presence, and its every promise shall fill men with hope.

(CONCLUDED NEXT WEEK.)

Our Budget.

—Overcome evil with good.

—Be not among winebibbers.

—Do not become weary in well doing.

—Overcome the world with a living faith in God.

—In proportion as your heart is warmed by the Son of God you will have strength to bear the exterior heat of God's sun.

—The interior heat of the Sun of Righteousness in a prayer-meeting, a Bible-school or a church is a wonderful antidote to the depressing effects of the exterior heat of the sun of the universe.

—The cooling breeze of negligence often fans the fires of lust and leads to the conflagation of all holy aspirations in the soul. Fight the fires of temptation with the fire of God's love.

—The Missionary Tidings has added to its contributing editors the name of Mrs. C. N. Pearre. The July number of the Tidings, by the way, is an exceptionally good one. It is loaded to the guards with missionaay news.

—The three churches of Memphis, Tenn., have entered into an organization to be known as the Memphis Christian Union for evangelistic fellowship and mission work. In order to more effective work in this way certain rules have been adopted, but these in no way interfere with the faith of the churches. Of all the instances of the centralization of power in the land we think that the churches have the better excuse. Their work cannot be done single handed. The time has come when our city congregations must join their forces against the enemy, and we are glad to see Memphis falling into line for greater service for the Master.

—D. L. Moody has undertaken to reach the English-speaking people of India by religious books. He has already ordered 5,000 books forwarded to Bombay for distribution and says that 100,000 could be used. A friend of the enterprise in Chicago has offered to pay the freight on all books for this purpose from Chicago to Bombay. The books sent are such as are selected by D. L. Moody, or as would meet his approval, "comprising those best calculated to reach people and lead them to true and consistent Christian lives." Dr. Moody asks for contributions from all who have faith in this enterprise to assist in the work. Whether the contribution be two cents or $100 it will be thankfully received and acknowledged. All contributions should be sent to him at East Northfield, Mass. The wisdom of this experiment needs no argument. Such books well scattered in India will have an immense and lasting power for good. They will work as leaven in the meal.

—The Bethany Christian Endeavor Bulletin says that the new national superintendent of Christian Endeavor among the Disciples of Christ, John E. Pounds, will make no change whatever in the management of the the Bethany Christian Endeavor Reading Courses. The Reading Courses are in articulation with all our interests and the management has the right to expect the hearty co-operation of the entire brotherhood. The purpose of the management to prepare a handbook on the transition of the church from apostolic to post-apostolic thought, the influence of Greek customs and philosophy, the influence of Roman civilization in the development of dogmatic theology and ecclesiastical polity, the effect of the Lutheran and other reformations we think a most happy suggestion and one which we hope will be carried into reality. We think such a line of reading most important for our young people of the church to-day and believe that it will awaken a greater interest in church history, church life and church work.

—The CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST pays its respects to the great Christian Endeavor Convention, to assemble in Detroit this week, by presenting the picture of the founder of the Christian Endeavor movement on our first page. The picture is a familiar one and his name a household word, even in other lands, but the Christian world will not soon tire of either. The name Francis E. Clark is now indellibly written in the religious history of the world. He is the founder of a movement that has done more to break down religious bigotry and increase Christian fellowship in the religious world, than any other known factor of this century, at least, in the same amount of time. The Christian Endeavor movement has largely saved the young people of the churches from a surrender of their faith in Christ, increased their religious activities and greatly strengthened the cause of missions, both home and foreign. It has itself been a missionary society, carrying the name of Jesus into hearts at home and in foreign lands, and its work is not yet done. The Christian Endeavor movement has only entered its special field, and its greatest work is yet to be done.

—Archbishop Ireland's effort at dodging the effect of the Pope's encyclical letter condemning certain "Americanisms" in the Catholic Church by saying that there are "different kinds of Americanisms," attributing one class to France, has called down the ire of the orthodox Catholics of that country upon his head. The Catholics of European countries thus seem to have clearly understood the Pope's letter to be a condemnation of Archbishop Ireland's liberalistic utterances looking toward the modification of certain Catholic doctrines in order to better harmonize with American customs and ideas. Whereas, Archbishop Ireland has been trying to explain to his American brethren that it was certain tendencies of the church in France that the Pope was striving to counteract. Evidently the Archbishop has undertaken a difficult and dangerous task.

—One of the Chicago dailies says that the three Rockefeller brothers are easily the richest men in America, placing their united wealth at $450,000,000, and their annual income at from twenty to thirty million dollars. Their most difficult task, it is said, is to know where to put their money. Surely hath the god of this world blinded their eyes if they cannot see wise and ample opportunities for the use of their income, to say nothing of their wealth. Who can envy the position of a man holding God's millions in his hand, yet blind to wants of his land?

—The Kinsman, a vigorous and reliable anti-Mormon journal, printed at Salt Lake City, Utah, in its June edition makes sad havoc of the Mormon claims to irresponsibility for the existence of the saloon or its equivelant in Utah. The Kinsman even presents the picture of a Utah liquor store as it existed before the arrival of the "Gentiles." It also contains abundant documentary evidence against their claim and in refutation of their charge that the "Gentiles" are responsible for the liquor traffic in Utah. The Kinsman makes interesting reading for any community troubled with Mormon missionaries.

—We have not been in a hurry to comment on the action of the trustees of Drake University in severing the connection of Prof. Morgan with that institution. We have preferred to wait until we were in possession of all the essential facts in the case. We have not at all been in sympathy with the newspaper war on Prof. Morgan. Such a course is injurious alike to the institution and to the individual whose orthodoxy is assailed. It is not a brotherly or orderly method of procedure. We had feared that it was the newspaper attack on Prof. Morgan that had hastened the action of the trustees, but Chancellor Craig assures us that such was not the case. It seems that Prof. Morgan's teaching had created such protest in his classes and among the students that it seemed best to the authorities of the institution that his connection with it should cease. We regret that such is the case. We cannot but believe that Prof. Morgan is essentially sound in his faith in Christ and the divine revelation of God in Him. He has probably erred in method, and possibly has been led to make certain utterances on themes outside the lines of his study which have been unjust to himself and untrue to the facts. He is not a man to profess more than he believes. One who is given to investigating every subject for himself before professing the orthodox belief concerning it, must, at Prof. Morgan's age, be unprepared to make a deliverance on many phases of Christian truth. We have no doubt, whatever may be the wisdom of the action of Drake's trustees, that time will show that Prof. Morgan has a positive message to deliver concerning the things that are vital and fundamental in Christian faith and life.

—The spasmodic efforts at saloon closing on Sundays which has been of late in different parts of the United States may serve to remind saloonkeepers, brewers and others of that tribe that their enemies are not all dead yet, but can hardly secure any permanent results in the way of destroying their power or curtailing their influence. Not until we get solid laws against the saloon and their rigid enforcement can we expect to rescue the Lord's day from under their unhallowed feet. Even when good laws are enacted they will not be continuously enforced, but by the vigilance of temperance people and a strong temperance sentiment, in any given city, county or nation. The eyes of the good people of the land are yet unopened to the enormity of the crime of these drunkard factories in their midst or they would not tolerate them for a day. They are outlaws.

—Theodore Cuyler says that the revival of religion that we need is a revival which keeps God's commandments; which tells the truth and sticks to its promises; which pays twenty shillings to the pound; which cares more for a good character than a fine coat; which votes at the ballot-box in the same direction that it prays; which denies ungodly lusts, and which can be trusted in every stress of temptation. A revival which will sweeten our homes, and chasten our press, and purify our poltics, and cleanse our business and commerce from roguery and rottenness, would be a boon from heaven.

—Here is a subscriber who does not believe in "theologians." He says: "I wish to say, Godspeed to you in that liberty wherewith Christ has most manifestly made you free. There are so many theologians, indeed, a superfluity of them. You do well to speak kindly of the well-meaning Brother ———, but he is a theologian. He used to be a preacher of the great gospel of Christ, but alas! Time has shrunk her iron jacket around him as they do in making all big gun, and he is now a theologian. Beware, my beloved brother, of theologians! Knowing that these theologians have been biting at your heels, I felt a great desire in my heart to say to you, 'Go on, brother, in the love of Christ.' Why Cerberus is ranging the fields of light where you walk with Jesus and the free, is a puzzle. Let Cerberus go back and still guard the gates of darkness. That is the place appropriate for Cerberus, the theologian. Let us get up out of the fogs of the valley on to the high plateau with Jesus, where the sunshine of an immortal and world-saving power, which is love, warms human hearts into life, and is able to make that life we now only endure, a thing of joy, and gives us the only assurance we have of the hereafter." Our brother must not be too hard on theologians. It is after all only a certain type of theologian that he is opposed to. But we will do well to heed his exhortation to "get up out of the fogs of the valley on to the high plateau with Jesus."

—E. Bradshaw has paraphrased a familar song so as to express some of the tendencies of the times. The song is published in the People's Press and the first verse runs as follows:

Let us gather up the sunbeams
Lying all around our path,
Get a trust on wheat and roses,
Give the poor the thorns and chaff.
Let us find our chiefest pleasure
Hoarding bounties of to-day,
So the poor will have scant measure
And two prices have to pay.

—From cards received, we learn that Mr. Wm. Newton Briney was married on June 21st, to Miss Claudia Cantrill, of Newtown, Kentucky. Our best wishes and congratulations to the happy pair.

—The Union Gospel News says that if there were only one Christian in the world to-day, and he should work a whole year to get another, and those two should toil another year and at the end of the second year be able to report two more, and the work continue in that proportion, in thirty-three years every person in the world would be reached!

—We have received from Edward M. Shepard a book of 248 pages, being a report of the gelogical survey of Green County, of the state of Missouri. Barring its technical features we find much that is interesting and are under obligations to the author for his kindness. The book is published by the Tribune Printing Co., Jefferson City, Mo.

—Rev. John Snyder, for 26 years the pastor of the Church of the Messiah, this city, recently closed his pastorate there and the church was closed for the summer. A new pastor to succeed Dr. Snyder will not be chosen untill fall. Dr. Snyder was a man of culture, literary attainments and pulpit ability and was popular with his people, but his Unitarian views kept him somewhat apart from the other ministers of the city.

—No theory about the inspiration of the Bible, the personality of the Devil or the origin of moral evil can remove the obligrations of the Christian, the church or the preacher of the gospel. The nature and consequences of moral evil in the affairs of men are too conspicuous to admit of indifference, and the use of the Bible in overcming evil is too well established to even admit of the thought of a better remedy. All that criticism, high or low, has said or done, or can say or do, has not and will not remove the necessity of moral restraint, of the Bible, and of the church. If any have ceased their church activities for any of the causes named, expecting discoveries to remove the necessity of Christan living, let them at once return to their duties. Disappointment and despair are the only rewards that await those who have thrown off their church obligations under the deception that they are about to be proven a useless burden. No one could commit a more grievous blunder or fearful mistake than to so do. Eternal war with evil is one of the eternal laws of God and Christianity is the science of overcoming evil.

—It is reported that the Pope recently descended by night into the crypt of St. Peter privately and prayed for a long time on the tomb of the apostles, and yet it is not reported that anything of a miraculous nature happened. If there be any virtue in sacred relics, surely so close an approach to the ashes of the two greatest apostles ought to give some sign of their sacredness and power at least to so eminent a personage as the head of the Roman Catholic Church.

—Dr. E. G. Mullins, of the Newton Center Baptist Church, Boston, Mass., has been elected successor to Dr. Whitsitt in the presidency of the Southern Baptist Theological Seminary at Louisville, Ky. Although born and educated in Texas, Dr. Mullins was not the choice of the anti-Whitsitt faction of the trustees. Dr. Mullins is a young man, 42 years of age, well married, and has filled the pulpit of the Baptist Church in Harrodsburg, Ky., Baltimore, Md., Richmond, Va., and Boston, Mass. It is thought that the selection of Dr. Mullins will meet with almost universal favor in local Baptist circles and thus heal a threatening breach in Baptist ranks over the Whitsitt controversy.

—Dr. B. B. Tyler, of our editorial staff, was present at the Endeavor convention at Seattle, Wash., June 22-25, and greatly delighted the large audiences that greeted him, with his addresses and sermons. As stated last week, Dr. Tyler had been unwell and left his people at Colorado Springs, Colorado, for a short rest, and this is how he rested. At the consecration service, which he styles the climax of the convention, fifteen persons signed cards at the close of his evangelistic address, agreeing to confess Christ in their churches and to unite with God's people without delay. Our preachers and people were especially delighted with Dr. Tyler's visit and addresses. He says that the Disciples now meet with the Methodist Protestant people in their house of worship.

—A brother who is a great admirer of the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST, in the main, says, however, the paper "is all wrong on the Philippine war, indeed, on any war, and but for the brave and Christlike things it keeps saying, I never intended to read it any more. How a follower of Jesus can give countenance to any war, passes my comprehension."

Neither do we understand how any Christian can give countenance to smallpox. We are opposed to smallpox and to yellow fever; so much so that when they attack us we are in favor of putting them down by every known means of warfare. We are opposed to war, but sometimes war is the only way to peace. The man who believes that no war is righteous must throw away a large part of the Bible, and reject the Declaration of Independence, which involves war, as the men who signed it well knew. We are glad, however, that this correspondent has the good sense not to discontinue the paper because it contains some things he does not approve, while it contains so much that he does heartily approve.

—In a "Sermon on Sermons" in the Preachers' Helper for June, W. J. Lhamon, Allegheny, Pa., says:

A man does not need to be prosy or antiquated in order to be orthodox and substantial. Because a church is crowded you must not judge a man for a sensationalist merely; nor if there are empty pews must you set him down for a prosy fogy. Other influences than the man in the pulpit may be at work, one way or the other, to draw or to drive. If the pew is not a drawing card, the pulpit cannot well be. You think the preacher makes the sermon altogether: no, the church makes both the preacher and the sermon largely. Given—a church with a thousand members, all alive; all at work; all harmonious; a good church building; good music; he must be a poor preacher indeed who cannot be popular there. But given—a feeble membership; comparatively unknown; a church just going through the stages of its development; no other congregation of the same faith in the community from which to draw support; a church house unsightly and uncomfortable; throw in a chronic grumbler or two—and he must be a remarkable preacher who can be popular there.

—Will you please inform me how to derive some benefit from the late Congress of our people in your city? Will the discussions on the various subjects on the program be put in some form that the brethren and sisters who cannot attend may obtain them, and how?

WM. CAMPBELL.
419 West 9th St., Wichita, Kan.

It is the purpose of the Christian Publishing Company, with the consent of the committee having in charge the addresses at the late Congress, to publish them in a small volume as early as possible, in order to meet the demand indicated in the above request. We believe there are a large number of our members throughout the country who would be glad to read the carefully prepared addresses delivered at the late Congress. It is hoped that the volume may be ready by the early autumn.

—Prof. Jas. H. Hyslop's announcement of faith in the reality of communication from departed spirits through the agency of a medium, as set forth by him in the New Work, will probably awaken renewed interest in spiritistic phenomena. Prof. Hyslop's convictions came chiefly from the productions of Mrs. Piper, of Boston, some of which, at least, he thinks quite unaccountable except on the theory of actual communication with intellectual entities in the invisible world. That there is a large per cent. of fraudulent phenomena under the head of Spiritism he does not question, but claims that there are phenomena that cannot be accounted for under the head of science or by scientific methods. On the inability of telepathy to account for these things Prof. Hyslop says:

When, therefore, the issue in the problem of immortality comes to be clearly defined, it demands a choice between two theories of the source of supernormal phenomena which bring into very bold relief the conflict between the finite capacities that all experience has hitherto attributed to the human mind and the infinite power and contradictions involved in the hypothesis of telepathy, advanced to impair the significance of the phenomena that so successfully imitate and satisfy the demands of scientific method. This theory may be the one that science will force us to accept; but, to say nothing of the devilish genius, the infinite fabricating and histrionic power, that has to be assumed for secondary personality, if we finally resort to telepathy for an escape from the belief in immortality, we may well ask whether the strain upon that hypothesis is not so great as to justify some tolerance for Spiritism, especially if the idea of immortality has any utility for removing difficulties in our contemplation of the laws of nature and in realizing ideals and aspirations which a moral consciousness imposes upon the human race.

If it could be demonstrated beyond the possibility of a doubt that a message had ever been communicated to man from a spirit in the other world, or that a departed spirit had ever been seen by human eyes the fact would amount to a mathematical demonstration of the "immortality of the soul." But the trouble is that it is as difficult to demonstrate the authenticity or actuality of the message or the spirit-visitor as of the alleged immortality of the soul. But happily we are not without a substantial demonstration of that fact—the resurrection of Jesus Christ from the dead—and of substantial proof of the reality of the demonstration, which after all is the clearer and surer foundation for belief in the continuity of the human spirit as an intellectual unit, after it leaves its fleshly tabernacle. Belief in immortality is not suffering for want of a better demonstration than that which it has in the resurrection of Christ.

—The following not at all surpising bit of information is from the Catholic News:

The Lazarist Fathers of St. John's College and Seminary in Brooklyn have secured a photographic reproduction of the winding-sheet in which, it is said, the body of the Savior was placed after being taken down from the cross, and it will soon be hung in the Chapel of the Holy Agony, attached to the college. The photograph is a gift to the Lazarist Fathers from Bishop Theil, of Costa Rico, who stopped with them for two weeks while on his way to Rome. The winding-sheet is deposited in a church in the city of Turin, and the relic has been exposed only six times during the present century. Two plates were used in photographing the relic during its exposure last year, and one of them was given to the Pope. It was from this that the copy which has been forwarded to Brooklyn was taken. In the relic itself the outlines of the Savior's body are faintly discerned and they are said to have been reproduced in the photograph.

What about the napkin that was about his head and the spices in which his body was embalmed? But it is not too late for the napkin to turn up yet in the vaults of some old church, and no doubt when found it will have the first and only authenticated picture of Christ's face on it. Why not? Why, even the spices used in his embalming may yet be found, and found to have lost none of their fragrance! Who knows? The guardian care of the Roman Catholic Church over the relics of Christ is something amazing.

—The following tests of a good sermon by Bishop Clark, of Rhode Island, appeared in the June number of the Preacher's Helper and may be of use to some of our preachers:

In the preparation of your sermons, it may be well for you to ask some such questions as these:

For what reason have I selected the subject of my present discourse?

Is it likely to meet the spiritual wants of my congregation?

Will it arrest any of my communicants who are in danger of turning away from Christ?

Will it be of service in rescuing those who are involved in the vanities and follies of the world?

Is there anything in this discourse which will tend to quicken the conscience of those who are dead in trespasses and sins?

Have I said anything indicating the way of salvation to such as are asking, "What shall I do to be saved?"

Have I spoken any words of warning to those who once promised allegiance to Christ, and, since that time, have turned their backs upon the Savior?

Have I said anything to comfort the afflicted and broken-hearted, to relieve and cheer such as feel themselves deserted of God, to bring the weary and heavy laden to their Savior?

Have I said anything for my own glory—anything for the purpose of securing honor for myself?

—EDITOR CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST:—When I came across your criticism on The Outlook ("Unity of Faith") I read no farther until I went to my near neighbor and read it to him, and you will never know how much good it has done me if I don't tell you. So this is my apology for intruding myself upon your precious time. I have been a Christian over 70 years, and over 30 years of that time I have been talking, praying and pleadlng for unity of Christians, not in the letter, but in spirit, and this is the first time I have seen, in print, anything that came so near meeting my views. Therefore, my heart greatly rejoiceth, and if I ever come to St. Louis I want to give you the righthand of fellowship. Now, don't be frightened; I was born, bred and have always been known as a Congregationalist.

June Meeting in Auburn.

The "June meeting" of the Churches of Christ in Central New York convened in Auburn, June 16-18. This is a kind of annual love-feast to our people. It is a relief to the lonesome existence of us all, which comes by reason of our fewness in number. Our genial and well-known pastor at Auburn, D. H. Patterson, managed affairs and was ably assisted by his people whose hospitality was all that could be desired. Following are the churches and preachers represented: Joseph Tisdall, of Tully; A. M. Hurd, Pompey; C. C. Crawford, Elmira; Bro. Bloom, of Cato; Dunham, of Vorea; Cost, of Waterloo; E. J. Butler, of Throopsville; E. Richard Edwards, of Syracuse; D. H. Patterson and A. B. Chamberlin, of Auburn. Brewerton and South Butler were also represented, Bro. Chamberlin at present supplying the latter point.

Our state evangelist, J. M. Morris, was present with his map of campaign on the wall and another on his heart and tongue.

The interests of the C. W. B. M. were represented by our gifted sister, Mrs. Jennie Encell, state secretary.

A stirring program of papers and addresses was given by the ladies of the various auxiliaries on the afternoon of June 17, and a thoughtful address by Sister Encell in the evening.

Lord's day afternoon we observed the Lord's Supper. This service was conducted with dignity, grace and sympathy and in charge of Bro. A. B. Chamberlin.

The sermons and addresses were every one of them tributes to Christ.

C. C. Crawford had as his topic, "Christian Endeavor and Evangelism." Opportunity and responsibility for personal work were its keynotes.

Bro. Joseph Tisdall had an inspiring discourse on Jesus Christ as the one who is our Judge in the final assize.

Bro. Bloom, of Cnto, preached on the theme of the "Lion of the Tribe of Judah," and gave us a careful review of the development of that thought through Jewish history.

E. Richard Edwards, of Syracuse, closed the convention with a sermon on the "Call of Christ a Test of Heroism."

Our fields here present many difficulties, but our season of fellowship helps us meet them bravely. Our faith is strong, for our struggles develop it.

By and by we hope to be present at the greatest of all conventions when God calls us all into his presence, and we look through tears of joy and finished conflict on the face of Him we loved and followed.

E. RICHARD EDWARDS.

PERSONAL MENTION.

Frederick F. Wyatt has accepted a call to preach for the church at Panora, Iowa, until Jan. 1, 1900.

J. W. Lowber has been re-elected president of the Austin Ministerial Association. The Austin Statesman now reports his sermons every week.

C. J. F. Musgrove has resigned as pastor at Ashland Ill., and will sail for London, July 12th. His family will remain in Detroit, Mich., until his return in September.

A. R. Hunt, pastor of the church at Tarkio, Mo., has been retained for another year. During the last year the church gave $80 to missions, $45 to Church Extension, $50 to repairs and added 65 names to its membership.

If any reader knows whether Frank P. Brown, a Christian preacher who was located at Little Rock, Ark., a number of yerrs ago, is alive, will he please send information to John Bright, Valley St., Hannibal, Mo.?

R. E. L. Prunty, pastor of the church in Unionville, Mo., writes that 1,000 copies of his tract recently mentioned in this paper have been sold. Bro. Prunty is devoting every penny of the money on the sale of his tract to payment of the debt on their church property.

The baccalaureate sermon for the graduating class of Castleton (Vt.) Normal School was preached by W. W. Witmer, pastor of the Church of Christ, West Rupert, Vt., in the Congregational Church, Castleton, Vt., Tuesday, June 25.

Geo. R. Stainer, who has been preaching for one of the churchs in Little Rock, Ark., will have his headquarters at 3447 West Chestnut Street, this city, for awhile. He called at this office last week and reports favorably of the work in Little Rock.

G. W. Muckley called at this office last week. He is preparing for the Church Extension offering in September. He expects the best report at the Jubilee Convention for Church Extention in its history. His address after July 1st, for the hot season, will be at Independence, Pa.

J. M. Kersey has been selected as the new president of Bethany College. Brother Kersey is knwn as a successful preacher and lecturer, and it is believed possesses good administrative ability. He is proceeding in a quiet way to put Bethany on its feet, and we are sure all our readers will join with us in the wish that he may be eminently successful.

C. M. Hughes, of Lexington, Ky., is prepared to assist, as singing evangelist, wherever such services are needed. Can furnish song books for the meeting. J. V. Updike and Prof. C. M. Hughes, singing evangelist, will begin a tabernacle meeting in Lexington, Ky., the first Sunday in September. This is the home of Bro. Hughes and he is planning the meeting. The five churches of the city will cooperate in the meeting.

POLYCHROMISM GONE MAD.

The Higher Critics have done much good service. But certain of the reckless extremists amongst them seem determined to bring the same derision on the whole school as was attached to evolution by Haeckel with his "bathybius" and is now being inflicted on the hereditary theory by Max Nordau. Destructionism is the bane of the advanced critics. They are not content to leave men like Driver and Sayce, with their massive learning and competent acquirements, to pursue their investigations and to fight out amongst themselves their inferences. Instead of this we are treated to such appalling monuments of literary futility as the latest volume of the Polychrome Bible. This has just been issued from the English press by James Clarke and Co., the famous publishers of the Christian World, one of the most interesting of weeklies appearing in this country. I do not admire, however, the habit of certain firms of employing a reviewer to write an egregious puff of their own publications in the columns of their own journals. The Christian World publishers cannot be accused of this vicious habit. But for once Messrs. Clarke have violated their own rule, for in the Christian World appears a very long and flattering review of this new book. The volume is a translation of the German original. To show what it is I give the full title: "The Polychrome Bible. Edited by Paul Haupt. The book of Joshua. A new English Translation. Printed in Colors, Exhibiting the Composite Structure of the Book, with Explanatory Notes and Pictorial Illustrations. By W. H. Bennett, M. A., Professor of Old Testament Languages and Literature. Haskney and New Colleges, London." Now, what is the real object of this wonderful specimen of variegated, piebald religious literature? It is simply to show that in the book of Joshua there is scarcely anything that is worth regarding as historical. The reviewer, Mr. Buchanan Gray, who simply sucks in with avidity the contents of the whole of the volume, says in his last section: "Briefly described, then, the Book of Joshua is an historical romance. As a history, of the conquest of Canaan it is, save for the few small fragments referred to (in the Polychrome volume) valueless; on the other hand, as a source of information with regard to the religious outlook and ideals of the Jews in exile and afterwards it has a high value. . . . . We lose much of the religious value of the book of Joshua while we treat it as history, and indeed, until we treat it as what it is—romance." Here, then, we have one more Bible novelette. A few years ago Dean Farrar turned destructionist and showed to his own satisfaction that the book of Daniel was a lovely gem of Maceabean fiction. Soon we shall have to arrange the different books of the Bible on our shelves with the fictions of Sir Walter Scott, Mrs. Beecher Stowe and Charles Dickens, seeing that one after another of the sixty-six books of the Old Testament are being demonstrated to belong to the category of brilliant didatic imaginary literature. I, for one, have not the slightest wish to regard the books of Daniel and Joshua as real unless they are so. If they are fictitious let us know it, and we shall thank the learned scholars who prove to us exactly the real character of any of the Bible treatises. But let us see some solid reasons for all the conclusions which we are asked to accept. I just ask people of dispassionate minds why in the name of common sense, which seems hardly so common as it once was, we should hastily agree that the narratives in Joshua are only tissues of "pious imaginations," on the part of romancers who lived in Babylon in exile and needed to amuse themselves; when we can find in the crtticism put before us, nothing to convince us excepting a curious medley of rainbow tints and a lot more of the now familiar jargon of imposing algebraic looking capital letters, which the critics are in the habit of chopping and changing according to the ways of their own "pious imaginations." What one critic puts down to J another insists on ascribing to E. Then another compromises by attributing it to JE. Professor Bennett in this volume uses no less than eight different colors to give his notions as to the way in which Joshua was hashed up from all sorts of sources. But the reader who wants definite or even plausible proof will have to go on a long time whistling for it. I will predict what will be the fate of this book. It will share the oblivion which has befallen Dean Farrar's criticism of Daniel.

THE DISAPPOINTED VAMPIRES.

I rejoice to record the ignominious defeat of a certain section of Englishmen of whom the great majority of the nation has always been deeply ashamed. I refer to the Jingoes, as they are called. The word jingo had its origin in a music hall, a very proper sort of place for its genesis. Our British Jingoes are the swashbucklers, the fireeaters, the bloodthirsty challengers of all creation, the people who are ever shouting that Britannia rules the waves and that Britons never shall be slaves. Most of them are abject slaves to the pipe and pot. They are with few exceptions bitter and bigoted Tories. They are to be found in all classes, but in much larger numbers amongst the upper idle classes than in the industrious middle and lower ranks of our citizenship. These are the noisy, beefy, beery folk who call the rest of us, in condign contempt, "Little Englanders." They are all thirsty at all times for war, and not a few of our wars have been stirred by them. But most of them, like poor Artemus Ward, would not hesitate to sacrifice all their mother-in-law's relations for the good of their country rather than expose a hair of their own heads to any risk. These are the people who tried frantically to drive this country into conflict with the Northern states. They espoused the cause of the slaveholding South, and they certainly would like themselves to be slaveholders. When France flew at Germany they wanted to force this country to leap into the war on the side of France. And now they have been creating an actual scare, happily soon over, but assiduously spreading rumors that war had been resolved on by our government against the handful of brave and liberty-loving Boers of the Transvaal, whose independence Britain is bound by treaty both to respect and to support. There is in this section of our population a fierce thirst for revenge on any people who are supposed to think themselves capable of "licking" England. As the Boers did at Majuba Hill defeat a small detachment of British troops, which was no very wonderful feat, it is the doctrine of the Jingoes that England is bound to "wipe out Majuba." Mr. Gladstone, who was then in power, considered that it would be sheer blood-guiltiness, to use his own phrase, to continue the war merely for the sake of taking vengeance on the little people who were as brave as ourselves, but were only a tiny nation of a hundred and fifty thousand. He hastened to complete an honorable peace to the joy of all the best element in this country. But the Jingoes thought that at last a chance of crushing Kruger was at hand. Lord Salisbury is, however, too wise to enlist himself among the cruel rabble who would in every generation set England dabbling her feet in a sea of blood. And President Kruger is a godly, a sagacious and a clever statesman. There will be no war between Briton and Boer. That will never happen again. The Jingoes are the noisiest part of our community, but their power for mischief steadily declines.

SOME ITEMS ABOUT OUR WORK.

The Churches of Christ in England are not going to sleep. Evangelist Romig has been visiting Cheltenham. The report of the result has not yet reached me. Bro. Romig is now to try to start some new mission. We want to break new ground. He is about to survey a part of our south coast, with the view of examining the possibility of inaugurating a mission at the important and beautiful town of Brighton, the queen of all English seaside resorts. This is a brilliant idea and I trust it may be carried into execution. At Hornsey Tabernacle we are being visited with a gracious spiritual revival, such as comes in due season to every church which will wait in work and prayer. I have been of late baptizing a goodly number of converts and have a nice little list of others immediately coming forward. To-night at our week-day service I shall be immersing the elder of an important German Lutheran Church in London with his wife. These two dear people were brought to our services and for the first time in their lives heard distinctive gospel preaching. I happened to be dwelling forcibly on baptism and they also had opportunity of seeing me baptize. It was all a new revelation to them. They are obeying the gospel in their turn with great joy. We are disappointed that we cannot have Romig at Hornsey just yet. But we are enjoying a revival without him, for it is useless for churches to lie on their backs crying out for some great evangelist to come along and wake them up. At this moment many in England are clamoring for Moody and Sankey, when we have the Bible with all the fullness of truth already. We trust that Bro. Romig will found some new interest somewhere and that he will come along to our part of the mighty metropolis later on. At all the churches which he has been able to visit Bro. Romig has shown himself to be a powerful preacher. The plan of sending round one of the best evangelists America can produce from our ranks is one which should be followed every year. W. DURBAN.

New York Letter.

Good news comes through a private letter from Cincinnati concerning the offerings for Foreign Missions. The amount on June 22nd was a little over $105,000—a gain of something like $15,000 over the corresponding time last year. Our good secretaries think it altogether possible now to reach the $150,000 mark we set before us at Chattanooga last fall. This certainly is reassuring, but we will not reach this amount unless each Sunday-school and church have fellowship in the good work. The children are always glad to give if only we give them the opportunity. And this training of the Sunday-school children to give will have a most salutary effect upon the chuch of the next generation. We should by all means bring up the children to the help of the Lord against the mighty, both for the sake of the present and the future. Let us not rest until every Sunday-school in the land is in line. Symmetry and proportion will also demand that we make thorough preparation for Children's Rally Day for America on Nov. 19th next. If we will do our duty by the boys and girls of to-day, the men and women of tomorrow will do their duty to the world.

Presbyterianism seems to be going through dark days in New York. Several consolidations have taken place between old but weakening congregations within a few years, and others are contemplating similar steps. Yesterday Calvary Presbyterian Church in West 116th St., Dr. James Chambers pastor, voted to dissolve the church after 17 years' effort to build up a congregation in that part of the city. A section, too, which one would think among the most favorable to such an enterprise in the city of New York. Harlem is accounted the best field for Christian work on Manhattan Island. But it was only a few weeks ago that the Pilgrim Congregational Church, Madison Ave. and 121st St., sold its property and will soon move to another quarter. This is, however, the same general locality in which Bro. J. M. Philputt has done a successful work with many odds against him. It is evident that much of the trouble of the Presbyterians was occasioned by the doctrinal strifes within their own church. One would think that the bitterness resulting from the Briggs controversy would induce them to move cautiously in the McGiffert matter, now before the Presbytery of New York. It is likely that Prof. McGiffert, in defference to the wish of many strong friends and advisors, will quietly withdraw from the Presbyterian fellowship and avert the useless controversies of a heresy trial.

Quite a little stir has been occasioned among the Jews of the East Side recently by the evangelistic tours of one Mr. Dunlap, who in a gospel wagon goes through our New York Ghetto, trying to persuade the sons of Abraham that Jesus of Nazareth is the Messiah promised by their prophets. One of the damaging charges made against Mr. Dunlap is that of extortionate methods employed in his brokerage and pawnshop business, which he carries on to some extent among them. The Jews have gone so far as to organize themselves into a society for the repulsion of all efforts made toward their conversion to Christ, and also to prevent the tattooing of Christian signs and emblems on their children's persons. This latter some unthinking-of-mischief persons have been doing lately, and it has aroused and justly, too, great indignation among that people. But their organized opposition to Christ is not new. We find much that is similar in the Acts of the Apostles and even in the Gospels. These things should only cause the redoubling of our efforts to turn the children of Israel to Christ our Lord and theirs.

The annual summer classes in philanthrophy have opened at the United Charities Building with every prospect of great success in their work. Many persons from different states and cities, among them teachers, preachers, missionaries and some business men, are in attendance. Most all the several phases of philanthropy will be discussed by specialists, and class visits will be made under the guidance of local workers to many charitable and philanthropic institutions in and about New York. So that the theoretical knowledge imparted by lecturers will be supplemented and illustrated by observation of actual work. This Summer School of Philanthropy is one of the very best courses of training for those who wish to give themselves to a life of effective benevolence.

The Christian Scientists of New York are just now about to come under the minions of the law. Many members of the Medico-Legal Society are in favor of repressive legislation on the ground of its adherents teaching and enforcing criminal neglect of medical aid. President Bacht of this society says:

"I believe that it is tantamount to homicide when a child dies under the treatment of a Christian Scientist. A child of tender age has no discretion, and consequently has nothing to do with choosing its treatment. Society then has to step in to protect the child. As to contagious diseases, how can mind affect them? As to such diseases as smallpox, cancer and consumption, if a man has them all, his mere thoughts to the contrary will no more save him from the effects of those terrible diseases than his thinking will save his hand from burning when placed in a consuming fire. Society in this case should intervene to protect the man from himself." S. T. WILLIS.

Leaves from Mission Fields.

CHARLES E. GARST.

"The world smiled on him at his birth,
Beneath a rose-hued sky;
Rocked on the summer waves of love,
His childhood glided by.

His boyhood passed in lofty dreams,
In longings for the strife;
The glory and the pageantry,
The tournament of life."

In his lofty vision in the seclusion of his prison home on the Isle of Patmos the Apostle John beheld under the altar the souls of those who were slain for the Word of God, and for the testimony which they bore. The missionaries of the cross who have laid down their lives on the foreign field also belong to the sacramental host who counted not their lives dear to themselves, but became martys to the truth as it is in Jesus. In the heart of every true disciple of our Lord the names and the memories of these missionaries are held in changeless love and in sincere and lasting esteem. From such lives as these comes the highest inspiration to self-sacrifice, to a closer walk with God, and to a larger fellowship in preaching the gospel in every tongue and in every clime. The lamented Isaac Errett—out of the experiences of his own great heart—once said, "I believe that what we need above all things else is an infusion of the heroic element into our faith—a heroism that laughs at impossibilities and balks not when asked to remove mountains. A few martyrs for Christ's sake would be worth more to us than thousands of gold and silver." It is a religious duty to know those who represent us and even die for us on the foreign field, and to esteem them very highly in love for their work's sake. The names and the stations of our missionaries—both living and dead—should be household words. Intelligence is at once the mother of devotion and missionary enthusiasm. The story of modern missions is the most fascinating chapter of church history. Like the Bible, this record is composed mostly of biography. This is true of all history, whether sacred or profane. A teacher once said to a child: "What is history?" Guided by a strange intuition the child replied: "History is His story." It is indeed God's story as told in the lives of individuals. In the hope of doing a little good the writer has gathered with infinite pains a few leaves from mission fields which the reader can twine into a wreath for the living or place on the graves of the dead in unchanging affection.

"All rests with those who read. A work or thought
Is what each makes it to himself, and may Be full of great dark meanings, like the sea,
With shoals of life rushing; or like the air,
Benighted with the wing of the wild dove,
Sweeping miles broad o'er the far southwestern woods
With mighty glimpses of the central light;
Or may be nothing—bodiless, spiritless."

There never was a really great man who did not have a great mother. For invincibility in war Sparta was more indebted to her mothers than her soldiers. Charles E. Garst inherited from his mother noble instincts and high ideals. She was a woman of great force of character, yet of gentle disposition. Her religious feelings were deep and intense. She considered and determined all questions of life and destiny in the light of the New Testament. The religious conscience, so conspicuous in the son, was inherited from the mother. Her heart and hands were always busy in looking after the welfare of a family of eight children. She found ample time to give them religious instruction. On the twenty-first of August, eighteen hundred and seventy-four, the very day on which Charles reached his majority, the mother passed into that strange experience that men call death. Dr. Garst, the father of our missionary hero, is now in the eighty-fifth year of his earthly career. He is a man of intelligence, culture and sterling integrity. His hopeful spirit and cheerful disposition made him a delightful companion for his children.

It was well for Charles that he inherited the happy disposition of his father. In later years it helped him over many a hard experience. This boy, whose name and influence were to be known and felt on two continents, was born in Dayton, Ohio, a beautiful town with a beautiful name, and still more beautiful in the blue of the skies that bend over it. The family finally moved to Boone, Iowa, where the old home still stands. Charles attended the public schools and made commendable progress for one of his years. About the age of thirteen he entered the Agricultural College at Ames. In addition to his studies he did a great deal of work on the farm, for which he received a small compensation in money. This constant exercise in the open air was helpful to him in many ways. It brought health to his body and rest to his mind. It also kept him in close touch with the changing glories of nature, in which his active intellect and affectionate heart read a varied meaning.

"He found tongues in trees,
Books in the running brooks,
Sermons in stones
And good in everything."

Dr. and Mrs. Garst were devout members of the Presbyterian Church. This means that their children were well schooled, both in the Catechism and the Holy Scriptures. Patient and painstaking training of the young will always bring a rich reward. It was as natural for Charles to seek the better life as it is for the bud to respond to the touch of the morning dew and to the kiss of the shining sun. While yet a child he found the pearl of greatest price and came into the church of which his parents were members. This step saved him from a thousand snares. He was exceedingly timid and found it difficult to give expression to his religious experiences. This bashfulness, however, he finally overcame, and with the courage of the martyrs bore his testimony before principalities and powers. One who really believes will never be ashamed. In the face of faith and love difficulties and embarrassments vanish like wreaths of mist before the shining sun.

"Looking at some trouble lying
In the dark and dread unknown,
We too often ask with sighing:
'Who shall roll away the stone?'

But before the way was ended,
Oft we've had with joy to own,
Angels have from heaven descended
And have rolled away the stone."

Kansas City Letter.

June is a busy month with convention goers. It has been my pleasure to attend three gatherings in the interest of Christian Endeavor. The first was C. E. Day at our own state Bible-school convention. This has been amply reported by others. By common consent it was voted the best day of the convention, and the address of Bro. H. A. Denton the best thing on the program. Plattsburg entertained royally, and we will all vote to go there again, at the first opportunity.

The annual convention of the 7th district C. E. Union of Missouri was held at Lebanon, June 21, 22. As vice-president of the Missouri C. E. Union, it became my duty to be present. This was my first visit to Southern Missouri. Leaving home on Monday, the 19th, I stopped off at Lamar, to see some dear friends of other days, Sister J. P. Houston and her family. When I was first trying to preach, even while yet a student in Eureka College, "Uncle Jeff" Houston was an elder in the church, and himself a preacher of no ordinary ability. It was while his sainted brother, Washington Houston, was holding a meeting in Eureka, in April, 1861, that I made the good confession, and was baptized by Dr. J. H. Allen, then pastor of the church. I well remember the April day, when, amid the falling snowflakes, we went from the old church to Uncle John Darst's pond, where the sacred scene was enacted. Though less than nine years of age, it was the most serious moment of my life, and is stamped indellibly upon my memory. I have never been able to get away from the holy influence of that hour, thank God. But I have wandered far from my theme. I must be getting old, I guess. But ah! how easy it is for these sacred memories to lead us away from to-day's affairs. I was about to say that the home of "Uncle Jeff" was my home for many happy days during my early ministry, and the kindness of himself and his dear wife, and the brother's place which the children gave to me, have given them all a first mortgage on my affections. Two of the children are living in happy homes in Lamar, one is the center of another Christian home in far-away California, while sweet Pearl, the baby, after living to the verge of beautiful young womanhood, took her flight to the deathless land, where she and her sainted father are now waiting in company for the coming of their loved ones. I found an appointment had been made for me to preach on Monday night, and it was a joy to again tell the story to these dear friends. Bro. W. W. Blalock is the beloved pastor at Lamar, and his praises are held on every hand.

The Lebanon convention was well attended, the various parts of the district seeming nearly all to have delegates present. The Christian Churches led in the number of delegates, and the reports of work done were creditable to our people. But I was surprised that not one of our preachers of the district was at the convention. Whether this was due to a combination of unfortunate circumstances, or to lack of interest, I am unable to say, but it was an unfortunate fact, in any evsnt. The zeal and efficiency of our own Endeavorers in the 7th district deserve the recognition of our ministry; and I am sure the young people could not have attained to their present status there without the hearty support of their pastors. So I will assume that their absence was for unavoidable reasons.

The 8th district convention of the Missouri C. E. Union met at Mountain Grove, in Wright Co., June 22, 23. There are only about twenty C. E. Societies in this district, which includes ten counties; so it will not be thought strange that the attendance was small. Most of the societies are small in membership, and labor under great difficulties, their congregations having but little preaching, and that not always regular. But some of the reports showed splendid work done. Perhaps the best report came from the society of the Christian Church in West Plains. Bro. A. F. Holden, the pastor, with the former pastor, Bro. T. F. Goightly, and two young ladies, represented that society. The Congregationalists and Presbyterians were also well represented in the convention. The spirit of unity was most delightful in both these conventions, and the manifest desire of all the young people to know and do the will of the Master gives great promise for the future of the church of our Lord Jesus Christ.

I was surprised to witness the remarkable development of the fruit industry in Southern Missouri. The whole Ozark region seems destined to become orchard, vineyard and garden. All its hills and valleys seem the natural habitat of the apple, peach and grape, while grains and vegetables yield abundantly to proper cultivation. But the people are yet poor, and many of them are able to do almost nothing for the support of the gospel in their midst. After awhile they will have their homes built and their farms under cultivation, and they can give generous support to their churches and ministry. The people that shall be most liberal in sending missionary pastors into their midst now will be the people whose hold upon that region will be strongest in years to come. Our state board has made a beginning, but only that, and we could easily and profitably use five times the sum we have, in sustaining preachers in that part of the state. Shall we have the support of our Missouri brethren to this end? Let every preacher whose congregation has not contributed to our state work for this year see to it that an offering is taken at an early date.

Good news from the Foreign Christian Missionary Society! Over $105,000 already received since last October, $15,000 more than at this time last year. If this is kept up, we shall reach the $150,000 for which we have been asked. Every church which has not already taken this offering ought to do so at once. If you have neglected both these interests, why not take a joint offering, dividing it between the state and foreign work? "What thou doest, do quickly."

W. F. RICHARDSON.

Kansas City, June 28, 1899.

Washington (D. C.) Letter.

The formal transfer of the Whitney Avenue Mission to the representatives of the Vermont Avenue Church, June 11, was an interesting occasion. Besides the members of the Sunday-school and those who have been identified with the mission there were present many of the leading spirits of the Christian Churches. W. E. Gatley, who for a score of years has officiated as superintenent of the school, gave an interesting account of the opening of the chapel in 1877, and told of the presence and liberal contribution of President Hayes, and of the dedicatory sermon preached by F. D. Power. He spoke feelingly of the tinge of sadness that came to him at the thought of resigning the work with which he had for so many years been identified; but rejoiced that he was committing it to a body of Christians, who had proven themselves worthy to receive such a trust, and who would, he was sure, build upon the foundation which had been laid a magnificent work to the glory of Christ.

A happy response was made by Bro. Power. W. J. Wright, of the H Street Church, Robert Balderson, the new superintendent, and others made appropriate remarks.

This promising young child that is such a welcome addition to our family of churches has been adopted by the national C. W. B. M. At their last executive meeting an appropriation of $800 was granted towards the support of a preacher for the Whitney Avenue Church. It is probable that before this letter reaches the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST'S readers a suitable man will be secured. At present, Andrew Wilson, a young attorney of the Vermont Avenue Church, is supplying the pulpit. C. A. Young, of Chicago, who came as a representative of the C. W. B. M. to look over the field, was delighted with the prospects. The Vermont Avenue and Ninth Street saints greatly enjoyed two good sermons from Bro. Young.

As we chronicle the addition of a new house of worship in the city we are reminded of the valuable accessions of three good preachers who in the past three years have joined our ranks from other religious bodies. These brethren have passed the probation period and are proving themselves worthy of the great plea they are now advocating. H. G. Weaver is doing a noble and self-sacrificing work in Reading, Pa., and a strong church will be the result.

W. F. Watkins, supported by our state board, is doing the work of an evangelist upon the eastern shore of Maryland and is planting good gospel seed in that virgin soil.

We are especially gratified at the good reports that come from S. R. Maxwell's labors with the Third Church, Richmond, Va. The writer when a boy attended a mission Sunday-school in a small frame chapel on Twenty-fifth Street. This original home of the Third Church soon proved inadequate and a brick structure was erected a few squares distant. This in turn has been outgrown and now a large and commodious house of worship, with a seating capacity of 700, is being built. The church will cost about $12,000, and one-half of this sum is provided for. The Richmond Dispatch says, "The pastor, S. R. Maxwell, is a strong, forcible speaker, having a style peculiarly his own in the presentation of the doctrine of primitive Christianity, and is listened to by crowded houses at every service."

Bro. Maxwell, assisted by G. F. Devol, of Waterloo, Ia., is now in a protracted meeting in a tabernacle which has been built as a temporary meeting-place.

The whole East rejoices that the Seventh Street Church, Richmond, Va., has secured a worthy successor to Z. T. Sweeney. Carey Morgan, of Minneapolis, has accepted the call and will begin work in a few months. Seventh Street has the finest church building in the East (with the exception of one in Washington), a congregation composed of some of Richmond's most substantial and cultured citizens, and with a wise and able leader should continue to be a tower of strength to our cause on the Atlantic Coast.

It has been several years, now, since a little girl placed a few cents in the hands of Peter Ainslie, of Baltimore, and told him to use it in starting a home for the poor working girls. Bro. Ainslie accepted the money as a sacred trust, and to promote the enterprise started the Christian Tribune.

The pennies of the little girl have grown into a sum sufficient to purchase a brick dwelling on West Fayette Street, Baltimore. As soon as the Home can be furnished, working girls whose wages do not exceed $4 a week will be received and given room and board for $1.50 a week. A part of this will be deposited each week in a savings bank to the girls credit.

Texas Letter.

The following sober and sensible words from W. K. Homan, editor Christian Courier, on the subject of mob violence for a certain cause, are worthy a wide reading. Bro. Homan writes from the scene of the outrages. He is a man of mature judgment. His political sympathies are Republican. He has no axe to grind. Let the people at large hear what he has to say:

A great deal of nonsense and worse than nonsense is being published in papers and uttered by orators concerning the lynching of negroes in the Southern states for the crime of assault upon women. A great deal of nice moralizing upon the subject is being wasted. Every one who understands the situation knows that newspaper articles against mob violence, eloquent speeches and resolutions of mass meetings, will have not the slightest influence to abate the lynching of negroes so long as the crime which provokes it continues to be perpetrated. Indignation meetings of negroes in the North, in which inflammatory speeches and resolutions denunciatory of the Southern people form the staple of the proceedings, will not save the life of a single negro. We speak what every one knows to be a fact. It is a terrible fact, an unfortunate one, but it is a fact that assaults upon women in this country will be visited with swift and awful punishment. Not all the authority of the government can prevent the operation of this unwritten law. The lynching will stop when assaults by negro brutes upon white women stop—not earlier. This crime appears to be increasing rather than diminishing in frequency. We shudder to think of the consequences if in some way it cannot be checked very soon. What can be done, we confess we know not. The assertion that the education, religious and otherwise, of the negro has been neglected in the South is untrue. For a third of a century the white people of the Southern states have taxed themselves to educate the negro, and the crime for which lynching is the penalty is frequently committed by negroes who have been educated in the public schools founded and supported by the whites. This subject demands candid treatment by our wisest men. The Courier regrets beyond expression that conditions exist which inflame good men to the point of participating in mob violence, and there can be no extenuation of the barbarous cruelties sometimes resorted to by the mob, but we shall not join in intemperate denunciation of this people while the awful and unendurable provocation continues to be thrust upon them.

The Texas Endeavor convention at Waco, June 13-15, was fine this year. The usual good will, sweet spirit and stirring zeal were there. But the figures of the secretary are a little disappointing. Last year's report was: C. E. Societies, 354; Intermediates, 19; Juniors, 219; Floating, 1; total, 593. This year's report: C. E. Societies, 333; Intermediates, 28; Juniors, 225; Mothers, 1; Floating, 1; total, 588, a loss of five societies. The C. P. Church still leads with 110 societies, and we are second with 98. Missionary money raised, $1,000. Comrades of the Quiet Hour, 120, and Tenth Legion, 127. The treasurer reported expenses of the year, $142.09, with cash balance on hand of $66.71. J. H. Banton came all the way from New York to attend, and the royal welcome accorded him must have repaid him for the long trip.

It sometimes does us good to see ourselves as others see us. Here is what a Chicago newspaper says about Texas:

Unless one remembers his geography the vastness of the Lone Star state seems startling. Once a nation by itself—in a way—it has ever been the greatest of Uncle Sam's sisterhood of states. Larger than most of the countries of Europe, it is greater than whole clusters of Eastern states, while a good section of the Central West could be bunched within its borders. The express trains, consuming a day and a night between Chicago and New York, cross many states, but one may go by fast train a day and night and still be on Texas soil. Its population of 3,000,000 is but a scattering handful. Ten times that number could find a comfortable existence and still leave room for twice as many more. Its splendid climate, remarkably productive soil and unbounded natural resources are but little known. Fortunes are making for the shrewd ones who have gone early and got in on the ground floor. There are several large and fast-growing cities, dozens of smart towns and hundreds of thriving villages. Everywhere there is growth, push, development. Farm and cotton lands are reasonable in price, likewise city and town property, but no section of the country is being more vigorously exploited, nowhere do signs point to rising values more clearly. They are a big-hearted people in Texas; they never do things by halves.

James Small, the famous Iowa evangelist, is holding his first Texas meeting at Temple, with Pastor Laye. Everything was ready for him, and the meeting begins well. A large tabernacle, well seated and lighted, has been built. We welcome this newcomer to Dixie, and if I'm not mistaken his reception in more ways than one will be very warm.

Our state board is pushing the work of Texas missions. B. B. Sanders is corresponding secretary, with A. J. Bush, D. A. Leake and Emanuel Dubbs in the field with him. The following places are being assisted: El Paso, Galveston, Huntsville, Luling, Schulenberg and Hearne. Before this is in print another board meeting will have been held, and this work will have been largely increased. The outlook is full of hope.

The annual Sunday-school picnic of the Central Church had a sad ending this year. In the midst of a most happy day of pleasure two of our boys, Oscar Hancock and Willie Meador, about twelve years of age and first cousins, were drowned. Neither of them could swim, and they were aiming to keep in shallow water. But Willie stepped off a ledge of rock into twenty feet of water and went down. When he came up he cried for help, and his brave companion rushed to the rescue, when both went down to death together. Two white caskets lay side by side at the funeral, and two white hearses, drawn by white horses, took them to a large grave, and side by side we buried them. Together they were in life, together in the awful struggle in the lake, together in death, together in the grave and, blessed thought! their pure spirits are now together in heaven. The first funeral I had when I came to Dallas, almost nine years since, was that of little Harvey Meador, a brother of Willie, who was killed by a street car while on his way to Sunday-school. M. M. Pittsburg Letter.

Five years ago the city of Pittsburg and its environs within a radius of fifteen miles of the majestic courthouse had a population of 580,000. To-day, so great has been the gain that she boasts of 700,000, and this is admitted by many of the best informed people to be entirely too small an estimate. Right here, at junction of the Monongehala and Alleghany Rivers, where the great Ohio begins its onward sweep toward Cairo, is to be found the largest steel center in the world, and the fourth largest book center of the United States. The annual report of the county commissioners to the state department, given last week, shows the total number of taxables in this district to be 240,712; value of real estate, $540,490,185, or an average of more than $750 for each man, woman and child of the population. Speaking of the magnitude of Greater Pittsburg, the Hon. William H. Graham, one of the trustees of the Observatory Hill Church, where your scribe ministers, says: "Pittsburg is the center of the greatest population in the United States outside of New York and Philadelphia. Within a radius of sixty miles reside 1,608,864 people, a greater population than Chicago and a similar radius. The capital surplus and deposits of the banks, national, state and savings, of this one county of Alleghany exceed the combined banking capital, surplus and deposits, of eight Southern states. Alleghany County produces 47 per cent. of all the steel made in the United States, 56 per cent. of all the the steel rails, 75 per cent. of all the plate glass, while the Pittsburg coke and oil district produces 65 and 60 per cent. respectively, of each of these products." Mr. Graham through his connection with the Merchantile Trust Company, of which he is the honored president, and as a careful student of Pittsburg industries, has made an exhaustive study of the economics of this county, hence these figures may be regarded as authentic.

Into this great district are cast, with the avowed purpose of winning it to Jesus Christ, hundreds of churches of all shades of thought, and among them about twenty of the simple faith of the first century disciples. These churches of the faith of the Disciples are doing heroic work in the midst of very disadvantageous circumstances. Not alone is this the very heart and backbone of Presbyterianism, but also here are found some of the rankest societies for the promulgation of atheistic and infidelistic doctrines in the United States. Sometimes, as one sees the immense number of people on the Lord's day speeding in all kinds of conveyances to the parks and resorts, knowing the output of beer on this the first day, he wonders whether this is America with a Christian Lord's day, or Germany with its beer, infidelity and vice. Into this environment, then, are cast these churches of our faith, and the fact that they are succeding in building up for themselves and the Master a strong plea and life, is proof positive that their work is not in vain. Prominent among these centers of redemption stands the Central Church on Pride and Caldwell Streets, right in the heart of a strong anti-church-going element, ministered unto by the patient, lovable and ever-tender-hearted C. L. Thurgood. The history of the Central is unique. It is the direct outgrowth of the sentence of a young man upon his deathbed, who said, "Oh if there had only been a church in this district I might have been a better man." This touched the heart of his sister, Miss Josephine Merrick, and she determined to help other young men and maidens. Day after day and night after night she would go up and down the lanes and alleys in search of scholars for the "new Bible-school." In a room on the third floor of a bank building the school was established. Bros. Robert S. Latimer and Edward Chessley and others of Alleghany would go over and assist in the work of the school. At last, after eight years of hard work, during which time the school had migrated several times and had grown beyond all expectation, by dint of hardest work, one thousand dollars had been accumulated. A lot was purchased where now stands the church edifice and the struggle for existence began. A building was erected in course of time, that has to-day a seating capacity of about four hundred, with large basement fitted for the use of a flourishing boys' brigade, kindergarten and classes of various kinds. A savings bank for the children in connection with kindergarten work is not the least of the many interesting features. This bank at the present time has over seven hundred depositors. The average attendance at the kindergarten, which is held on successive Saturday afternoons, is over two hundred. Bro. Thurgood will be only too glad to correspond with any who may desire information along any line of advanced city evangelization work, for his body, heart and soul are right in this movement and he esteems it a blessed privilege to help communicate to others in good things.

The preachers here are debating among themselves what is the best thing to do with Bro. T. E. Cramblet, pastor of the East End Church. He has come into this district and completely upset all preconceived notions and ideas. Not content with building a thirty thousand dollar church edifice and nearly paying for it in less than three years, not satisfied with winning for himself the name of mortgage cancelor all over the county, not content with editing a bright and spicy paper circulating among all of our churches, not content with giving occasional illustrated lectures, not content with seeing his sermons reported in extenso in the daily press—now he has added another work to his line. We don't know what we will do with him! Have about come to the conclusion that he is Christo-church extenso-Bibleistoco maniac, and that he must be let alone and fulfill his destiny. The latest this indefatigable brother has done is to induce his East End congregation to purchase a Methodist Church building, move it across a wide street onto two large lots of which he superintended the purchase and there establish, not alone a Bible-school, but a church. Yea, verily, the bishop of the East End is a veritable Timothy in good and progressive work.

Under the able leadership of Bro. Earle Wilfley, our new city evangelist, a rousing tent meeting is being held at the historic Turtle Creek, where Washington first won fame for himself. There are about thirty Disciples at Turtle Creek, without any church home. Bro. Wilfley is in a large tent, preaching the primitive gospel. The tent is located on what is known as Bank Corner, there being located a national bank. It's very interesting to hear the conductors on the electrics call out no longer Bank Corner, but "All out for the gospel tent." Evidently the conductors know a good thing when they see it.

Am I a Heretic?

Since the iconoclasts and heresy hunters have become so numerous in the land, I am constrained to pause long enough to ask myself where I am at. The constraining power originated and emanated from a certain conversation recently, when the president in his annual address called for a resolution condemning "Higher Criticism and Hypnotism," to which a certain editor of a religious paper in an editorial gave sanction in a loud "Amen." Now, since I am the person the president had in mind when he included the science of hypnotism, I desire to be fully understood and heard concerning the matter. The Higher Criticism does not apply to me. Here is my defense, which I submit to a million honest and intelligent Disciples. Since the advent of the pseudo-philosophy called "Christian Science" has made such inroads among our churches and thousands have surrendered their convictions of the true faith, reason, true science and common sense, like Mr. Campbell, when Robert Owen flaunted his soul-destroying gospel in this country, "I felt called upou to put on the armor of true science, philosophy and religion and go forth to meet the giant." I have never been able to meet a fact by making light of it and denouncing it without investigation, as is the custom of some of our critics. Hence I set about to investigate their phenomena, and my research resulted in finding that many cures have been wrought. Here are facts, then, to start with. They must be met. We must either accept their absurd and incongruous hypothesis or give a better one. To the first I could not subscribe and the latter I assume to do. From the nature and character of their cures, and their many failures, I am sure it does not belong to the domain of the supernatural, but to some natural law which, if once understood, can be applied with the same and better results without denying the evidences of our senses. This law, while yet in its infancy, has been found. Mr. Hudson, in his Law of Psychic Phenomena, has given us a working basis and scientific hypothesis, which is in harmony with natural law and within the domain of true science, psychology. This law I have demonstrated a hundred times and more, and any one who does not prefer darkness rather than light, and ignorance rather than knowledge, can do the same with untold benefit, both to himself and a suffering people. I cannot, in this article, give the hypothesis, but will simply say that it embraces that part of the new psychology long since known as hypnotism; the most forceful and potent therapeutic agent known—as harmless as it is forceful. Dr. George C. Pitzer, of St. Louis, one of the oldest and most successful physicians in the city, says: "When you hear any one antagonizing hypnotism you may set it down that he knows nothing whatever about it, and he is simply an ignoramus." With this law of psychic phenomena I have met the so-called Christian Science and Spiritists and slain them hip and thigh. I have relieved hundreds of pains, cured chronic diseases of long standing, unstopped the deaf ears and caused the lame to leap and shout for joy. I have never in one single instance seen any harm result from its use. I lecture on these subjects and open the eyes of the people, much to their delight. I treat all without money and without price. I preach the gospel faithfully, as I always have, and while trying to save the souls of men I save the bodies also. In conclusion, am I to stop doing all this good for the afflicted to keep from incurring the displeasure of a few who will not open their eyes to the truth? I am doing good or evil. I am a heretic or I am not. What say the wise? What would the Savior do? What did he do? What would you do?

W. E. HARLOW.

Parsons, Kan.

[If Bro. Harlow is doing what he claims in this letter, in the way that he states, we do not see who can rightfully attempt to hinder him. He seems to be doing good, and that is always in harmony with the will of God and the truth. —EDITOR.]

The Anti-Saloon League.

This organization, as its name implies, is in open hostility to the saloon. It recognizes the fact that the saloon is void of everything that can work any good to man or the community, and that it abounds in everything that leads to wretchedness of the individual, who commits himself to its influences and of homes where the husband, father and brother are its victims. What the Anti-Saloon League purposes and seeks to accomplish is:

1. It proposes to do much along the lines of education. Many are ignorant of the woes caused by the saloon; they are ignorant of what those who are engaged in the liquor traffic are doing to extend the influence of the saloon over the appetites and wills of the boys and young men; they are ignorant of what those who profess to be good and promoters of righteousness are called to do in order that the saloon may not exist.

2. It proposes to so agitate, to so work on every mind and heart to which it can gain access, that there shall exist a conscience on the part of the masses that will not tolerate the saloon. Lovers of good government and happy homes must see that the saloon is a curse to which we should not close our eyes and cause ourselves to be indifferent. Such indifference will cause many to suffer.

3. It proposes by well-directed effort to secure the enforcement of all laws now on our statute books that are calculated to restrict and to abolish the saloon. The remark was recently made by an ardent temperance worker in the state of Indiana: "There are sufficient laws in our statute books of the state to close every saloon if they were enforced."

4. It proposes to secure better legislation against the saloon as rapidly as possible.

This organization is growing steadily and its influence is being felt by the powers of darkness. There are national officers. Thes ecause the Anti-Saloon Leauge to be established in the different states. Each state when organized has a superintendent who gives his attention to the dividing of the state into districts, and each district as far as possible has a superintendent and organizer. By this means an Anti-Saloon League will be established as soon as possible in every town and township and city. That this organization has done much good and gives promise of much good in the future is manifest to all who have followed its history. This organization can be made so effective as to dictate who shall be elected to office and what our laws shall be. I know of places where all who are opposed to the saloon, irrespective of party, unite and by their labors and influence elect men to office who will grant no license for a saloon.

Irvington, whose glory is Butler College, has no saloons. Why? No one can get a license to open a saloon there. Men are put in office that will keep it out.

The Liquor League is not a political party, although it has much to to with politics. It is partisan as far as what it conceives to be its interests are concerned. If a man is up for office "they sound him, and if he does not favor their business they leave nothing undone by which to accomplish his defeat." I understand that the Anti-Saloon League proposes to take the opposite position. If a man is up for office he is to be interviewed, and if he favors the saloon or the licensing of the liquor traffic he is to be defeated if possible. In many localities this would compel many of the League who are identified with the old parties to vote the Prohibition ticket.

The League is doing much along the line that I have indicated. It should have earnest support. The W. C. T. U. is a powerful organization. It shows what can be done by education, agitation and the securing of temperance legislation. It shows what can be done by systematic effort against the saloon.

In the state of Indiana the W. C. T. U. is doing much; the Prohibition party is doing much; the Anti-Saloon League is doing much. May these different organizations, for the sake of the public's good, not antagonize each other, but work together that King Alcohol may be dethroned and the saloon exist no more.

W. O. MOORE.

In military prisons an offender is sometimes sentenced to carry cannon balls from one place to another and pile them up all day long. That is all. Perhaps it does not seem very terrible but it soon wears his life out. It is practically a death sentence, and he knows it; he would rather be shot. Many a sick man feels the same way about the burden of disease that he is lugging back and forth from day to day. He would as soon be down with a mortal disease. It will come to that sooner or later.

A man's life can be dragged out by dyspepsia and liver complaint. The experience of Mr. J. T. Cardwell, of Fall Creek Depot, Pittsylvania Co., Va., shows how Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery saves people from consumption by waking up their nutritive organism and giving it power to supply pure, healthy blood, which drives out blood poisons and dead tissues and builds up sound, wholesome flesh and muscle.

"I feel it my duty," writes Mr. Cardwell in a letter to Dr. Pierce, "to write you of the lasting benefits derived from the use of Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery and little 'Pellets.' Seven years ago I contracted a severe cold, which baffled the skill of one of the best physicians in my State. It ran on and I continually grew worse until I concluded to write to the 'World's Dispensary Medical Association.' The answer to my inquiry advised me to use 'Golden Medical Discovery' and 'Pellets' for indigestion and liver complaint; at this time two months had passed. In two or three days after I had commenced the use of your medicine my cough had entirely stopped, my digestion was better, my low spirits driven away and I felt new life and vigor in my whole body."

This marvelous "Discovery" makes nerve force and rugged power. It is far better than oily emulsions; it does not make flabby fat, it does not increase the weight of corpulent people.

COLLEGE COMMENCEMENTS AND NOTES.

EUREKA COLLEGE.

The greatest delight of a trip is the getting back home. However genial the hospitality or true the friendship abroad, the true home is the place of rest and refreshing when the work is done. I am coming more and more to know that the home is the divine institution. "What God hath joined together let not man put asunder" gives the key to the whole situation, and justly follows, before God closes his great Book, specific direction on domestic duties and relations, which if heeded would bring about such domestic revolutions as the world has not witnessed. "Home, sweet home."

When I returned to Eureka the other day I found a number of people busy raising money to do some needed repairs and painting about the college, and although the community had turned into the college treasury the past year nearly $4,000, it had pledged $500 for the repairs. If it had not been true, "Give and it shall be given to you," and had it not been true that the giver is more blessed than the receiver, Eureka would long since have been bankrupt. I visited a church recently, not a rich church, but a live church, that has paid for a $11,000 house of worship recently, during about three years, and is fuller of the Christ-spirit, enthusiasm and good Christian work than many stronger churches. We are inclined to want to get rich before we give. The fact is, we ought to give that we may get rich. We are growing. I find many noble souls with large hearts and broad views, able to comprehend something of what it means to promote Christian education.

Eureaka College, I think, never had a warmer place in the hearts of Illinois people. Our young people are catching the spirit of enterprise in the King's business. It now looks like the attendance at Eureka College would be doubled the opening of the next session. May the Lord grant such wisdom to our young people.

Study Spanish. Eureka College is prepared to give emphasis to this important language. Two former Eureka students and graduates go to Cuba this fall. Others must follow. There are demands for our ministers among other Spanish-speaking people. We must send teachers for the public schools and high schools. Business men and farmers will be needed. So the importance has forced itself upon us. If the people going to these new possessions could be good, true Christian people it would mean a great deal, both to them and us. We want to send our part of the emigrants.

Prof. R. E. Hieronymus returns to the faculty in the fall. This is good news to all who know the sterling qualities of this true man. For a number of years he filled the chair of English, and brought up his department to very high standing. He is enthusiastic for the growth of all departments, but especially that of English literature. His genial co-operation with other members of the faculty, and his personal interest in young people, make him a very valuable accession to our already excellent faculty.

The fruits of Eureka College are manifest at nearly all points where I go. Some former student is nearly sure to be in the pulpit or prominent in the pew. The tree shall be known by its fruits. In these things we greatly rejoice.

The educational enterprise of a people is a good index to its value. This is pre-eminently an age of education. If we fail to train our young people, particularly our leaders and ministers, we make a fatal mistake. Education without integrity of moral and spiritual life will not satisfy the wants of to-day. I asked a business man of large experience recently, whether in his judgment more men failed in business for want of business ability or business integrity. He replied, "The lack of business integrity." Business, then, requires Christ education. The best interests of home, church and state require the same. No activity of the church except the direct preaching of the gospel has meant more to civilization, domestic happiness, church prosperity and national purity than the power which religious people have thrown into Christian education.

BETHANY COLLEGE.

The commencement season at Bethany was ushered in by the class performances given on successive Friday evenings previous to commencement week, and also by the recital of the Elocution Department on Monday evening, June 5th. These performances all passed off in a manner highly creditable to those concerned in getting them up.

"Baccalaureate Sunday" was a model day in every respect. The weather was just right. The visitors were numerous, notable among whom was the venerable ex-president, W. K. Pendleton. He did not feel able to take any large part in the services, but his presence was felt as a benediction. W. J. Lhamon, of the First Christian Church, Allegheny, Pa., had been chosen to deliver the baccalaureate sermon. His effort was greeted with a chorus of praise. Benj. L. Smith, Cor. Sec. of the A. C. M. S., gave the annual address to the Y. M. C. A. in the evening. He selected for his theme "Alexander Campbell." It is not likely that Bro. Smith ever had or ever will have so interesting an audience before which to deliver his splendid lecture on the great man. He spoke in the church where Mr. Campbell had so often preached, to a congregation containing the near relatives and particular friends of his subject, and in the presence of the chief actors in the drama in which Mr. Campbell filled the leading part. The people were thoroughly appreciative and entirely delighted, and we can only wish that all our people, and especially the younger ones, might hear Bro. Smith as he discourses on the life of one of the great characters of history. The Bethany folk say that June 11th was one of the finest occasions of the kind in their recollection of the history of the college.

The week, so auspiciously begun, was delightful all the way through. There was the usual round of exercises in the buildings and on the grounds. The Musical Department gave a very fine concert on Wednesday evening. Thursday, Commencement Day, was really a great day for the college. The weather was propititious, the attendance of visitors was large, the largest, they say, of recent years, there was an interesting class of thirteen graduates, and there was the new president, J. M. Kersey, who in his quiet, unassuming way, impressed visitors, faculty and students with the conviction that he is well fitted to do the work required of the president of Bethany College. The work of conferring the degrees was very gracefully transferred by the president to ex-President W. K. Pendleton. It was most impressive and affecting as he lifted his hand in benediction upon each one receiving a diploma.

Degrees were conferred upon the following: Master of Arts, H. N. Miller, Pa.; Bachelor of Arts, W. L. Fisher, Mo., W. P. S. Murray, P. E. Island, F. N. Otsuka, Japan, T. J. White, Ohio, Mary E. C. Charnock, W. Va., Lillian A. Roberts, W. Va ; Bachelor of Letters, Harrietta P. Morris, Ohio; T. B. M. Sommerville, W. Va.; Bachelor of Music, Myra L. Carroll, Pa.; Carrie B. Mathews, Goldie M. Scott, Ida H. Taylor, W. Va. Miss Roberts and Miss Charnock received first and second honors respectively.

There was a cheerful meeting of the Alumni Association on Thursday afternoon, presided over by G. W. Muckley.

Bethany College sends cordial greeting to her friends everywhere and invites their hearty co-operation as she continues her work.

GEO MUNRO.

HIRAM COLLEGE.

Hiram has just finished the best year of its history. There has been an average term attendance of 358, a maximum of 373 and a total for the year of different students of 443. Of these 172 were ladies and 271 gentlemen. Of special, Music had 68, Art 17. Most of these art pupils took through the year, making a good class each term; the Commercial Department, 34. The school has had an increase of six per cent. over last year. In 12 years Hiram has failed only twice to show an increase, hard times years. The class just graduated from the collegiate department numbers 45. Thirty-six from the preparatory department were given diplomas admitting them to the Freshman class.

Commencement week began with the preparatory commencement Saturday night, June 17. There were orations by representatives of the class and an address by Prof. Hall, principal of the Preparatory Department with response by ——— Frick, class president.

Sunday morning President Zollars gave one of his strongest baccalaureate sermons.

Sunday P. M. the following young men were ordained to the ministry: W. A. Bellamy, B. M. Derthick, J. B. Ervers, C. T. Fredenburg, J. M. Johnston, J. T. Le Fever, A. T. Miller, W. S. Adams, M. L. Jenney.

Sunday evening the Y. M. and Y. W. C. A. Association had their annual exercises. The yearly reports of the association showed a large numerical growth.

Pres. Thwing, of Western Reserve University, gave the principal address of the evening on the "Gift of the 19th to the 20th Century." He made a masterly summary of the tendencies of the present century, thus projecting the duty of the coming century. The steady growth of the societies of Hiram has made their commencement on Monday night an important and interesting feature of this closing week.

The five halls were thronged with visitors to hear the music and the farewell speeches. The Music Department gave its commencement concert Tuesday evening. Prof. Feuchtinger and his pupils gave us the finest concert we have had.

Wednesday and Thursday evening are always given to two of the literary societies for their entertainments. Wednesday evening the Alethian (ladies) enacted familiar scenes from Dickens' novels. The scenes were very interestingly interpreted and were well staged. The music was given by Dana's orchestra.

On Thursday evening the Delphic (gents), besides a couple of orations, produced the play of "Cyrano de Bergerac." This was rather daring, owing to the lack of staging facilities, but the acting was not crude at all. The part of Cyrnano, taken by Moreton Anline, was carried out with all the spirit of the better class of professionals. Between acts the society glee club sang.

The proceeds of these society entertainments have been practically the only source of the Hiram library.

The forenoon of Thursday, the climax of the week, was given to the regular college commencement exercises.

Eleven representatives of the class gave orations.

Fifteen of the young men will enter the ministry.

Following the presentation of graduate diplomas, postgraduate degrees were conferred upon the following persons: Miss Lea E. Scott, Ph. M.; Miss Cora Allen, Ph. M., for work done in Chicago University, Austin Hunter, A. M., and ——— Laird, for work done at Hiram.

The honorary degrees were conferred on Hon. Frank Mason, A. M., U. S. Council General at Berlin, Major Clapp, U. S. Navy, Washington, Dr. T. C. Martin, Ph. D., of Cleveland and L. B. Dudley, M. S.

The alumni dinner occupied the noon hour and an alumni program the afternoon. Mrs. Orissa Harris and Miss Emma Ryder read the alumni news or yearbook. J. Ray Evers, of '99, responded to the welcome of the association. E. C. Din, of '97, editor of Wooster Republican, gave an oration on the Philippines.

The Art Department had a good exhibit of part of the work done this year. It would have been much larger had it been possible to have all the work done during the year on exhibition.

Owing to next year being Jubilee Year many of the old students did not come, intending to be here surely next year. There was a very good attendance throughout, however, and fine weather. A. C. P.

BUTLER COLLEGE.

The school year at Butler begins late—about the 1st of October, and closes correspondingly late—next to the last week in June. Every one seems to like the arrangement, as it is preferable to have the hot weather at the close than at the beginning of the year. Like the custom of having the weekly holiday on Monday instead of Saturday, it is being adopted at an increasing number of colleges. Then, too, this arrangement of the calendar fits in with that of the University of Chicago, with which Butler is affiliated. By this means teachers and students of the college may avail themselves of the whole summer term at Chicago.

The benefits of the affiliation have been evident in many ways this year. It has noticeably improved the work of teachers and students, in order to meet the high standards required of both in the university system. All examination papers are passed upon at Chicago, and in this way the work is credited to the student just the same as if he took the course there. The student who stands first in his class in Butler receives the regular bachelor's degree direct from the University of Chicago. Besides this, three scholarships of the value of $120 each are awarded to graduates each year, and free tuition is given all members of the class for one term, upon the satisfactory completion of which they may receive the bachelor's degree from the University of Chicago. The graduates of any other college among the Disciples must spend usually a full year or more there in order to get the same degree. This is the highest standing the university has given any affiliated school, and it is attracting the attention of many students throughout the country who have the opportunity of getting the undergraduate course of the University of Chicago here at much less expense than at the university itself. Eight of Butler's class of fifteen this year expect to continue their studies, the majority at Chicago. Five of the young men will enter the ministry of the Christian Church. Another who received the master's degree, will also preach after taking further training. The conviction is thoroughly established at Butler that the minister cannot afford to enter upon his sacred calling with a little, smattering course in the English Bible.

The baccalaureate sermon was delivered as usual by President Scot Butler. His subject was "The Transmission of Power," and it was a strong appeal for a life of unselfish service on the part of the man of culture. Rev. Carlos C. Rowlison, who succeeds President B. A. Jenkins at the Third Christian Church, gave the address before the Bible College, and it will be published in order that the good things in it may go farther. The commencement address was given by Rev. Allan B. Philputt, of the Central Church. He took for his subject "The Masterful Life." It was an able plea for a life of rich culture and quiet devotion to worthy purposes. President Jenkins, of the University of Indianapolis, conferred the degrees and announced several plans for the enlargement of the work of the college. The main thing necessary to increase the attendance very greatly is to let the brotherhood know what rare facilities are provided here, and no pains will be spared to do that speedily. This college has now nearly twice the interest-bearing endowment of any of our other institutions. It has more students in the collegiate department, and it maintains the highest standard of scholarship. More than this, every one connected with Butler College is determined that these things shall be far surpassed in the near future.

EDWARD SCRIBNER AMES.

Irvington, Ind.

"The Gospel for a World of Sin."

The literature of any age is the most accurate representation of the life of the age morally, intellectually or religiously. The written history of any age is the photograph of that age. Say whatever you may about our inheritance, our liberty, our rich soil, vast territory, minerals and ores—our best legacy from the past is the libraries left to us. We can most heartily join with Thomas Carlyle in saying, "Blessings be upon Cadmus, the Phoenician, or whoever it was that invented books."

In richness of good books no age has excelled the present. The present is the renaissance of religious libraries. That much pernicious literature is thrown on the market, many bad, immoral books, we do not deny. Neither can it be questioned that many books are published in the name of religion that are positively irreligious. That the Christian writings of to-day have a more reverential tone, a more pious sentiment and a deeper spirituality than, say, even five years ago, is very manifest.

Our day is being treated to some of the best, broadest and deepest Christian writings that have ever been produced; the most conducive to higher spiritual conceptions and a grander Christian living.

Among the producers of pure, helpful books of to-day, Henry Van Dyke stands high. His works are always helpful and hopeful. His little volume entitled, "The Gospel for a World of Sin," is worthy of a place in every Christian's library. The author is a Presbyterian, and his book illustrates how the great men of that great church are breaking away from the bad influences of strict Calvinism. In this work the author deals with the problem of sin in the world and the remedy for sin. Although he says not, Dr. Van Dyke has written a work on the Atonement from the modern point of view of sin and Christ our God. One feels that Dr. Van Dyke has not expressed all he believes, and wishes he had not kept back part. On the oriuin of evil, the vexing question of to day, perilously near saying right out what he thinks.

"How comes evil into being," says the doctor and we expect the answer to follow, but are a little disappointed when we read on for two pages and come finaly to this paragraph. "Answers to this qnestion may be classified under three heads. The first, a denial of the existence of evil; the second, destroys the reality of the distinction between evil and good; the third, confesses that the primal origin of evil is a mystery."

He answers the question, "Is evil necessary?" by saying, "All theories which are based upon the idea of the nesessity of evil look to a practical denial of the distinction between evil and good."

Passing on, Dr. Van Dyke says: "What, then, are the facts of evil recognized by mankind? First of all, that it is that which ought not to be. Then that it actually is. Then that it manifests itself in our own experience in connection with voluntary acts. . . Liberty, then, which means the power of contrary choice, must be the door through which evil enters the world. But what lies behind that door? From what secret region does the evil pass through and claim its birth and power? Why does God permit it?" We are now brought face to face with the real problem, and anxiously look for the answer, but feel disappointed when we read, "Here we stand face to face with the impenetrable mystery." We hoped he would give us light on the mystery, but he did not.

On the significance of the death of Christ the author is clearer and stronger for, "The love of God goes before the gift of God. God so loved the world that he gave his only begotten Son. He did not give his only begotten Son that he might learn to love the world. . . . It is not intended to produce a change in the mind of God. It is intended to show what is already in the mind of God. It is not intended to make him feel differently toward men. It is designed to reveal what he has always felt. It is not love manifested. It is love's disclosure."

On this he is right, and it must change the method of presenting the doctrine of reconciliation, and instead of beseeching God to be reconciled to man, beseech man to be reconciled to God. J. J. MORGAN.

The Alum Baking Powders.

NAMES OF SOME OF THE PRINCIPAL BRANDS IN THE MARKET.

The discussion in the newspapers of the effect upon the human system of food made with alum baking powders has caused numerous inquiries for the names of the various alum powders.

Sometime ago the health authorities of St. Louis made an examination of the baking powders sold within their jurisdiction. The names of the alum powders then found were reported and published. The following list is made up from this report, from the reports of the state chemists of Kentucy and Minnesota, and from other equally reliable authority.

In Minnesota and Wisconsin the names of alum powders sold in each state are carefully ascertained and published. Similar publicity in this state would be in the interest of the people.

In addition to these, it is learned that many grocers are selling what they call their own private or special brands. These powders are put up for the grocer and his name put upon the labels by manufacturers of alum powders in St. Louis, Chicago, Kansas City and elsewhere. The manufacturers, it is said, find their efforts to market their goods in this way greatly aided by the ambition of the grocer to sell a powder with his own name upon the label, (especially when the grocer can make an abnormal profit upon it.)

It is quite impossible to give the names of all the alum baking powders in the market. They are constantly appearing in all sorts of disguises, under all kinds of cognomens, and at all kinds of prices, even as low as five and ten cents a pound. They can be recognized, however, by the housekeeper who will bear in mind that all baking powders sold at twenty-five cents or less per pound are liable to contain alum, as pure cream of tartar baking powders cannot be produced at anything like this price.

The proceedings of the 48th annual convention of the Ohio Christian Missionary Society, held in Wilmington, May 23-25, are now in pamphlet form and may be had of S. H. Bartlett, corresponding secretary, 14 Fair Court, Cleveland, O.

The annual convention of the fourth district, Michigan, held at Fremont, June 8-11, was a very pleasant meeting. Here I met a number of our Michigan brethren, candid, able men, who are giving time and talent to the advancement of the Master's cause. Among others I made the acquaintance of Alex. McMillan, our esteemed state secretary. He is the right man in the right place. The outlook for the work in Michigan is very encouraging, indeed, and we are hoping that the Jubilee Year will be the brightest in the state.

The Christian Sunday-school of this city introduced the rally as a feature of its work in January, 1894, when the attendance was over 500, which was considered something quite remarkable. Since then the rally attendance has never fallen under 600, several times reaching over 700, but the one last Sunday surpassed all previous records. The attendance was 818, and nearly 200 persons were turned away, unable to obtain seats. Quite a number were present from other points, while the people of Cameron and vicinity fairly lined the streets and sidewalks leading to the church from about 9 to 9:45 A. M., making one of the greatest S. S. gatherings ever witnessed in Northwest Missouri.—Daily Observer, Cameron, Mo.

Before leaving the state of my birth I visited a number of churches—perhaps the last time. At Volga, Ind., I baptized a young lady. At Kent, Ind., a brother and his daughter, from the Baptists, took membership with us. At Liberty, June 14, I solemized the marriage of Chas. Woodfill—whom I baptized a month before—and Miss Ida Carter. I came here by the way of Danville, Ill., stopping there to see a man and wife whom I baptized more than one year ago. S. S. Jones is the beloved pastor of the church at Danville, and doing a good work. I preached at Scottville, Ill., June 18th. We had two additions that will be a great help to that church. I preached at Modesto, Ill., last Sunday. O. D. MAPLE.

State Mission Notes.

By the time this shall come to hand the cards for the last quarter's apportionment will also have reached the churches.

Our missionary convention year begins with Oct. 1, 1898 and closes Oct. 1, 1899. Thus all money apportioned to the churches is now due. We have tried to make this the largest year's work for many years. Your secretary has not spared himself in this matter, and he he will endeavor that the next three months shall not be one whit behind, but be more full if that can possibly be, than any other three months of the year. He is determined that if there be any failure at all it shall not be on his part. But he is not looking for failure on anybody's part. On the other hand, I believe that the report at the end of the year will show a greater number of contributing churches than ever before in the history of our work in the state. We are making the most strenous efforts to reach every indifferent church and preacher and rouse in each and all an interest in this great work.

In fact, if we fail in this we shall fail utterly, because it is only as we can enlist the ministry that we can make a success.

Several of our county superintendents have offered to canvass their counties for our work, free of all charge to the board. This is a generosity which makes the heart of the secretary sing for joy. It is actions and efforts like this which make it posssible for him to continue at all. The utter indifference of so many so often discourages to such a degree that he is ready to give up the work; then somebody with a great heart comes to his assistance and he has the courage to go on.

This may sound sentimental, but it is not; it is pure fact and no fiction at all. But now for this last quarter's work. We want to rally every man, woman and child to the cause of state missions. To this end we shall band every energy and every resource, and if your church is not reported as giving at the Jefferson City convention it shall not be because of any failure on our part to persuade you of the need of the hour.

The reports from the field men are all of a hopeful character. They are working hard and their work is resulting in great good. They are out on the frontier, they have to battle with forces we know but little about, the great encouragement that comes to them is the thought of the great brotherhood who like a "cloud of witnesses" are seeing the gallant struggle they are making for truth and righteousness. No money compensation is adequate to reward them for their life of sacrifice, toil and tears. They will never be fully rewarded till they hear the dear Lord say, "Well done." But in the meantime it would not hurt them for you to say it sometimes. Yours in His name,

T. A. ABBOTT.

Stray Notices.

LESSONS IN SOUL-WINNING, by E. H. Kellar, is a work containing many valuable suggestions in soul winning, and will be very helpful to those who wish to aid the pastor in personal work. 184 pages. Cloth, 75 cents. Christian Publishing Co.

IN THE DAYS OF JEHU, by J. B. Ellis, is a well-written and intensely interesting Bible narrative. The lesson taught is that idolatry is ruin and the worship of God is life and peace. 189 pages. Cloth, 75 cents. Christian Publishing Co.

HOT FOR THE PASTOR, by W. T. Hacker, is a story delineating obstacles and hindrances in a preacher's life, and also the many hindrances the progress of the church. A good book to correct the habit of criticising by many church members. 152 pages. Cloth, $1.00. Christian Publishing Co.

THE HELPING HAND, by W. W. Dowling, is a manual of instruction for the Y. P. S. C. E., that great movement of the century that is putting new life into our churches, by interesting the young, causing them to flock to the Lord's house "as doves to the windows," and encouraging them earnestly in the Lord's work. It contains, in the most condensed form, full information concerning the Y. P. S. C. E. movement, with instructions and suggestions concerning every point. This work has had a more extensive circulation, and proved more helpful to Endeavor workers than any other hand-book published. 25 cents. Christian Pub. Co.

Sea Game.

A splendid day's sport can be obtained with a school of blackfish. Although seldom exceeding a ton and a half in weight, these small whales are quite vigorous enough to make the chase of them as lively an episode as the most enthusiastic hunter could wish, especially if two or even three are harpooned, one after the other, on a single line, as the whalers' custom is. The sensation of being harnessed, as it were, to a trio of monsters, each about twenty-five feet long and eight feet in girth, every one anxious to flee in a different direction at the highest speed he can muster, and in their united gambols making the sea boil like a pot, is one that, once experienced, is never likely to be forgotten. The mere memory of that mad frolic over the heaving bosom of the bright sea makes the blood leap to the face, makes the nerves twitch and the heart long to be away, from the placid round of every-day life, upon the bright free wave again.

Even a school of porpoises, in default of nobler game, can furnish a lively hour or two, especially if they be of fair size, say up to three or four hundred weight each. But of a truth there need be no fear of a lack of game. The swift passage from port to port, made by passenger vessels, is apt to leave the voyager with the impression that the sea is a barren waste, but such an idea is wholly false. Even the sailing ships, bound though they may be to make the shortest possible time between ports, are compelled by failure of wind to see enough of the every-day life of the sea population to know better than that, and who gives himself up to the glamor of sea study, making no haste to rush from place to place, but leisurely loitering along the wide plains of ocean, shall find each day a new world unfolding itself before his astonished eyes, a world of marvels, infinitely small, as well as wondrous great—from the thousand and one miracles that go to make up the "Plankton" to the antediluvian whale. Fishing in its more heroic phases is obtainable in deep-sea cruising as nowhere else.—The Catholic News.

Stomach Troubles Cured Without Drugs.

BY W. FRANK ROSS, A. M., M. D.

Do not condemn these rules of mine without a trial. There are various forms of stomach trouble. These rules apply to most forms of stomach trouble commonly known as dyspepsia or indigestion. Dyspepsia is caused by worry, fatigue, sedentary habits, hasty eating, eating too much, drinking at meals, eating between meals, irregular meals, tobacco, beer, hard work just after eating, condiments such as pepper, vinegar and mustard; drugs as medicines, fat meats, rich foods, heredity. It is cured by the following rules: Remove the cause. Eat largely of fruits and grains, such as oatflake, cracked wheat, hominy, rice and graham mush. Eat but little meat and vegetables. Avoid sweets, fats, starchy food, tobacco, alcohol, tea and coffee. Drink a glass of water half an hour to an hour before each meal. Every other day, until cured, take a large injection of hot water to clear the bowels. A daily sunbath is a great help to cure. Exercise two hours a day and keep all windows open day and night, at least two inches in winter and during a storm, and wider still at other times. Fresh air and sunshine are necessary for all diseases. Take plenty of sleep and at least two baths a week. Some cases are greatly helped by hot wet cloths to the stomach for half an hour after meals. Never use drugs. Eat only whole meal graham bread. All varieties of dyspepsia and indigestion are cured by the above treatment, but nothing is so good as a few days' fast, drinking water when feeling hungry.

Study carefully the above list of causes, and remove them.

Many forms of headache come from the stomach. In that case drink, at least, a pint of very hot water. Ordinary pains of the stomach are removed by drinking a large-sized cup or a quart of real hot water. Some forms of stomach trouble demand the dry diet. This consists of not drinking anything for an hour before meals, and not drinking anything while you eat nor for two hours after eating. This dry diet has worked wonders. Do all of your drinking between meals. I have cured many bad cases which failed to be relieved in any other way, simply by causing the patient to eat only two meals a day. The stomach is made up of muscles and needs rest. Omitting the supper gives the stomach eighteen hours rest.

Many foreign missionaries in all parts of the world write me of the wonderful cures by following the above simple rules. Some special forms of stomach trouble demand some special rules. Cut this out; it may cure you or your friends. Do not use drugs. They may relieve, but never cure.

Champaign, Ill.

A Boy Stronger than a Man.

One would better lay aside his own faults before he begins to hold the failings of others up to ridicule.

A lad in Boston, rather small for his age, works in an office as errand boy for four gentlemen who do business there. One day the gentlemen were chaffing him for being so small, and said to him:

"You will never amount to much; you can never do much; your are too small."

The little fellow looked at them. "Well," said he, "as small as I am, I can do something that none of you can do."

"Ah, what is that?" said they.

"I don't know as I ought to tell you," he replied. But they were anxious to know, and urged him to tell what he could do that none of them could do.

"I can keep from swearing," said the little fellow.

There were some blushes on four faces, and there seemed to be no more anxiety for further information.—Union Gospel News.

For those who believe in the fatality of number thirteen the American quarter-dollar is about the most unlucky article they can carry on their persons. On the said coin there are thirteen stars; thirteen letters in the scroll which the eagle holds in its claws; thirteen feathers comprising its wing; thirteen feathers are in its tail; there are thirteen parallel lines on the shield, thirteen horizontal stripes, thirteen arrowheads and thirteen letters in the words "quarter-dollar." Still, we take them—two for half a dollar.—Christian Leader.

The Carrying of Money.

A close observer remarks that to the initiated, a man's nationality is betrayed by the way he carries his money. The Englishman carries his loose in his righthand trousers pocket—gold, silver and copper all mixed up together. He pulls a hadful of the mixture out of his pocket in a large, opulent way, and selects the coins he has need of. The American carries his wad of bills in a peculiar, long, narrow pocket-book, in which the greenbacks lie flat; the the Frenchman makes use of a leather purse with no distinguishing characteristics; while the German uses one gaily embroidered in silks by the fair hands of some Lottchen or Mina. The half civilized capitalist from some torrid South African city carries his dollars in a belt with cunningly devised pockets to baffle the gentlemen with light fingers. Some of the belts are very expensive. The Italian of the poorer classes ties up his little fortune in a gaily colored handkershief secured with many knots, which he secretes in some mysterious manner about his clothes. A similar course has charms for the Spaniard, while the lower class Russian exhibits a preference for his boots or the lining of his clothes as a hiding-place for his savings.—The Sunny South.

Short Stories.

When the Princess of Wales was in Rome last month she passed incognita as "Mrs. Smith." Under this excellent disguise she and her daughter dined at a restaurant, taking their turn at being served and having a good time generally.—Exchange.

"Are you a native of this town?" asked a traveler of a resident of a sleepy little Southern hamlet. "Am I what?" "Are you a native of the town?" "Hey?" "I asked if you were a native of this place?" At that moment his wife, tall and sallow and gaunt, appeared at the open door of the cabin and, taking her pipe from between her teeth, said, acridly:

"Ain't ye got no sense, Jim? He means wuz ye livin' here when you wuz born, or wuz ye born before you begun livin' here? Now answer him."—Exchange.

Red Tape Abroad.—Much has been said about official "red tape" in government offices, and the following bit of sarcasm from a London (England) paper illustrates how the system works abroad: "An engineer officer, in the course of his duties, which involved traveling, sent in the bill which contained a charge, 'Porter, sixpence.' He was told that alcoholic drinks were not to be included in the traveling allowances for officers. He rejoined that he was not claiming for the beverage 'porter,' but for the hire of a man to transport his baggage at a station. Upon which the sapient official rejoined that in future he should use the word 'portage.' Later the officer, who was a wag, sent in a bill which included the item, 'Cabbage, two shillings.' The bill was promptly returned, with the statement that green vegetables were not to be included in the traveling allowance for officers. The officer replied that he had taken a cab, and that as when he had asked for the hire of a porter he was instructed to call it 'portage,' he thought that they wanted him to call a cab 'cabbage.'"

Our Flag.

Erstwhile we loved our starry flag, and stood beneath it, fain
To kiss its folds, as wide unrolled it waved o'er hill and plain;
Erstwhile, with lips that smiled, men died to keep that flag on high—
That flag that ever seemed to us far less of earth than sky,
With morning's white, and evening's red, and noontide's cloudless blue
Repeated in the glory of its colors; tint and hue
As strong as are our mountains, as deep as are our waves;
Great flag, that floats above our homes, and o'er our soldiers' graves.

Erstwhile we thought we cared for it, our banner of the stars,
And probably conned that galaxy and those pellucid bars;
But now we love it better, and are thrilled with dearer joy,
And sweeter songs we're learning, and we count it brave employ
To tell our children of the men who in the battle's van
Have borne our flag for freedom and the lifting up of man;
To tell them of our sailors who have once again at sea
Shown all the world how fearless our mariners can be;
Erstwhile we loved our starry flag, to-day from shore to shore
We stand beneath it reverently, and love our God the more.

"Westward the star of Empire," was what we used to say.
But we are learning now to frame that text
another way,
For eastward drifts our commerce, and eastward sound our guns,
And eastward we are sending our most heroic sons.
Our liberty beneath the law we'll send the ancient East,
And the strong spirit of our West, to work like heaven's yeast;
Our flag shall mean the breaking of the age-worn fetters there,
Our flag shall carry love and hope for hatred and despair.

Erstwhile we loved our country's flag, baptized in blood and fire,
To-day we almost worship it—flag of the world's desire!
Jehovah guard it evermore, and keep it pure of stain,
Jehovah give us wisdom still, right counsel to maintain.
Let every little child to-day, and every gray-haired man,
Be swift for that dear flag of stars to do what-e'er he can;
And young and old, and rich and poor, and South and North together
Join hands to hold that banner high, through all the world's rough weather;
God bless it, wheresoe'er it floats, from mast-head or from spire, God guard it evermore, our flag!—flag of the world's desire,

—Margaret E. Sangster in the July Woman's Home Companion.

The matron of the Children's Home in Wichita, Kan., has received a letter from a man who wants to adopt a child. "Send one," he says, "that is lively and will laugh and cry and get into mischief. I am fifty-eight years old, and I would give the world for a child that will laugh and get in my way and bother me. We'll give it a good home. I have raised five children, but they are all gone now, and I can tell you there is nothing so sweet as the bother of children."

Delight's Adventure.

"Come on, Fup, I ain't very big, and you are only a dog; but when grown people can't do a thing, its time for the children to step in." Delight opened the yard gate and looked up and down the road; it was deserted. She slipped out upon the sidewalk, followed by the dog. The child's face expressed determination; evidently she had undertaken a serious mission. As she went up the street, she did not even hum. The dog seemed to realize that something important was about to happen. He met a big yellow hound that lived three miles in the country and who wanted to stop and tell about last night's coon hunt. But Fup pretended like he didn't recognize the hound; he marched on with his tail as stiff as a poker. Not long after that he saw a pig running at large, with big, droopy ears—just the kind that dogs love to sieze and shake. Fup looked hard at the animal, and he knew the pig was just the kind that squeal loud when they are eared. But when he glanced at Delight's face, and read there that business was on foot, he gave up the luxurious thought and passed, licking his chops in a retrospective manner.

"Please sir," said Delight, presently, addressing an important looking man who wore his whiskers with evident pride, "Can you tell me where the drugstore is, where they sell whisky, only it's sold back behind, somewheres?"

"There is no drugstore of the sort in town," said the man who was the marshal. "What little girl are you with such naughty questions?"

"I am the orphan, and my name is Delight, and may be you know Mr. Marsh. He is the one I want to see."

The marshal pointed toward a drugstore. He went in there," he said gruffly. As the marshal had just been regaling himself with a drink at this very store, no wonder he knew nothing about the violation of the laws! However, he was a strong man with his party and always "voted his ticket straight," and was generous in buying votes; and that is why he was elected.

Delight entered the drugstore, and addressed the clerk: "Is Mr. Marsh here?"

"Generally is," said the clerk. "Bob, go back there and see if Marsh is in."

"Perhaps he works here," said Delight.

"Yes, he bottles up medicine, regular."

"I would hate to be a bottler up of medicine," observed the child. "I wonder if he thinks how many little sick stomachs he is providing for?"

The clerk chuckled. "The medicine he deals in is good-tasted; at least he thinks so. But here he comes. Marsh, her ladyship wants you."

"I think you are making fun of me," said Delight. "Do you think it is nice for so big a man to make fun of so small a girl?"

"No, I don't. And here is a stick of candy!"

"What does the little girl want," said Marsh, looking at her suspiciously. "I don't know the child. I'm busy. I can't be bothered by no children all day long. I've got my affairs to tend to."

"It keeps you busy, don't it," said Delight, "a-building houses and barns and sweet little pigeon houses? Tattie said you was a carpenter. But she didn't say you was a bottler-up."

"A what?" demanded Marsh.

"Let me set you up on the counter," said the clerk, "so the conversation will be more level." So Delight perched on the edge of the counter among the shining bottles, while the carpenter stared at her.

"Mr. Marsh," said Delight, "they said how they wished you would come down to the creek this afternoon, but they wasn't no use to ask you because you wouldn't. But I thought I'd ask you. I got to thinking about all the things I haven't done because I haven't tried. There was playing—and I never thought I would be smart enough to make a tune come! But all I have to do is to hit the right keys, on the piano, and the tune will make itself, just the very same tune that great big people makes. Although I am so little, the 'Home, Sweet Home,' what I play is just as much 'Home, Sweet Home,' as the loudest tooting horns and thunder-drums can make—the big kind what sounds like thunder when it rains in summertime."

"I wish people would tend to their own businesses," said Marsh with acerbity.

"What's going on at the creek?" inquired the clerk, watching the child with great admiration, as she dangled her legs and twisted her bonnet strings nervously.

"Tattie is going to be baptized," said Delight. "She joined the church Sunday night and I heard her talking to Jennie; and Jennie is the little girl (only she ain't near so little as me) that belongs to Mr. Weston—he is Mrs. Weston's husband. And Mrs. Weston is my new mamma; I have had three. Mrs. Weston said she believed if Mr. Marsh would come to the creek and see his little girl baptized, because that's what Jesus wants everybody to be done—I mean baptized—and oh, I wanted to be too, but they said beings I was only six it wouldn't matter if I died anyway."

"That was very unkind of them," said the clerk.

"No, you don't know them. You see you've got to be baptized if you want to go to heaven; they ain't no other way, except by being very young. The older you get the harder is it for you. Looks like a person ought to learn to be gooder, the older he grows. But I guess people is like chickens, and you know how an old rooster tastes when he is boiled; he don't taste at tall! And Mrs. Weston said if Mr. Marsh could see Tattie being baptized, because Jesus would be pleased, and could hear the hymns singing and could see her face shining as it must shine, you know, when so happy and good, it would touch his heart, if he has one [she seemed to doubt if he had]. Because you see Tattie, she told Jennie that it was all she could do, beings they was so poor and couldn't do for themselves, and nothing to eat ner wear, and her mother in bed sick, and Mr. Marsh a-having nothing to do, and I guess she didn't know of his a-bottle-ing; she just said that all she could do was to go to Jesus, and do what he wants and trust to him to help her out."

"Why didn't she tell me she wanted me to come to the baptizing?" growled Marsh.

"That's what I said," cried Delight. "I said I knew you'd be so glad and happy to come and get your heart touched, and take care of your own little girl, and they's so many men haven't got no sweet little girl to love like you have. If I was a man and had a little girl, wouldn't I take her buggy riding every day!"

"Where'd you get the buggy?" retorted Marsh.

"Buy it," said the child, triumphantly.

"And where would you get the money?" he said, trying to wink at the the clerk. As long as a man can wink, he has some self-respect left.

"I—I—I," said Delight, "I would—a—well—and well, what I had, I wouldn't give for whisky and then drink up the whisky and have neither one!"

Mr. Marsh tried to wink again, but it was not a successful wink. "This here place is too public to be discussing my affairs," he said abruptly.

"Then you come along with me," said Delight. "I've got a job for you. Mr. Weston, he gave it to me to give you. I begged him hard to have a new house built, so you could carpenter it. But he seemed to think a whole house was more than he wanted. So we hit on a playhouse, and you are to make it, two stories, and high enough for me to stand up in without hitting the ceiling; and a little porch in front for my little chair to sit on and me on the chair and Fup by me and our picture tock—that is going to be afterwards. And my little piano in one corner, that cost two dollars and I can play on it, and will play on it whenever you ask me. And a chimbly, only a make-believe one, no smoke coming out, for we won't have a fire in the house. And if you make this playhouse real pretty, there are other things for you to do, big ones, and you can help your little girl and your poor, sick wife, and God will love you and me too."

The clerk came around in front and lifted the child to the floor. He lifted her so carefully, that you might have supposed he wanted to hold to her little form as long as possible in his big strong arms. He turned to Marsh, and laid his hand on his shoulder: "Marsh, God help us to do our duty!" he said; and he was as much surprised as Marsh at the earnestness of his words.

Marsh struck the counter with his clenched hand. "I'm going to lead a different life!" he cried. "I'm going to try hard. Come on, little angel!"

"Come on, Fup," said Delight.

THE FOUR EXILES.*

The destruction of Jerusalem by Nebuchadnezzar in 586 B. C. and the deportation of the best citizens to Babylon was not the first disaster of the kind which had befallen the chosen people. Samaria had been reduced by Sargon in 722 B. C., and many of the more representative members of the remaining ten tribes had been carried away to Assyria. Still later Jerusalem was menaced on more than one occasion, and in 598 it was subjected to a siege which resulted in a large amount of wealth and many of the people, including the king and members of the court, being carried to Babylon. Perhaps this was not the only visitation of the sort which befell the city in that period. Indeed, the statements of Dan. 1:1 point to still another deportation, of which there is no record elsewhere.

Stories of individual experiences must have been preserved to future years. The history of the exiles in Babylon is passed over with the most rapid movement in the only books which allude to the subject, viz., the Chronicles. Certain voices have come to us from that day, expressing the thoughts of the prophets as they found utterance in sermon or writing. Such books are Ezekiel and the later portion of the book of Isaiah. But there must have been individual narratives handed down in fragmentary form, or perhaps passed on orally from generation to generation. The first section (chapters 1-6) of the Book of Daniel appeared to be the chronicle of such experiences written in the Maccabean period about 166 B. C., by a prophet who used these heroic recitals of the past to nerve his countrymen for the mighty struggle in which they were engaged.

The most important of the fragments into which the kingdom of Alexander the Great was broken up after his death were the kingdoms of Egypt and Syria, with their capitals respectively at Alexandria and Antioch. Between them lay Palestine, subject to every wave of conquest from either side.

The repeated invasions from north and south left the Jews of the Restoration and the second temple little opportunity to develop their power or indulge their desire for independence. This condition came to its climax about the year 170 B. C., when Antiochus Epiphanes, king of Syria, manifested such tyrannical cruelty toward Jerusalem that great numbers of its people were put to death for their faith, and many others were only able to purchase exemption at the price of giving up their religion and adopting the heathen customs held by their oppressor. So far did the efforts of Antiochus go that the temple itself was defiled, and a small altar erected to Jupiter on the corner of the great altar of burnt offering.

The heathen influences had been so powerful and seductive for half a century that many of the Jews had adopted the Greek thought and manner of life, and quite abandoned Judaism. This movement bade fair to go on until the religion of Jehovah was quite lost. It was the violent measures of Antiochus in trying to hasten the process to instant completion which caused a reaction, and actually saved the old faith from destruction. The very attempt which threatened the foundations of the Jewish Church aroused a body of true men to emphatic efforts to save the day, and out of this group of men came the great Maccabean revival with its final triumph and the restoration of the Jewish commonwealth on an independent foundation.

Kindred in spirit with these men, if not of their number, was the author of the Book of Daniel. He revived the narratives of the past regarding the heroism and fidelity of holy men in the exile, and by telling again the story of Daniel and his friends at the court of a great monarch he showed how such qualities as they manifested in that time of affliction might avail in the new time of peril to render conspicuous other lives, through which the salvation of Israel could be wrought. Daniel was faithful to his religion, courageous, wise, respected in a time when it cost much to act as he had done. This was his trumpet call to the men of his own day, and with this he joined (in chapters 7-12) the prophetic assurance that the time of persecution should soon be over, and that presently the tyrant himself should fall never to rise. The characters of Daniel and his friends are bright with the virtues which the Jews of the second century B. C. needed. On the other hand, the figure of Nebuchadnezzar is a thinly veiled picture of Antiochus himself, passionate, violent, tyrannical, idolatrous, but compelled at last to admit the power of God and bow to his will.

In this first chapter, the whole of which should be carefully studied, the four Hebrews are chosen for their promise of usefulness, and are placed in the king's training school, their names changed in accordance with the custom of the time and in honor of the gods of Babylon, and their food supplied from the king's table. But the meat prepared for them was richer than that to which they had been accustomed, and was not pure according to Hebrew ideas. To eat such food would have been to transgress all their religious scruples. Yet to refuse it was to run the risk of losing the favor of men on whose good will hung all their future. But Daniel let no such consideration weigh with him. His mind was fixed to honor his conscience and his God. Here was the exhibition of a noble purpose to keep himself pure in body by eating simple food, and in soul by uprightness of life. Simple and wholesome food and the avoidance of intoxicating drinks must ever minister to a healthy physical life, and this is essential to the highest life of the spirit.

The request of Daniel alarmed the steward to whom he and his companions had been committed, but through the divine favor the appeal was granted. The melzar feared the effects of a different diet, and so shrank from incurring the royal rebuke which he knew would follow any change for the worse in the condition of the young men. But he agreed to the test which Daniel proposed, and ten days proved the superiority of the simple fare, and solved the problem of their future diet. Henceforth they pursued their student career in preparation for the duties of court interpreters and wise men. When their period of probation was ended and the royal examination took place, they were easily recognized as superior to all the rest of the youths who presented themselves. Not only so, but as they came to take their place among the men of the profession of interpreters, they were appreciated as far and away more reliable in their renderings of judgment on events and policies than the native magicians. Nor was this for a moment, but Daniel, at least, continued through the remaining years of the reign and dynasty, and with the succeeding period after Babylon fell before Cyrus.

In this lesson, therefore, are combined strokes of emphasis upon fidelity to recognized obligations to the law of God, the value of a simple and healthy fare, the importance of strict abstinence from all intoxicants, and the divine blessing that comes to all who fulfill the highest purposes of life.

Questions.—1. To whose court were the Hebrews taken? 2. What qualities were they required to possess (v. 4)? 3. What resolution did Daniel form? 4. On what ground was it opposed? 5. What test was made? 6. What was its result? 7. What endowment did the youths receive? 8. What was the business of enchanters and magicians? 9. Why were the names of the Hebrews changed (v. 7)? 10. What was Daniel's probable age? 11. Would similar diet produce similar results now, or was this case exceptional? 12. Would the royal meat defile the Hebrews more than the heathen studies they had to pursue (v. 4)? 13. Were the wisdom and knowledge which they gained (v. 17) miraculous gifts, or the result of the divine blessing upon their studies? 14. How does the conduct of these Hebrews relate itself to the temperance question of to-day? 15. Note a Bible definition of tact in verse 9. 16. May the superiority of an education in which the Bible and Christian principles have a place, to a merely secular training, be taught from verse 20?

TOPIC FOR JULY 16.

A FRIEND IN NEED.

(Luke 10:30-37.)

A friend, at any time, is a valuable possession. There are many acquaintances, but few friends. We speak of my friend this, and my friend that, when most of them are not at all friends, but merely acquaintances. They have never admitted us to the inside of their natures; we have only been in the vestibule of their hearts, and they in the hallway of ours. Happy is the Endeavorer who, amongst his hosts of "friends" possesses one friend. Few are the friendships like that of David and Jonathan, Damon and Pythias; so few that they have become historic. If you possess such a friend, lock him to you with bands of steel, never let him go, wear him in your heart's core.

In ordinary times such a friend is a great source of joy and calm; but in sad days, when pain comes, when scalding tears flow or when no tears at all are able to flow and to relieve, then such a friend is a comfort of heaven, let let down upon earth. "Blessed be the God and Father of our Lord Jesus Christ, who comforteth us in all our affliction, that we may be able to comfort them that are in any affliction by the comfort wherewith we ourselves are comforted of God." It is to comfort our friends that we are sent. Most of us would like to comfort those who are afflicted. Most of us, in affliction, need to be comforted. This interchange of kindness is, however, usually reserved for friends. How necessary, then, to cultivate friendships.

"We go the ways of life too much alone,
We keep ovrselves too far from all our kind."

Is this not true? Do we not erect walls of indifference, coldness, reserve, between ourselves and other hearts? Is it not well to break down these middle walls of partition, and to be more frank, free, honest with each other? Do not forever pass by on the other side; do not always draw the robe of distance and reserve about you and refuse to touch one who, for all you know, may be a wounded man among thieves. Not that we should wear our hearts upon our coat sleeves and open our hearts with the most private confidences toward all comers, but that we should be more frank, more receptive toward friendship.

"But," says some Endeaveror, "I am so often in sorrow, and I have no such friend to help. I have looked long for such a friendship and none has come to me." There are many who will be friends to you, kings and princes among men and women; their words are forever waiting to cheer and comfort, their written words, that can never die. And especially among these noblemen of other days but of similar sorrows, are waiting for us the prophets, apostles, evangelists who, though dead, yet speak, and are full of living, human help and friendship for all. Chiefest of all these friends of Scripture is that Friend that sticketh closer than a brother, that elder brother friend, through whom we can ever, like Abraham, become "friends of God."

"But," objects another, "I agree to all this, to the value of these spiritual friendships; but what I need is human help, human friendship, God and Christ manifested in some human face." This is a fair attitude, and very natural. Such human friendship, especially in time of need, is the hunger of us all. And after all the only answer to the demand is, "Try to be a friend and you will likely gain a friend." If there is no one near us who, in our judgment, is likely to be congenial with us, we can make ourselves friends even to those who are not congenial—witness the Good Samaritan—then some one of these uncongenial ones may surprise us by becoming congenial—we my find a friend.

Literature.

FOOD FOR LAMBS. By Rev. A. M. Hills. M. W. Knapp, Cincinnati, Ohio, publisher. Cloth, 196 pages.

This book is written in the interest of children, and contains some unique features. In addition to the chapters on child-life, conversion and religious training, the book is interspersed with some of the popular songs of the day, giving words and music, also some full-page illustrations. The author, of course, advocates early conversions and church membership for children. Much that he says of the religious training of children is to be commended to both parents and preachers, as well as to children.

GEORGE MUELLER. By Arthur T. Pierson. The Baker & Taylor Co., New York City, publishers. Cloth, 462 pages.

The above book is the history of a great man. The name of Geo. Mueller is a household word in every Christian land, and that to which his fame is almost wholly attributable is his faith-life. He believed in God, and gave to the world the most abundant and direct evidence of the fact that God hears and answers prayer. The victories of this man's faith are marvelous, and they have been well told in this book. No more competent biographer, probably, could have been found to fairly present the life and character of Geo. Mueller than Arthur T. Pierson.

BETTER-WORLD PHILOSOPHY. By J. Howard Moore. Ward Waugh Co., Chicago, publishers. Cloth, 276 pages. Price, $1.

The writer of the above book believes in better things, and his book is a prophecy of better social conditions in the world. Present conditions tend, he thinks, to develop and make dominant the selfish element in man, whereas the altruistic should rule. His suggested reforms may not have the concurrence of all thinking men, but his purposes and efforts in that direction will meet with general approbation.

SUNDAY-SCHOOL TEACHER'S CHRONOLOGICAL CHART. In flexible morocco binding, 30 cents. Unbound 15 cents.

In this chart the prominent men of the past are represented by mountains, the bases of which extend from birth to death. The altitude of the mountains represents the comparative prominence of the men. The chronological tables of men and events associated with Bible history will be found quite helpful to Sunday-school teachers. The proceeds of the sale of the chart are to be used in rescue work for fallen men and women in Chicago. Address the publishers, 193 S. Clark St., Chicago.

MOODY'S ANECDOTES. By D. L. Moody. Fleming H. Revell Co., Chicago and New York, publishers. Price, cloth, 30 cents. 126 pages.

The name of this book suggests its character, and those who have heard D. L. Moody preach will understand its interest and utility.

BIBLICAL AUTHENTICITY. By L. L. Shearer, M. A. Published by Fleming H. Revel Co., Chicago and New York. Price, cloth, 72 pages, 50 cents.

This little handbook is written to meet modern objections to the Bible, and to strengthen the faith of young Christians in its divine character.

THE PURE CAUSEWAY. By Evelyn Harvey Roberts. Published by the Chas. H. Kerr Publishing Co., Chicago. 260 pages. Price, 50 cents.

This book is written in the interest of social reform, and dedicated to Prof. Geo. D. Herron.

TRACTS.

"What, Therefore, God Hath Joined Together, Let No Man Put Asunder." A leaflet published by O. R. Palmer, 2333 N. 31st Street, Philadelphia, Pa. Price 50 cents per 100.

"Liberty." A chapter from "The Gospel for an Age of Doubt," by Henry Van Dyke, D. D. McMillan Co., publishers, New York City. Price, 10 cents.

"Modesty, Courtship and Woman's Rights." The two chapters composing this magazine are from "Christianity and our Times," by R. P. Brorup. Published the International Book Co., Chicago. Price of the pamphlet is 15 cents.

"The Man of Nazareth," by W. H. Ashly. H. W. Rodman, Beatrice, Neb., publisher. This little book is written in vindication of the words and kingdom of Jesus of Nazareth, based upon modern conditions and prospects.

"Beatitudes and Business," by D. R. Dungan. Published by Oracle Publishing Co., Chicago. This is tract No. 4 of the Oracle's Christian Tract Series.

"The Lord's Supper," by G. A. Hoffmann. Published by the Register Publishing Co., Kansas City, Mo. This tract is written to set forth the scriptural nature, value and obligations of the Lord's Supper. It is a much needed tract.

"Packingtown," by A. M. Simons. Published by Chas. H. Kerr & Co. Chicago, Ill. Price, five cents. This tract belongs to the pocket library ofsocialism, published by the Kerr Co.

Rev. Robert F. Campbell, pastor of the First Presbyterian Church, Asheville, N. C., has had printed a pamphlet on "Some Aspects of the Race Problem in the South" which is well calculated to pour oil on troubled water. The writer shows a sincere disposition to deal fairly with his subject and make suggestions which, if heeded, would bring good results. We can not help wishing for a very extended circulation of this valuable paper, both North and South, for the good influence it is likely to exert wherever read. A copy of this pamphlet may be obtained of the Citizens' Company, Asheville, N. C., for five cents.

JULY MAGAZINES.

A prominent feature in the July Woman's Home Companion is a well-written article by Stephen J. Herben, discussing "The First Campmeeting in America." In the same number Edward A. Steiner has collected much valuable information concerning the Jewish movement to reclaim Palestine, under the title, "The Jewish Dream of a Zionistic Empire." Another article of timely interest, by Charles Bryant Howard, enters into the details of the domestic life of the Philippine women, with excellent illustrations of types of Filipino beauty.

Professor William Cunningham, of Cambridge, England, opens the July Atlantic with a valuable paper on English Imperialism, in which he shows the gradual development of English policy from the Nationalism of a hundred years ago (which meant the exploiting of all colonies and possessions for the benefit of the mother country), to the Cosmopolitanism of the present day, which seeks the greatest good of all through fair play and equal treatment to all men and all nations.

In some respects the most interesting article in the July St. Nicholas is one that comes near the latter end of the magazine. This is the report of the committee of award in the competition for prizes in the department of Books and Reading. The contest has been so suggestive, say the members of the committee, that they regret that a whole number of St. Nicholas cannot be given up to the printing of several hundred of the five thousand lists received, the letters that accompanied them, and the comments the committee would like to make. The first of the six prizes ($15 in gold) is awarded to Miss Mary Meade Hedge, Passaic, N. J.

The July Century is a story-teller's number, and is novel in its make-up, not only because it has a large amount of original fiction by ten living story-writers, but because it contains also articles on seven of the world's most famous makers of fiction, two only of whom are living. In only one or two cases do these articles consist of criticism. In most cases they are new material concerning the writers mentioned. For instance, two hitherto unpublished portraits of Sir Walter Scott, accompanied by a sketch of the artist who made them, are followed by a detailed and authentic accout of the romancer's unhappy love affair, which cast a shadow over his entire life. The author of this true story is a descendant of one of Sir Walter's intimates, the brother-in-law of his successful rival and lifelong friend.

In the American Monthly Review of Reviews for July the editor reviews the work of our delegation at The Hague up to date, presenting the latest phases of the arbitration question, with some consideration of its bearings on the present international situation. Among other topics discussed in "The Progress of the World" this month are "tariff trusts" as a political issue, the Dreyfus vindication, the war in the Philippines, the recent change in the civil-service rules and the newly elected college presidents.

Three leading articles in Pall Mall for July are (1) The Anglo-American Entente, by Lord Charles Beresford, which has his most hearty sympathy and which he thinks should ripen into a permanent and defensive alliance; a timely and instructive article on Wireless Telegraphy, its history and development (fully illustrated), by Mr. H. G. Marillier; the third of Mr. Higginbottom's Silhouetts in Parliament, which he devotes to the Irish Nationalists.

Mrs. John A. Logan writes in Frank Leslie's Popular Monthly for July a charming and sympathetic personal sketch of Mrs. McKinley, "The Gracious Lady of the White House." A number of beautiful portraits and views accompany this article, including a picture which shows the invalid wife of the President seated in the grand conservatory of the Executive Mansion, "amidst the flowers, like one of them."

Scribner's Magazine for July has as a frontispiece a fine wood engraving by Gustav Kruell. It is from a very rare daguerreotype of Daniel Webster, and accompanies Senator Hoar's paper on Webster, for which he has been collecting material for many years. There are a number of unpublished manuscripts and some new material revealing how Webster prepared his great speeches. Parallel passages are given, showing remarkable divergence between the spoken and written orations. Another paper will appear in the August number.

Dr. Pierson's article on "Ramabai and the Women of India," in the July number of the Missionary Review of the World, is one of thrilling interest and deserves a prominent place among the Miracles of Missions. It is profusely and uniquely illustrated from original photographs and contains a great deal of information not contained elsewhere. Dr. Pierson gives an excellent idea of the deplorable condition of Hindu women—especially widows—tells the romantic story of Ramabai's life and describes the work which she has done and is doing in behalf of these unfortunate child-widows.

The Church Choir is published monthly by Geo. F. Rosche & Co., 38 Randolph St., Chicago, Ill., and is devoted to the interests of church choirs and choristers, furnishing an anthem for each Sunday and special occasion in the church year, also quartets for both male and female voices, duets and trios.

The Christian Endeavor Quarterly, published by the Jennings Publishing Co., Oswego, Kan. This magazine is devoted to the International Christian Endeavor Topics and is a helpful companion to the Endeavor student.

The Ledger Monthly for July has a patriotic cover design of great beauty, entitled "Old and Young Glory," showing a little girl holding the national ensign in her arms, and wearing the cap of the Goddess of Liberty, the little figure with sparkling eyes encircled in the folds of the "Red, White and Blue." The frontispiece is entitled "A Patriot's Vision," and shows a veteran watching his grandson's Forth-of-July sport, while on the flag, floating above him, is a representation of one of the famous battles of the American Republic.

In addition to the Japanese novel, by John Luther Long, in Lippincott's for July there are also valuable and timely papers contributed by the following well-known writers: Anne Hollingsworth Wharton's first of two articles on "The Saloon in Old Philadelphia;" Sara Y. Stephenson, on "What are Women Striving For?" Henry Wilton Thomas, on "The Building of a Trust;" Charles S. Clarke, on "A Practical Submarine Vessel" (The New Argonaut); George J. Varney, on "Self-propelled Street Vehicles," and Ernest Ingersoll, on "Small Deer;" Charles M. Skinner writes "The Cited: A Legend of Havana." James Whitcomb Riley's new poem, "A Song of the Road," has the true flavor of this popular writer's ability to touch the hearts of his readers.

A writer in the July Ladies' Home Journal calls to mind that one hundred years ago—August, 1799—the first campmeeting for religious worship was held in America. The site of this notable gathering is a short distance from Russellville, in the state of Kentucky. The earlier campmeetings, it is shown by the Journal's article, were formerly conducted irrespective of denominational lines, but the form of worship soon became, and has since remained, a Methodist institution.

ALVORD.

Charlotte H. Alvord was born in Red Bluff, Cal., Dec. 6, 1874; died June 21, 1899. She joined the Christian Church in November, 1889, and died in the triumphs of a living faith. She graduated in the State Normal School at San Jose in June 1895, and was immediately chosen a teacher in the public schools of Red Bluff, which position she held at her death. She possessed rare abilities of mind and heart, and will be deeply mourned by a large circle of friends Her father and mother and two sisters have our tenderest sympathy and earnest prayers in this sad hour of affliction. The funeral was conducted by the writer. S. S. MURPHY.

Red Bluff, Cal., June 23, 1899.

CROCKER.

Died in Bellview Valley, Mo., June 17, 1899, A. M. Croker, aged 62 years, eight months and three days. He had been a member of the Christian Church for years. He was buried at Goodwater, June 19, The funeral was preached by Elder E. Pugh. He leaves a wife and eight children, four sisters, four brothers; one in Oregon; and a host of friends to mourn his loss. He was loved by all that knew him.

E. PUGH.

JOHNSON.

Margaret Ennis was born near Bowling Green, Warren Co., Ky., Oct. 1, 1812, and moved with her parents to Missouri in 1826. She was married to Mr. Johnson in the year 1829, and survived him 32 years. Four children survive her. A son in Eastern Oregon, and three married daughters near home and a host of children and grandchildren. Sister Johnson united with the old Republican church early in life and moved her membership to Higginsville, when the church was moved here. She continued strong in faith to the end and was ready and willing to go at the call of the Master. The writer served at her funeral, which was very largely attended, on the 24th instant. She was laid to rest in the old Republican cemetery, where many of the pioneers of Lafayette County, are at rest.

ANDREW SCOTT.

Higginsville, Mo., June 24, 1899.

TATUM.

Mrs. America (Speer) Tatum was born in Middle Tennessee, October, 1836; became a Christian in early life; was married to N. E. Tatum in 1861; was the mother of six children, four of whom, with her husband, survive, and entered into perfect rest June 22, 1899. She was a sister of W. S. Speer, formerly U. S. consul at Zanzibar, and cousin of J. K. Speer, a well-known preacher in the Christian Church. The family came to Bowie, Texas, less than a year ago, from which place she departed for the home where sickness and death are no more. The funeral services were conducted by the writer who, at the time, was engaged in evangelistic services in Bowie.

Salt Lake City, June 26.—Two added by lettey since last report.—W. H. BAGBY.

ALABAMA.

Birmingham.—Four added here last Lord's day; 20 since last report. One at Coal City.—O. P. SPIEGEL.

GEORGIA.

Atlanta, June 26.—We report three confessions at First Christian Church yesterday; one a Chinaman.—C. P. WILLIAMSON, pastor.

FLORIDA.

Jacksonville, June 12.—Seven confessions recently; 185 new members in all. Outlook very bright. Church building has been enlarged.—L. P. VORDERMARK.

MISSISSIPPI.

Water Valley, June 28.—Five weeks' services here, conducted by J. A. Stephens, state evangelist, resulted in 25 accessions to the new church, which had only three members to begin with. A church building will be erected.—Globe-Democrat.

INDIANA.

Franklin, June 19.—The childrens' exercises at Christian Chapel was crowned with a burial of a queenly mother in Christ.—WILLIS M. CUNNINGHAM.

Franklin, June 26.—At our morning meeting yesterday three made the good confession at Hartsville.—WILLIS M. CUNNINGHAM.

MISSOURI.

E. Pugh writing from Bellview reports two confessions at a meeting held 20 miles from Bellview.

We had seven additions yesterday, three by letter, one by statement and three by confession. This makes 19 in the past three Sundays and 63 for the year so far.—W. F. TURNER.

KANSAS.

Columbus, June 26.—Ten additions at regular services here June 25th—9 by confession and one reclaimed; 20 since May 7th. During the same time we have raised about $30 for missions here. My second son, Claude, who is pastor at Milton, Iowa, has had about 60 additions since January 1st. My oldest son, who is on his third year at Stuart, Iowa, is having frequent additions there. By God's grace we hope to bear some humble part in bringing about the desired results this Jubilee Year.—M. MCFARLAND, pastor.

CALIFORNIA.

I began work here last November. The congregation numbers about 135. We have had 10 additions; three by letter and seven by obedience. Our old house is too small and we are building a new one that is to be completed by the first of September. Will cost about $7,500 finished and furnished. We have an active C. E. and Ladies' Aid that are contributing to the building fund. There will be near $2,000 to be raised at the dedication. The house will be the best in town, and the brethren are making sacrifices to build it; we have no wealthy members. We think the prospect good to build up a strong church here when we get into the new house. Our contributions to mission work since I came amount to more than $60.—S. S. MURPHY.

IOWA.

Vinton, June 27.—Forty to date in the Vinton tabernacle meeting. Seats for 800. Interest growing.—D. D. BOYLE, evangelist.

Waterloo, June 22.—Sunday school raised $7.76. The Ladies' Aid Society served meals during G. A. R. encampment, which added about $90 to their treasury. Three added since last report. Our pastor, Bro. C. A. Lockhart, is an enthusiastic worker.—E. C.

Stuart, June 26.—There have been seven accessions here in June at regular services. Four by primary obedience and three by statement.—E. T. MCFARLAND.

Woodbine, June 26.—Our meeting began yesterday with fine audiences and splendid interest. My brother, J. E. Pickett, of Boulder, Colorado, will be here to-morrow to assist us for a few weeks.—C. L. PICKETT.

ILLINOIS.

Barry, June 28.—Baptized four last Sunday afternoon and had four additions the week before.—J. D. DABNEY.

Galesburg, June 26.—Five additions here yesterday. Fifty-four since April first. Work very encouraging.—C. H. WHITE.

DuQuoin, June 26.—Five additions yesterday at regular services. Our work grows.—W. H. KERN

Rantoul, June 26.—One addition at Bethany near Rantoul, and $20.25 for Home Missions. H. H. PETERS.

Dorchester, June 26.—Our Sangamon gospel tent meeting closed after three weeks' hard labor resulting in 18 additions; 16 by baptism. Instead of forming a new organization at that place we thought best to strengthen the Antioch congregation by having the converts unite with that church. The Antioch church is one of the best missionary churches in Macon County. Our apportionment has been more than doubled. At the Children's Day exercises yesterday we raised $20.85. On account of evangelistic work I have closed my labors with the Antioch church. The congregation is governed by "scriptural elders," who understand the Lord's business. Much may be said of the faithful and consecrated workers in the church, but God knows them and that is enough. This church has done much toward the growth and strength of the Disciples. It is the old home and starting-point of Bros. B. B. and J. Z. Tyler, Lichtenberger, Heckel and others. One young man who united yesterday with the church (one of the converts) has decided to enter Eureka College and prepare himself for the ministry. All the departments of the church are in good working order. Bro. Guy B. Williamson is still with me and will conduct the singing in my next meeting. He is a Christian gentleman and a good singing evagelist. Yours in the Master's work.—JOHN G. M. LUTTHENBERGER.

Hot Weather Dyspepsia

Thousands Suffer From It at This Season of the Year.

Hot weather dyspepsia may be recognized by the following symptoms: Depression of spirits, heaviness and pain in the stomach after meals, loss of flesh and appetite, no desire for food, bad taste in the mouth, especially in the morning, wind in stomach and bowels, irritable disposition, nervous weakness, weariness, costiveness, headache, palpitation, heartburn. It is a mistake to treat such troubles with "tonics," "blood purifiers," "cathartics," "pills," because the whole trouble is in the stomach. It is indigestion or dyspepsia, and nothing else.

All these symptoms rapidly disappear when the stomach is relieved, strengthened and cleansed by Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets. They should be taken after meals, and a few carried in the pocket to be used whenever any pain or distress is felt in the stomach. They are prepared only for stomach troubles.

Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets are indorsed by such physicians as Dr. Harlandson, Dr. Jennison and Dr. Mayer, because they contain the natural digestive acids and fruit essences which when taken into the stomach cause the prompt digestion of the food before it has time to ferment and sour, which is the cause of the mischief.

Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets are pleasant to take and unequaled for invalids, children and every person afflicted with imperfect digestion. It is safe to say they will cure any form stomach trouble, except cancer of the stoma

Nearly all druggists sell Stuart's Dyspep a Tablets, full-sized packages at 50 cents. A book on stomach troubles and thousands of testimonials sent free by addressing F. A. Stuart Co., Marshall, Mich.

"NEVER BURN A CANDLE AT BOTH ENDS." Don't go on drawing vitality from the blood without doing something to replace it. Hood's Sarsaparilla gives nerve, mental and digestive strength by enriching and vitalizing the blood.

HOOD'S PILLS are non-irritating, mild, effective.

Notes from the Mission Fields.

James Ware reports four more conversions. Recently he has baptized one family at Tseu Saw and another at Shanghai.

Twelve of the boys in the Nankin College are voluntarily keeping "the morning watch." A number of the pupils have become Christians this year.

The recent convention of Chinese missionaries was the best in the history of that mission. The reports for the year were gratifying. The convention was interesting and stimulating.

Frank Garrett reports that the new church building in Nankin is under way. The missionaries are very much rejoiced to think they will soon have a commodious and convenient house of worship.

Dr. Drummond, of India, is kept busy with his medical and evangelistic work. He has a number of patients among the Brahmins. The work among the higher castes seems to be increasing. Dr. Drummond enjoys the work very much. He is glad that he is among the chosen few who are permitted to engage in the service of Christ in India.

M. B. Madden, of Japan, has recently held meetings in six different towns. He reports seven baptisms and many enquirers. He sold ten copies of the Scriptures. Quiet, orderly and attentive audiences met the workers and good seed was sown in their hearts.

A. L. Chapman writes that a man and his wife and daughter came from Nicomedia to be baptized. This man has spent several years in America and afterwards returned and heard Mr. Shishmanian preach. While studying the Bible in his own home he became convinced of his duty to obey the gospel. The three were baptized.

T. T. Arnold writes that in addition to the work at Chu Cheo, consisting of two services on Sundays, dispensary work three days in a week, he visits Lu Hoh once a month at least. He has morning and evening services among the servants in the compound, and an inquirers' class on Wednesday. In spare hours he edits a little paper entilted the Christian Banner. The natives are being trained to habits of independence and self-reliance. There are special meetings held for this purpose.

What We Plead For

The Christian-Evangelist pleads for:

The Christianity of the New Testament, taught by Christ and his Apostles, versus the theology of the creeds taught by fallible men—the world's great need.

The divine confession of faith on which Christ built his church, versus human confessions of faith on which men have split the church.

The unity of Christ's disciples, for which he so fervently prayed, versus the divisions in Christ's body, which his apostles strongly condemned.

The abandonment of sectarian names and practices, based on human authority, for the common family name and the common faith, based on divine authority, versus the abandonment of scriptural names and usages for partisan ends.

The hearty co-operation of Christians in efforts of world-wide beneficence and evangelization, versus petty jealousies and strifes in the struggle for denominational pre-eminence.

The fidelity to truth which secures the approval of God, versus conformity to custom to gain the favor of men.

The protection of the home and the destruction of the saloon, versus the protection of the saloon and the destruction of the home.

For the right against the wrong;
For the weak against the strong;
For the poor who've waited long
For the brighter age to be.
For the truth, 'gainst superstition,
For the faith, against tradition,
For the hope, whose glad fruition
Our waiting eyes shall see.

THE EXILED PROPHET

By J. G. ENCELL

For 60 Days We Offer This Book For $1.00, Postpaid

This book is of especial interest to Sunday-school teachers just now. Some of the Sunday-school lessons for the third quarter of 1899 are taken from the Book of Daniel, and the first seventy pages of "The Exiled Prophet" contain an Essay on the Book of Daniel, written by the well-known author and Bible scholar, Dr. D. R. Dungan. This essay will explain the Prophecy of Daniel, and should be read and studied by the Sunday-school teachers of to-day. Having read this they will be prepared to present the Sunday-school lessons in the present quarter to their classes in an acceptable manner. In addition to Dr. D. R. Dungan's explanation of Daniel the book is an able treatise on Revelation, the author of which has devoted many years of study and investigation to what many think is a "Sealed Book."

The book embraces 245 pages, neatly bound in cloth and profusely illustrated. Send orders to

Gospel Melodies

Revised and Enlarged

Designed for the Use of All Christians in Public and Private Devotions

In offering this, the REVISED AND ENLARGED EDITION OF GOSPEL MELODIES, to the public, we confidently believe that the many excellent features of the work will recommend it to all who love good, pure words, and music adapted to their expression.

The typography is large and clear, with words printed between the music staves, so that both words and music may be seen at the same time.

An important feature of the book is the brief, practical treatise on the subject of learning to sing by note, as found in the thirteen pages of rudiments, prepared by a teacher of experience.

The "Supplement" contains a large number of the very best old standard songs, without which any book designed for use in public worship must seem incomplete.

The authors have earnestly endeavored to make this book worthy the patronage of the public.

WHAT THEY SAY ABOUT THE REVISED AND ENLARGED EDITION OF

GOSPEL MELODIES.

We like the book very much.—DR. J. R. WHITE.

Dear Sir and Bro.—I received "G. M." by this afternoon's mail. It's in good condition, and my sister is greatly pleased with the same—much more than with any other book we ever had.—ED. CABS.

Dear Sir:—Salem church purchased a supply of "Gospel Melodies" from your agent. All are highly pleased with the new books.—MISS BELLE CLISER.

I think your song books are the best I ever used.—E. Y. GAY.

I have examined your new song book, "Gospel Melodies Revised," and can heartily say it is the best book for revivals, Lord's day school worship and family circle, I have ever seen. The large, clear print, with the words between the staves, make it very convenient. The pure words and music adapted to their expression are indeed cheering and inspiring to all lovers of music. I cheerfully recommend to all who want a book next to the Bible, "Gospel Melodies."—D. M. CLISER.

PRICE.—Boards, Singly, by Mail, 40 Cents.

CURRENT EVENTS.

Whatever view one may hold as to the wisdom of Mr. Bryan's political principles, there is no denying his immense popularity and the remarkable hold he has upon the people. It was only a short time ago that his political enemies were telling us how dead Mr. Bryan was, politically, and how utterly out of the question as a candidate of his party he would be when the time for the next Presidential campaign should draw near. It does not appear, however, if we are to believe the reports concerning the manner in which he is received everywhere, that his defeat in the last campaign has affected his popularity with his friends. What is the secret of Mr. Bryan's hold upon the people? Leaving his politics out of the problem, as outside of our province, we believe his personal qualities have much to do with his influence over men, including many who belong to other political faiths. The Times-Herald, a Republican journal, pays the following tribute to Mr. Bryan as a man: "At one time there was a very natural disposition to ascribe his prestige to a single speech, but the speech was merely his opportunity. Since delivering it he has proved his powers as an orator many times, and he has stood the closer scrutiny of the public, which is attracted but not dominated by oratory. We have known men even more brilliant on the platform who never got beyond the part of performers in a campaign show. With all their ability they could not command respect because they did not possess those moral qualities which the American people desire in their political leaders of the Presidental class. Mr. Bryan is clean of speech and act. He has nothing to explain. He is honest in his convictions. What he lacks most is a lively humor, and this sometimes does a politician more harm than good, as S. S. Cox used to confess ruefully. Much as Americans enjoy a joke, they prefer serious men in high places."

The trial of Capt. Dreyfus has been fixed to begin at Rennes, August 10th. There are hints that he may still be found guilty, of improprieties at leat, and given a short sentence; but the statement from the anti-Dreyfus element, that nothing short of a sentence of guilt in some degree, followed by a short imprisonment, will satisfy the army, is sufficient explanation of all such rumors. The attorneys of Capt. Dreyfus have expressed themselves confident of his acquittal. It is now known that when Capt. Dreyfus arrived in France he was on the verge of insanity; but proper treatment and care has rescued him, and he is now fully conscious of the situation. The treatment he received while on Devil's Island, if as reported, was sufficient to drive any man into madness, but this, too, is to be investigated and will doubtless prove a further revelation of the diabolism of his conspirators, who, it appears, were seeking to accomplish his death in the most barbarous way conceivable. At the command of ex-Ministers Lebon and Guillian, Dreyfus was put in irons and for two months suffered indescribable agonies. But for this it is said that Lebon and Guillian, the alleged instigators of his torture, must give an account to an aroused indignant nation.

A great calamity has recently fallen upon a large district of country in Central Texas. On the 26th of June a heavy rain began and continued for four days. The rainfall in this time is probably unprecedented in the history of the United States, reaching at several points as much as 20 inches. As a result of this tremendous downpour of water, a district of land along the courses of the Brazos and Colorado Rivers, 50 miles wide and 500 miles long, was almost entirely submerged. The results as a matter of course were appalling in the extreme. It is supposed that hundreds of persons were drowned and that the loss of livestock, crops and railroad properties will aggregate the vast sum of twenty millions of dollars. Besides those drowned in the flood, the most of whom were negroes, it is said that many more will perish before they can be rescued. A call has been made for aid for these sufferers and all that can be done by the people of Texas, the state, the United States government assisting, is being done, but the flood is continuing so long that many will perish before sustenance can be put within their reach. Nor will this relief work be needed for the present only. The crops of hundreds of families, perhaps thousands, have been destroyed, and owing to the lateness of the season they will have to be fed and clothed until another planting season returns. The loss to railroads in bridges and roadbed is estimated in the millions of dollars and that of livestock, crops and other properties at from fifteen to twenty millions. The city of Galveston has been completely isolated from the state by the flood and many other cities almost without communication with the outer world. The devastation is so great and so appalling that the results will not be fully known until the flood has entirely subsided. The known dead now exceed one hundred persons.

News of the devastation and ruin wrought by the Texas flood becomes more and more appalling. The known dead now exceed two hundred persons, while thousands of families are in a starving condition. Not less than 40,000 persons have been driven from their homes and are in a helpless, dependent state. The government has issued large quantities of rations for their present distress. The people and state of Texas are doing all in their power to relieve their condition and thousands of dollars are pouring into the state from other states for their relief. The loss in crops is now placed at $40,000,000. The lose in cotton alone is now estimated at $20,000,000. The inundation covered about 32,500 square miles of territory. And now that the flood is subsiding, a new danger has overtaken the refuges. The malaria from decaying vegetation has caused an outbreak of sickness that is of an alarming character, owing to the great crowds huddled together in places for shelter or safety from the flood. There are many places in the flooded district that have not yet been heard from but where there has been great destruction to life and property and great distress to the survivors. The railroads are beginning repair, to but it will require weeks and even months to put their roads back in their condition before the flood.

Bishop John P. Newman died on the afternoon of July 5, in Saratoga, N. Y., of paralysis, complicated by pneumonia. In the death of Bishop Newman, the Methodist Episcopal Church has lost a man of more than national reputation, as well as one of its foremost leaders. The funeral services were held at the First Methodist Episcopal Church of Saratoga, Bishop Foster, an intimate friend to Bishop Newman, delivering the funeral address, but the remains were taken to Mechanicsville, not far from Saratoga, for interment. Owing to the prominence of Bishop Newman in the religious and civil affairs of our nation we give the following brief sketch of his life as it appeared in the Globe-Democrat of this city, July 6:

John Philip Newman was born in New York City on September 1, 1826. He completed his education at Cazenova (N. Y.) Seminary, and, after taking a course of theology, entered the Methodist Episcopal ministry in 1849. In 1860 he went to Europe, where he studied, and traveled in Syria and Egypt. Returning, he filled pastorates in Hamilton, Albany and New York City. In 1864 he went as a missionary into the Southern states, where he remained till 1869. From that date till 1874 he was chaplain of the United States Senate.

While in Washington he organized the Metropolitan Memorial Methodist Church, of which he became pastor.

In 1874 he was made inspector of the United States Consuls in Asia. In 1876 he returned to Washington as pastor of the church he had founded. In 1879 he was transferred to the Central Church, New York City. In 1882 he became pastor of the Madison Avenue Congregational Church, but resigned two years later. In 1885 he returned to the Metropolitan Memorial Church in Washington. Three years later he was consecrated bishop of the Methodist Episcopal Church.

He was a member of the commission which tried to unite the North and the South divisions of the church, and was a member of the Ecumenical Council in London in 1881. He also sat in three of the General Conferences of the church. He delivered funeral orations over Gen. Grant and Gen. Logan, and ranked among the greatest of pulpit orators. He was the author of several books—"From Dan to Bersheba," "Babylon and Nineveh," "Christianity Triumphant," "Evenings with the Prophets," "America for Americans." He was given the degree of D. D. by Rochester University and Otterbein University, and was made LL. D. by Grant Memorial University in 1881.

A decision has been rendered by the supreme court of Michigan which is destined to provoke no little discussion in political circles. Under the leadership of Governor Pingree of that state the agitation of the municipal ownership of street railways has been carried on until the legislature passed an act authorizing a commission to appraise and purchase the street railways of Detroit in behalf of that city. It is this act, known as the McLeod law, that the supreme court of Michigan has just pronounced unconstitutional. The section of the constitution upon which the decision is based is the following:

"The state shall not be a party to or interested in any work of internal improvement, nor engaged in carrying on any such work except in the expenditure of grants to the state of lands or other property."

While this clause does not directly prohibit cities from owning street railways, the court holds that, if the state cannot engage in such undertakings because of danger to its citizens, the citizens of a city, an integral part of the state, cannot do so. This would seem to forbid a city in that state to own and control waterworks and lighting plants, but the court makes an exception of these. It says:

"Municipal ownership of electric lighting and waterworks plants is justified as an exercise of police power, but municipal ownership of railroads cannot be authorized on any such grounds."

It remains to be seen whether the people will recognize this distinction between the municipal ownership of lighting and waterworks plants and the owning by the city of street railways. Meanwhile, and until the constitution is amended, Governor Pingree's scheme of municipal ownership of street railways is blocked by this decision.

It is easier often to ask questions than to answer them. The Porto Rican commissioners, in a pamphlet which they have just issued, ask the following questions concerning trade relations between the United States and Porto Rico:

"Why is the American flour, instead of being admitted in Porto Rico ports free of duty, burdened with the same duty ($1 per 100 kilos) which it paid when Porto Rico was Spanish and the Spanish miller had to be protected?

"Why are American meat, and butter, and beans, and vegetables, when taken to Porto Rico, burdened with import duties, to the detriment both of the American farmer and the Porto Rican consumer?

"Can it be doubted for a moment that the abolition of all duties on American merchandise imported in Porto Rico would favor the American farm and factory, as Mr. Blaine put it, and do great good to the Porto Rican people?

"And why not admit free of duty in the United States the Porto Rican sugar and all other Porto Rican products?

"Has it not been proven in the investigation now in progress before the industrial commission about trusts that the scarcity of Cuban sugar, due to the Cuban revolution, has compelled the refiners to go to Austria and Germany to get what they needed? Was it not better and nearer and cheaper (were it not for the duties) to go and get it in Porto Rico?

"And if it is true and undeniable that with free trade between Porto Rico and the continental portions of the United States, the trade of the United States in pork, in beef, in flour, in lumber, in salt, in iron, in shoes, in calico, in furniture, in machinery and in thousands of American articles would be enlarged to immense proportions, and the production of sugar, coffee, tobacco, cocoa, etc., in Porto Rico would be immensely developed, why not grant it at once?

"Who is going to be benefited by the establishment of a customs barrier between section and section of the American Union?"

Of course, the only answer to these questions is, the island must have revenues with which to carry forward needed improvements, but this does not anwer all the questions satisfactorily.

THE CROWNING FEATURE OF A GREAT MOVEMENT.

The church historian of the future must undoubtedly assign an important place among the religious forces for the renaissance of the church to that religious movement which had its origin in the first decade of the present century, and announced for its aim the restoration of New Testament Christianity. In the emphasis that movement has laid upon the authority of the Scriptures, dispensing with the need of any authoritative human creed; upon the Divinity and Lordship of Jesus Christ, the center of the Christian system; the essential unity of the church and the apostolic method of evangelization, it has rendered no small contribution to that progress in religious thought and activity which has marked the last quarter of the present century. That these are all elements that must enter into the triumphant church of the future, few, if any, will question.

It is a noteworthy fact, too, that these cardinal features are very closely associated with Pentecost, which, despite the opposing view of Prof. McGiffert, we must continue to believe was the birthday of the Church of Christ. The exalted and coronated Christ, the appeal to the Holy Scriptures in proof of His divine claims; the presentation of the terms of salvation under the newly coronated King—all these are associated in a very striking way with that notable Pentecost which was designated by Peter as "the beginning." It was a great point of advantage in making an original survey of Christianity that the men who inaugurated this movement found their beginning-place and time at Jerusalem, and on the day of Pentecost.

But there is one event associated with that day of which we have not probably made enough, namely, the descent of the Holy Spirit in a new and special way, and the promise of Peter, that the gift of the Spirit was for all, both Jew and Gentile, who would accept Christ. As this was the crowning feature of Pentecost and of the great religious movement which had its origin there, so we believe it must be a crowning feature of any religious reformation whose aim is to restore the Christianity of Christ. It is certain that the church originating on Pentecost would not have achieved the success it did without the Holy Spirit. It is equally certain that no religious movement can accomplish an enduring religious reform without this divine Agent. As Dr. Arthur T. Pierson says, "The crowning external revelation of the Word of God is the doctrine of the Holy Spirit, and the corresponding internal revelation of the Spirit in and to the believer is the crowning experience of the divine life and love." In an article on "The Pentecostal Movement," in the Religious Review of Reviews, Dr. Pierson, referring to the willingness of God to give the Holy Spirit to them that ask Him, and the indisposition on the part of many to seek the Holy Spirit, says:

How immeasurably important, then, that every disciple should know his own need of the Spirit, should feel the impossibility of any compensation for such a lack, should understand how ready God is to give the Spirit, and should pray in faith for the gift!

There is one ditch into which many believers practically fall, so that they never get to the firm resting-place of actual reception of this crowning gift of God. They say the Spirit of God was on the day of Pentecost given fully, finally and to all believers, and hence is not to be sought or asked in prayer as an unbestowed boon. In a sense this is true, but in another sense it is a snare. There was on the day of Pentecost an outpouring of the Spirit on all believers. The new dispensation of the Holy Spirit was then inaugurated, and we are not, therefore, to look for any such bestowment of the Spirit. But individually we find disciples filled with the Spirit subsequently, and in Ephesians 5:18 we find a distinct command, "Be filled with the Spirit." There must, therefore, be some true sense in which we are to claim, receive and avail ourselves of this last and greatest gift of God. As Christ was once offered for all, a sacrifice for sin, but every new believer takes Christ as a Savior, and so makes practically available the work of Christ for sinners, so the Holy Spirit was once for all given, but every believing child of God accepts and receives the fullness of this gift by faith, and practically it is to him as though the Spirit had been specially given to him.

Perhaps there are no people who have been more inclined to fall into the "ditch" to which Dr. Pierson refers than those known as Disciples of Christ. They have been inclined to argue that the Holy Spirit, in the very plenitude of his endowments bestowed on the disciples at Pentecost, has made it unnecessary for believers in subsequent times to seek any special endowment of the Spirit, seeing that this miraculous outpouring on Pentecost qualified the apostles to perform their duties as embassadors for Christ, both in making known the way of salvation for the unsaved and in their directions for Christian growth and development. But this argument loses sight of the fact that the Holy Spirit, besides the miraculous powers He conferred upon the apostles, accomplished for them other things which we need as much as they.

Besides that, there is the distinct command of which Dr. Pierson reminds us, given by Paul to the Ephesians, to "be filled with the Spirit." Let us not fritter away the meaning of this divine injunction by any discussion as to whether this phrase is equivalent to baptism in the Holy Spirit, or enduement with the Holy Spirit. Enough for us that we are exhorted to "be filled with the Spirit." It is obvious that in order to obey this divine requirement, there must be some earnest seeking and asking and preparation for the Holy Spirit. Great spiritual blessings like this are not to be obtained without an earnest desire and purpose on our part. In vain do we go to Jerusalem and to the day of Pentecost for the great doctrine concerning the coronation of Christ, and for the way of salvation, if we tarry not for enduement with power from on high. In vain is all our knowledge concerning the Scriptures and conditions of discipleship, if this knowledge be not vitalized by the Spirit. Our religious movement, so fruitful in good results for the world, can never achieve its highest success until it adds this crowning feature to its other Pentecostal gifts the doctrine of the Holy Spirit.

Many of us lament the lack of power in our spiritual life. We feel that our influence is not as potent for good as it should be. Others are not constrained by our example to glorify God to the extent that they ought to be. Is not the explanation of this fact to be found in that Scripture statement in John 7:38, where Jesus says, "He that believeth on me, as the Scripture hath said, from within him shall flow rivers of living water." John adds, "But thus spake He of the Spirit which they that believed on Him should receive. For the Holy Spirit was not yet given; because Jesus was not yet glorified." What we need, then, to make our inner life a fountain of living waters, a source of spiritual rivers, is the Holy Spirit, promised to every believer in Christ who desires the gift earnestly enough to seek for it.

In a recent editorial we suggested, as the only adequate remedy for a petrified conservatism and for a false liberalism, a deeper spiritual life. But the only way to attain such depth of spiritual life is through the indwelling of the Holy Spirit. We believe, therefore, that the crowning feature of our great movement is to lay a much greater emphasis upon the work and mission of the Holy Spirit as Christ's representative in the church to-day, and the actual receiving of power through the Spirit to accomplish the great work which has been committed to us. We ask, therefore, for a careful restudy of this subject, and above all that we seek "to be filled with the Spirit," to the end that we may be better fitted for service.

A NEW PROBLEM.

This problem is of special interest to men who are interested in the prosperity of the church universal; it possesses but little interest to the mere denominationalist or to the narrow-minded sectarian.

There is a tendency on the part of men thoroughly trained for the work of the ministry to abandon the pulpit and the work of the pastorate. The recent acceptance of the presidency of Brown University by the Rev. W. H. P. Faunce, for a number of years the successful pastor of the Fifth Avenue Baptist Church, New York, is the latest and one of the most striking illustrations of this tendency. Dr. Faunce is reported to have said that for some years an invisible tide has been bearing him onward toward the educational world. It is only a question of time when Dr. Henry Van Dyke will leave the pastorate of the Brick Presbyterian Church, Fifth Avenue, New York, in which he has for a number of years been remarkably successful, for a college or university professorship. The Leland Stanford University not long since attempted to entice an Oakland Congregational pastor from his sacred vocation, and almost succeeded. These are illustrations of this manifest tendency which readily come to the mind of the writer. The men here named are unusually well qualified to preach the Word to persons of culture. Men like Moody cannot reach with their preaching educated men and women. Such persons, not a few, who are already under the influence of the gospel, give money to uneducated men to supply them with the necessaries of life while they tell the good news to their kind; but they are not themselves moved by nor even personally interested in the preaching of unlettered men. There are men and women—religious men and women—who assist in giving such preachers as D. L. Moody a liberal financial support because they think that this character of man, and his kind of preaching, are well adapted to reach and influence for good a large part of our population. Personally they are not interested in his preaching, and doubtless in their hearts wonder that any are interested and made better by such ignorant and distorted presentations of the gospel of God's grace.

With the tendency here noted, as an existing and growing fact—the tendency on the part of cultured men to abandon the pulpit and the work of the pastorate—the question arises: How can the men and women of education and genuine culture be won to the Christ and held in their allegiance to the King or kings and Lord of lords? This is one phase—and an important one—of the new problem.

Ours is a time in which special attention is given to the ignorant, the morally unfortunate, the socially and spiritually degraded. This statement is particularly true of the church. Social, college and university settlements among the degraded in our great cities have become, in a sense, and to a degree, a fad. Good form now requires that some special interest—at least assumed—shall be manifested toward those who are peculiarly depraved in mind and morals. This is on the part of the church. The same thing is true of the state. Special legislation in behalf of the so-called workingman is a characteristic of the present day.

But what about those who, for the time, are financially and otherwise prosperous? If they are not openly condemned by teachers of religion, in their public discours, seare they not treated in many instsnces as if they are hopeless cases? The gospel can and does save the liar, the thief, the drunkard, the debauchee; but how often do we, apparantly, think that the gospel is not the power of God to save those who live in mansions and are served by men in livery. Not all of these, it is true, are persons of culture; many of them, however, are. It is probable, also, that some of them are liars, thieves, drunkards and debauchees, who need the gospel quite as much as do those for whose salvation from sin special efforts are made. The rich certainly need a portion of our sympathy and a per cent. of our sanctified energy, that they may be turned to the Christ. By the preaching of the Word are men—rich and poor, educated and ignorant, cultured and rude—to be turned from Satan to the living God. But the message of redemption must be presented to persons of education by men of eduation. Hence the fact above stated concerning a tendency constitutes a problem.

One of our great daily papers not long since continued, on the editorial page, an essay under the heading: "Ministers Leaving the Pulpit." A recent issue of the Congregationalist, commenting on the remark of Dr. Faunce, quoted above—that for some years an invisible tide had been bearing him onward toward the educational world—said:

"The same tide is taking the ablest clergymen of the country away from their church pulpits many Sundays in the year to serve as preachers at colleges and universities. It has swept or ultimately will sweep Henry Van Dyke from New York City to Princeton University; it apparantly is about to take Professor George Harris from Andover Seminary to Amherst, and the latest prey of its avaricious clutch is the Rev. Charles R. Brown, of Oakland, Cal., who has been elected chaplain of Leland Stanford, Jr., University. We do not know the precise terms of this offer or whether he will accept it. We simply chronicle the fact that the richly endowed, ambitious centers of learning in the country are more and more demanding the partial if not entire service of the brightest, most vital and inspiring of the preachers of the country, and the unendowd church, with its hypercritical, exacting, unresponsive congregation, must not be surprised if the endowed university, with its eager, free, responsive congregation, wins in the race."

Assuming that there is such a tendency, how are we to account for it. There must be some reason for this tide. What is the reason? A writer, wrestling with this question, says:

"The fact of the matter is that, either consciously or unconsciously, the modern clergyman has modified his views of the ministry in its relation to the so-called secular activities of life. It is coming to be more and more believed that as the universe is one there is realy no line of demarkation between the sacred and the secular, and therefore all work is holy, to use the old theological word, and all callings ought in some sort to have a solemn religious sanction. To the minister who gets to thinking that way about life there cannot be any impassable chasm between the specialized work he is doing as an officer of the church and the specialized work some other man is doing as a teacher or an editor. Does he need to be solemnly set apart to his work? Very well, then; so also does the other man; for what he does may be quite as important in its effect on the race as is the work of the ordained minister. In other words, the tendency of thought in the churches to-day is to invest all vocations and all work with the same sense of religious obligation that of so pre-eminently surrounds the minister and his work. From this point of view all work is sacred and all service is divine."

Do these words contain the answer to the question last propounded—the question as to the reason why men of superior culture have a tendency to abandon the pulpit and the work of the pastorate?

Another has been given. It is that "the spirit of investigation so prevalent in the churches to-day has driven out of active ministerial life many clergymen who find themselves unable any longer to accept the popular theology of their denomination.

It is a habit of some critics of the baser sort to denounce these men as infidels. But, in point of fact, they are most loyal believers in the fundamentals of Christianity. Their only offence is that they have tried to think out their creed for themselves rather than accept it blindly and ignorantly as it comes down the stream of tradition. Now Christian theology is a complex thing, involving innumerable questions of historical fact, as to which honest men may and do differ. But the pastor of a church generally finds himself in hot water if he antagonizes in any point the popular theology of his church. He believes that ultimately the church will come around to his way of thinking; but in the meanwhile, to avoid an unseemly squabble that might break up the parish, he quietly withdraws."

How much of truth is there in this answer to our question?

Hour of Prayer.

STRAINING OUT THE GNATS.

(Uniform Midweek Prayer-meeting Topic, July 17.)

(Matt. 12:1-7; 23:23-28.)

CENTRAL TRUTH: There is danger of allowing our zeal for the smaller things to eclipse our vision of the larger and more vital requirements of the gospel.

The Pharisees of the time of our Savior were, as a class, great sticklers for what they called the law, which included a great deal of the traditions of the elders, and the refinements of the Jewish doctors of law. They were very zealous for what was external in their religion, carrying out the law of tithes down to the small garden herbs, but they were correspondingly indifferent to the weightier matters of the law, such as justice and mercy and faith. It was on this account that Jesus often came into conflict with their teaching.

As illustrative of this tendency of the Pharisees, an incident is related in the first passage cited above of Jesus and his disciples passing through the fields of grain on the Sabbath day. Jesus himself was a lover of nature. He saw his Father's handiwork in waving harvest fields, in singing birds and in blooming flowers. The earth with Him was a great schoolhouse, full of object-lessons by which he taught spiritual truths. On this particular occasion His disciples were hungry, and plucking the heads of the wheat or barley, they rubbed them in their hands, blew away the chaff, and were eating the grain. This gave offense to the scrupulous Pharisees, who at once reminded the Master that His disciples were doing that "which is not lawful to do upon the Sabbath."

This was one of the subtle refinements, and was not the spirit of the law, as Jesus showed by his reference to the case of David where the necessity of hunger led him to eat of the showbread which, under ordinary circumstances, would not have been a lawful procedure for any except the priests. He reminds them that if they only understood what the Scripture meaneth which saith, "I desire mercy and not sacrifice," they would not have condemned the guiltless disciples for appeasing their hunger on the Sabbath. For, after all, temple and showbread and Sabbath day were made for man, and not man for these things.

Here was the fundamental mistake of the Pharisees, as it is of their spiritual descendants. They take that which was intended as helps for man and make them the end instead of the means, and subordinate man in his interests to external helps and regulations. In other words, they were and are externalists and superficialists.

In the second passage of the lesson, Jesus in language of unwonted sternness rebuked the Pharisees as hypocrites for manifesting such zeal for minor matters, while neglecting the weightier matters of the law. The minor matters they ought to have done, he tells them, "and not to have left the other undone." He applies to them what was perhaps a proverb to express this tendency to be scrupulous about small things to the neglect of large things saying, "Ye blind guides, that strain out the gnats and swallow the camel!" He follows this with another denunciation for their disposition to cleanse the outside of the cup and of the platter, "but within are full of extortion and excess," and tells them to "cleanse first the inside of the cup and of the platter, that the outside thereof may become clean also." This same tendency to "outwardly appear righteous unto men," while inwardly they are "full of hypocrisy and iniquity," is further illustrated by reference to the "whited sepulchres" to which they are likened.

It is needful for us to ask in what way, if any, this Pharisaic tendency manifests itself in our time. We are all too well acquainted with the scrupulosity which is manifested by many professed Christians concerning certain minor things, while there is an utter lack of appreciation of more weighty and vital matters. Mr. Beecher once referred to a class of Christians who would be shocked at the idea of one blackening his shoes on the Lord's day, who had no scruples about blackening their neighbors' character on every other day in the week. A Scotch innkeeper is said to have refused a traveler the use of hot water to shave on the Lord's day, but when the traveler, in order to evade his landlord's scruples, called for hot water to make a punch, he secured it readily!

There are many church members now who are zealous in enforcing what they call discipline against young Christians who dance or indulge in some other form of fashionable amusement, who would never think of preferring charges against those who are addicted to intoxicants, to usury, to covetousness, to unfair dealing and the oppression of the poor. We are not justifying any sinful form of amusement, but are simply calling attention to the fact that the class of Christians to which we refer are straining at gnats and swallowing camels. It is often the case in all religious bodies that a difference of opinion concerning some favorite doctrine or practice involves the person holding it in greater reproach than the violation of the law of justice and mercy and truth.

It was characteristic of Jesus, as the world's greatest Teacher, to lay supreme emphasis upon the inner spiritual life; on the condition of the heart against all merely external forms and regulations. This same characteristic must apply to the teaching of all who recognize Jesus as the supreme authority in religion. It is possible that in seeking to correct the mistakes which have been made in the forms relating to ordinances we have neglected to lay sufficient emphasis upon the necessity of a pure heart and of right motives and of the ascendency of the inner and spiritual over the outward and formal. It is altogether right that we observe the right form of the ordinances, especially where these forms involve a meaning and symbolism of great value, but in so doing we are to avoid giving undue emphasis to that which is outward and of seeming to neglect that which is spiritual and vital.

PRAYER.

O God our Father, we do thank Thee for the gift of Christ, Thy dearly beloved Son, who came to show us Thy true nature, and what is true religion. We thank Thee for his sublime doctrine, for his supreme emphasis of the necessity of purity of heart, which is the foundation of our thoughts and of our actions, and the source of our character. Forbid, we pray Thee, that we should become mere formalists, satisfied with outward appearances, and with conforming to external regulations while we neglect the weightier matter of justice and mercy and faith. Deepen, we beseech Thee, our religious convictions and cleanse Thou the very thoughts of our hearts and the motives which govern our lives. Save us from formalism and from hypocrisy, and make us truly and spiritually thine, through Jesus Christ our Lord. Amen!

OR

MACATAWA MUSINGS.

The "Glorious Fourth" has come and gone with its usual accompaniments of firecrackers, pyrotechnic displays and bunting. It is less a day of formal celebration than it once was, and has become more of a general holiday, given up to excursions or quiet outings by families and private parties to escape the din of noise in the cities. We are in a sort of transition period as to our national birthday celebration. The old-fashioned spread-eagle oratory, which was at one time so freely indulged in on Fourth-of-July occasions, is out of date. We have not yet quite reached the point where the day is made the occasion of exalting our conceptions of patriotism and our duties of citizenship. The pulpit is in advance of the platform in its emphasis of this kind of celebration, but we hope to see the time when the day will be used extensively and universally for inculcating the sentiments of lofty patriotism, and in emphasizing those principles of honesty, integrity and purity upon which our national prosperity depends. It might be well used as a day for teaching history to the multitudes and interpreting it in the interest of a more faithful and enlightened citizenship.

We are having an "unusual" spell of weather here at Macatawa Park. For three days the clouds have hung over us, and except for short intervals the rain has come down steadily, sometimes in torrents and sometimes in a mist or drizzle, in which the air seems to be full of water. Such days have their inconveniences, but they are sufficiently rare here to make them tolerable. Moreover, there is something about rainy days, after all, that is far from unpleasant. There is a music in the pattering rain that calls up the memories of the long ago. Who does not remember the rainy days of his boyhood, especially if he was raised on the farm? One of the most beautiful things Mr. Beecher ever wrote was his description of a summer rain. The small garden farmers hereabouts had begun to complain a little of the dry weather and its effects upon vegetation, but for three days and nights the low-lying clouds have shed copious showers upon the earth, the lake for the most part has been covered with mists, and the trees are dripping their pearly teardrops as if in sympathy with the weeping clouds. The rain has sadly disturbed the program for the Fourth of July and interfered with the profits of the venders of thin lemonade, but it has, nevertheless, performed a useful function, no doubt, and when it passes away the skies will be all the clearer, the air all the purer and the vegetation all the fresher and more beautiful.

Day by day the population of the Park is increasing. The shutters on the cottages are rapidly coming down, the hotels seem to be doing a good business, and more people crowd about the docks, post office and grocery stores, and more rowboats, steam launches and sailing crafts are seen upon the lakes. The season at Macatawa is fully opened. Religious services were inaugurated at the Auditorium last Lord's day, with Sunday-school at three and preaching at four. The large number present at both these services is indicative of the character of people who make this place their summer resort. Prof. Graham Taylor, of the Chicago Theological Seminary, who, by the way, is erecting a very handsome cottage here, delivered a thoughtful discourse based on the words of Jesus in the seventeenth of John, "For their sakes I consecrate myself." A heavy rain in the afternoon prevented the usual beach service.

Our Macatawa Assembly will occur this year, as usual, in the early part of August. Our Brother H. L. Willett and J. C. Campbell, of the Congregationalists, who have so often led our Bible study here, and with such pleasure and profit to all who have attended, will be with us again this year, giving the forenoon lectures. Dr. Willett will be compelled to be absent one or two days of the Assembly, but his place on these days will be filled by Brother Van-Kirk, of the Disciples' Divinity House of the University of Chicago. The evenings during the Assembly will be occupied by popular lectures, illustrated by stereopticon. The program occupies the forenoon and evening only, leaving the afternoon free for fishing, boating or bathing. Those of our ministers who can spend only a limited time here at the Park would do well to arrange to take in the Assembly, which will not unduly tax their mental powers, and give them ample room for recreation. Besides, it only lasts from one Sunday until another. We have not yet received a copy of the program, but will publish it as soon as received.

After to-day we expect to be absent for four or five days, taking in the Endeavor Convention at Detroit, where we anticipate the pleasure of meeting a great many readers of the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST, as well as a great many other good Christian people whose misfortune it is not to read it. We shall be compelled to miss the first part of the convention in order to accomplish our weekly stint of editorial work, but we shall, no doubt, have the privilege of hearing more than we can remember, and much more than we can appropriate usefully. It is no small privilege to come in contact with so many consecrated Christian workers whose chief aim in life is to exalt Christ, and to make the world better by bringing it more under His control We expect a great convention at Detroit, and many notable deliverances on the living questions of to-day. We shall doubtless have something to say concerning this convention in later issues.

There comes to us across Lake Michigan the notes of preparation for the great Jubilee Convention at Cincinnati in October next. Committees are already at work getting everything in readiness for the great convocation, which will undoubtedly be the largest and most memorable in our history thus far. The matter of a large attendance is practically assured. Is it equally certain that the convention will be great in those spiritual qualities which alone can give it greatness in the sight of God? Shall we carry to the Jubilee Convention such a consecration of ourselves and our possessions to the service of God and man as will secure the blessing of God upon the convention? Are we making this feature of the convention a subject of earnest prayer? Would it not be well at some hour during the convention, if not at every morning hour, to have a consecration service in which we might pledge ourselves anew to God and to each other in a profounder consecration for future service than we have ever known? But before that, and as preparatory to it, there should be much earnest individual prayer for God's blessing to rest upon the convention, upon its work, upon the churches and upon the missionaries. It will take liberal giving and liberal praying, too, to make a great convention.

Questions and Answers.

An elder, who possesses as many of the qualifications for an elder as any one in the church, refuses to act as such until he is ordained, and quoted such passages as Acts 19:1-6 as the reason for his course. He believes that by the laying on of hands in ordination he will receive the Holy Spirit and power to perform the ordinances of the Lord's house. What should a young minister do in such case?

I. G. Norance.

There is no objection to ordination, and if the brother possesses the requisite qualifications for an elder, we would advise that he be ordained in the scriptural way. He is mistaken in his interpretation of the passage in Acts, and of the purpose of the laying on of hands, but he will, perhaps, find this out by a further experience and study of the Word of God. It is not necessary to have hands laid upon us in order to our reception of the Holy Spirit. That is the privilege of every believer, who by prayer and self-preparation seeks the gift of the Holy Spirit.

A young man, a member of the Christian Church, marries a young woman who is a Methodist, and as they move into a neighborhood where there is only a Methodist Church, the question arises as to what is his Christian duty under the circumstances. What would you advise? S.

It is the duty of a Christian to let his light shine at all times and under all circumstances. This young brother should pursue that course which will best reflect whatever light there may be in him. If he should stand aloof from the Christian people of the place and do nothing, his light would certainly be obscured. If he should unite with the Methodist Church, accepting its teaching and becoming a Methodist in name and aim and doctrine, he would not be letting his light shine as a simple Disciple of Christ who understands and has accepted the principles of a reformation which seeks to restore the simplicity and unity of the primitive church. We would, therefore, pursue neither of these courses. We would meet and worship with the Methodist Church, take such part in Christian work as they desired and as we could conscientiously perform, and let it be known to the whole church what we were in principle and why we could not fully identify ourselves with them. In this way he would show himself not a sectarian, but a Christian with convictions of truth and duty. If the life corresponded with this claim, it would not be long before others would be attracted by it, and in due course of time there would be a neucleus of believers willing to be Christians only, who could meet and worship and keep the ordinances of the Lord's house together.

1. Why do you suppose did Christ curse and cause the fig tree to wither for not bearing fruit out of season, as stated in Mark 11:13?

2. How do you account for the statement in John that Jesus bore the cross for himself, when the other Gospels all say it was borne by one Simon of Cyrene?

3. What are we to understand by Mark 4:12?

4. How soon will the American Standard New Testament be published?

W. P. Cadwell.

1. The blasting of the fig tree was intended, no doubt, as an object-lesson, to his disciples, teaching them the results of barren and fruitless lives. The mere leaves of profession will not suffice. There must be actual deeds, the fruit of righteousness, in our lives. It was probably to enforce this truth in a vivid way that the barren fig tree was cursed.

2. Both accounts are, no doubt, true. Jesus bore the cross himself until he fainted under its weight, then Simon of Cyrene was compelled to bear it for him to the place of crucifixion. John states one fact, the other gospels state the other also.

3. The passage referred to in the question states the purpose why Jesus spake in parables, the import of which is that the mere curiosity seekers hearing his parables would not understand them, but that those who are seeking the truth would inquire into the meaning of these parables, get hold of the lessons they intended to teach and be profited by them. The time was to come and did come when he no longer spake in parables.

4. The American Revised Bible, both Old and New Testaments, we understand is to be published during the present summer by the Nelson Bible Publishing Company of New York.

Necrology.

SOME GENERAL CHARACTERISTICS.

(2) His profound reverence for the Word of God may be distinctly emphasized as another ruling characteristic. He was not a book worshiper. He valued the Bible for what it contained. It was not the book itself, but the revelation in it, that commanded his supreme loyalty. It was the Word of God that revealed to him the adorable character whom he worshiped.

As proof that Mr. Campbell did not render any slavash service to a mere word-theory of inspiration, it is only necessary to state that he was among the first American biblical scholars to agitate the necessity for a revised version of our English Bible, and when there seemed nothing else practical, he published with emendations and alterations the version of George Campbell, Philip Dodridge and Jas. McKnight. This version was a rather free translation of many important passages, and was an attempt to give us our English Bible in our modern vernacular.

While, therefore, Mr. Campbell was no slavish literalist, this fact did not in any way weaken his great reverence for the Word of God. He believed with all his heart that the Bible contained God's spoken revelation to the world.

This fact made his faith in the Christian religion a living reality. He felt that his faith was supported by a firm foundation, and consequently he had no fears that any assault of infidelity could possibly finally succeed. I have never known a man whose confidence in the Bible was more supreme. It was this confidence which led him to make it the source of final appeal in all matters of religious controversy. With him a "thus saith the Lord," with respect to any important religious question, was the end of all discussion.

This fact gave the reformatory movement with which he was identified a distinct character, and differentiated it at once from all other religious movements. Luther's reformation was mainly a plea for liberty of conscience. It was a protest against the obstrusive interference of officialism in controlling the individual soul. Calvin's great work was a plea for the sovereignty of God in opposition to the works of supererogation, and Wesley contended for the responsibility of man for all the powers and opportunities that God has given him. While Mr. Campbell accepted all the good for which these three great men contended, he at the same time insisted upon the supreme authority of the Word of God relative to all matters of faith and practice.

Hence Luther's reformation finally gave the Word of God to the people; Calvin's inspired it with reverence and Wesley's earnestly impressed upon the world the responsibility which that Word enjoins; but Campbell really taught the world how to read the Bible and what its authority is in reference to all religious matters.

From his standpoint it is easy to see how his profound reverence for the Word of God came to be such a vital force in his life. At any rate it is unquestionably true that his confidence in the teaching of the Bible had much to do in building up and sustaining the splendid character which he manifested to the world.

(3) His consecrated life is another great factor to be considered while looking at his general characteristics. There is only one word, after all, which in the final analysis, expresses what will stand the severest test. That word is CHARACTER, and character is practically the sum of our living. It is what we are, not what we appear to be. Reputation is what men see, but character is what God sees.

A consecrated life, therefore, is fundamental in the building up of any really noble character. Consequently, all Mr. Campbell's great gifts would have counted for very little if his life had not been right in the sight of God.

But no one who knew him intimately could for a moment doubt that all his great powers were thoroughly consecrated to the service of the Lord Jesus Christ. He gave a reasonable amount of attention to secular afiairs, but this was because secular success, to a certain extent, is necessary in order to the highest spiritual good. No man can be an efficient preacher of the gospel, as he ought to be, if he is crushed by a load of temporal disasters. He never can preach his best when he knows his family is half starving at home. Business tact and good management are not, therefore, to be despised in either character building or in the carrying on of any great enterprise for the best interests of the world. Mr. Campbell made ample provision for home comforts, but he did not lay up treasures on earth for the sake of these treasures. He kept a certain amount of capital invested on which he did business for the Lord; but he never attempted to make a fortune either for himself or for any one else. Everything he possessed was constantly invested in work for the Master, though to the world generally this fact may not have been wholly apparent. Sometimes fairly well-to-do men are not understood by their neighbors, simply because these neighbors do not understand that no man can succeed, as even a generous giver for benevolent purposes, unless he has something to give.

I happen to know that Mr. Campbell was most generous in his benefactions, and that his hearty willingness to help those in need was one of the proofs of his consecrated life; but at the same time it is perfectly true that he could not have been the friend in need that he always was had he not exercised good business sense in the management of secular affairs.

Anyway it cannot be doubted that the last characteristic I have mentioned, as belonging to Mr. Campbell, was so pre-eminently true of him that no sort of estimate of him would be correct without giving this the most prominent place. In whatever place else he may have failed he certainly did not fail in the matter of a consecrated life.

SOME SPECIAL CHARACTERISTICS.

Mr. Campbell's character was made up of so many elements, and some of these were so subtle, that it was very difficult, by any known laws of analysis, to tell exactly how these different elements were blended together. Nevertheless, it is possible to trace with considerable accuracy the lines which mark the influence of a few of the elements that entered into the compound. The following I think will be at once recognized by all who knew him intimately:

(1) He had a sound mind in a sound body. He was physically one of the finest specimens of a man I have ever known. Every part of his body was well proportioned, and when he stood before you, you could not help feeling that you were in the presence of no ordinary personage. He possessed in a high degree that indescribable something which the French call tout en semble, and which is so important in making a general impression. It is very seldom that we carefully analyze anything when we are first introduced to it, and even if we do, it is not often that we are conscious of the mental process; and yet, a first impression is nearly always the most lasting. It is precisely this fact which gives some people their greatest advantage. They practically disarm criticism before the time for criticism arrives. Mr. Campbell had this power beyond any one I have ever known, and much of it was doubtless owing to his splendid physical development. The following extract from a sketch of him in the volume entitled, "Lectures on the Pentateuch," presents this feature of his character in a striking manner:

"In person God set the stamp of a man of power upon Alexander Campbell. In height he was five feet, eleven inches; and when in health and in his prime, muscular without fleshiness; his brain vigorous rather than massive, but well-balanced; his nose aquiline, and his very dark blue eyes had an eagle's fire. He was well formed and in every way well proportioned. Up to within four years of his death he sustained a healthful and spirited temperament, combined with remarkable vigor of mind and physical energy, but during the last two or three years of his life the manifest power in his face, the kindly humor which was wont to twinkle under his eyebrows, as well as his genial and animated expression of countenance, gradually diminished."

However, it was his great mind which gave his body its impressive meaning. In short, the physical and intellectual were harmoniously united in him, and this fact gave a symmetrical and unique development to all that made up his whole manhood.

(2) He possessed marvelous powers of generalization. Very few speakers or writers have excelled him in this respect. His mind was pitched on a lofty plane, and this fact made him somewhat impatient with small men or small things. Whoever will read his debate with Mr. Rice will not fail to notice the difference between the two men as regards the point now under consideration. Mr. Campbell's patience was often severely tried by the somewhat pettifogging tactics of his opponent. Dr. R. Richardson fitly describes the two men as follows:

"The disputants, indeed, throughout, presented quite a contrast as to their weight of metal and modes of warfare. The one was the light-armed Saracen circling round and round his opponent upon his fleet courser and stealthily endeavoring to wound him with his arrows. The other was the mailed Crusader upon his powerful charger, calmly receiving the missiles upon his shield or seeking to prostrate his enemy with a blow of his battle-axe."

Equally suggestive is the figure used by the Protestant Churchman, an Episcopal paper, which says:

"Mr. Campbell was like a heavy Dutch-built man-of-war, carrying many guns of a very large calibre; whilst Mr. Rice resembled a daring and active Yankee privateer, who contrived by the liveliness of his movements and the ease with which he could take up his position for a raking fire, to leave his more cumbrous adversary in a very crippled condition at the close of the fight."

Mr. Campbell was a comprehensive general, marshaling his forces in regular military order, and conducting the battle according to the most approved rules of tactics; while Mr. Rice was practically a guerilla captain, always on the lookout for a special opportunity to strike a blow at some unexpected point, and whose victories were always won, if won at all, by suddenly surprising small and unguarded companies. He never gave battle where the terms were equal, nor were his tactics generally in harmony with the accepted rules of honorable discussion.

I do not say that this was intentional on his part. I prefer to regard it as constitutional. Mr. Rice was a born special pleader. On the other hand, Mr. Campbell had a contempt for any small trick by which he might gain an advantage over his opponent. He would never have owned a victory if it had been won at the expense of principle. His powers of generalization were such that he depended mainly upon great, comprehensive arguments rather than upon mere verbal criticisms or the inconclusive results of isolated syllogisms. His reasoning was systematic. His theology was constructed upon broad lines and his arguments moved in large and compact battalions.

Indeed, his fondness for generalization frequently exposed him to apparently successful attacks by some of his comparatively insignificant antagonists. By making a big dust in a small place they created the impression that they had achieved a real success, when as a matter of fact they had only obscured the vision a little by the dust which they created.

Nevertheless, this class of men seemed to take special delight in following the great champion of the new religious movement and watching for every opportunity where they could in any way impede his progress or strike a blow at some unprotected place in his armor. Really, in estimating the character of many of those who opposed him, it is impossible to come to any other conclusion than that he was practically cursed with the smallness of the men who hounded his pathway. Among his bitter opponents there can scarcely be found a man who was really a foeman worthy of his steel. Of the truly great men, who differed from him, there was not one who treated him unfairly. It was the little men who always manifested an ugly spirit. It was a case of the gnat on the ox-horn. This fact of itself is sufficient to illustrate the difference between greatness and mediocrity.

(3) He was also characterized by great independence of thought and action. It was impossible for him to be a bigot. His reverence for the Word of God, to which reference has already been made, was such that he could not help contending earnestly for what he honestly believed that Word teaches, but he was always willing to hear what the humblest had to say, no matter how much the saying might be contrary to his own conviction. Believing in freedom of thought and action for himself, he was altogether too generous to deny this great boon to others.

It was doubtless owing to his great independence that he was enabled to practically strike down the religious tenets which he had held in his youth. We all walk almost exclusively by faith until we reach the age of retrospection. We receive from our parents and instructors whatever they say with unquestioning trust. This Mr. Campbell did during the days when his character was in process of formation. But when he arrived at the period when every young man begins to look back upon his life and readjust himself for the conflicts of the future, Mr. Campbell did what comparatively few young men ever do. He had the independence to reconstruct his religious thinking and to start out on practically new lines with respect to many matters that had swayed him in his youth.

This absolute freedom of thought followed Mr. Campbell to the end of his life. His mind was always open to any new truth or any new phase of truth. He knew well enough that no one during the short pilgrimage of the present life can possibly compass the whole area of facts and principles; consequently he did not really hope to learn all there was to be learned, though he never ceased to be a most diligent student, even after he had practically retired from active life. The peculiarity now under consideration greatly contributed to Mr. Campbell's work as a reformer. Indeed, it was absolutely essential in order to succeed in his great undertaking. His reformatory movement was, in many respects, a sort of religious eclecticism. He had to choose the truth wherever he found it; but if he had been swayed by prejudices it was impossible to believe that he could or would have been thoroughly loyal to the voice of truth whenever it came to him. Yet, no one will accuse him of any failure to follow his honest convictions, no matter where these might lead him.

In the early days of the church it was Athanasius against the world, but in the first half of the nineteenth century it was practically Alexander Campbell against the world. Nevertheless, he did not flinch in this unequal contest. Standing practically alone he utterly refused to surrender to or compromise with those who opposed his great work in the interests of a return to the faith and practice of the apostles.

(4) He was the impersonification of justice, generosity and courtesy. Something has already been said concerning his methods in controversy. It may be well to illustrate his character a little further from the same point of view. It must be remembered that he lived in the controversial period of his religious movement, and consequently it is probable that the religious controversies in which he engaged were really unavoidable. Anyway he felt that it was his duty to "contend earnestly for the faith once for all delivered to the saints," as he understood it, no matter who might oppose him. His sense of justice compelled him to take this course. Still, it must be said to his credit that in all of his religious debates he was the very soul of generosity and courtesy toward his opponents.

A recent writer in the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST, in an article entitled, "Archbishop Purcell on Alexander Campbell and his Work," affirms that the archbishop, in a conversation with him, praised Mr. Campbell's great fairness as a disputant in the highest terms. I can fully confirm this statement by what Archbishop Purcell told me. In 1868 I was preparing to go to Europe; and thinking that I might have need for some introduction to church dignitaries while in Italy, I called on Archbishop Purcell and asked him to give me a letter to his Roman Catholic friends. This he very cordially did, and the letter was of considerable service to me while I was in Rome.

During my visit to the archbishop we spent more than an hour together, mainly in religious conversation. It was not long until Mr. Campbell's name was mentioned. This furnished him an occasion to say several things, all of which were highly complimentary to Mr. Campbell. On another occasion I had a long talk with him, and his same high opinion of Mr. Campbell, especially as a controversialist, was very distinctly emphasized. He made this opinion impressive to me by contrasting Mr. Campbell with another disputant with whom he had just had a written controversy. His comparison between Mr. Campbell and his later opponent was by no means flattering to the latter, but his estimate of the latter added a spice and vigor to all the praise which he was pleased to bestow upon Mr. Campbell.

It is well known that Mr. Owen was equally lavish in his statements concerning Mr. Campbell's courtesy in debate, and it is probably true that all the great men with whom he had controversy would have borne willing testimony to this characteristic trait, if they had been interrogated upon the subject.

To sum up under this head, it is only necessary to say that Mr. Campbell was a thorough gentleman; and the gentlemanly character never shows itself more readily or more prominently than when it is strongly tested by opposing forces. Almost any one can be courteous when everybody is obliging and where all influences tend to good humor; but the case is very different when everything is pulling the other way. To be courteous, then, is to be virtuous.

(5) Mr. Campbell possessed in the highest degree that most remarkable yet indefinable power which enabled him to perceive the truth wherever found, and to place every truth perceived by him in its proper logical relation to every other truth. His most intimate friends attributed this to an extraordinary intuitive faculty. But it is difficult to say with certainty just what such a power should be called. That it should be ascribed to intuition may be seriously doubted. His whole type of mind was cast in a different mold from that which suggests a predominating intuitive faculty. I, therefore, prefer to regard this great characteristic from another point of view entirely. His mind was eminently logical; consequently, when he once became stationed at the proper standpoint he was enabled to follow truth along all of its legitimate lines. He could anticipate results, because he knew just what results would follow in order to meet the logical conditions of the case. As an instance of this it is only necessary to refer to his remarkable prediction, in his debate with Mr. Rice, concerning Rev. 19:13. He declared that the phrase, "dipped in blood," ought to be "sprinkled with blood," and that probably a manuscript would yet be found which would give the Greek verb rantidzo, rather than bapto, as it was in the received Greek text. It is needless to say that when the Codex Sinaiticus was found his prediction was in every way verified; and now the Revised Version has "sprinkled with blood" instead of "dipped in blood." Surely, no more striking illustration of the peculiar gift which I am considering could possibly be given.

His logical cast of mind enabled him to see all truth in association. This is why his work was eminently constructive as well as destructive. He opposed the evils which he found in Christendom, not so much because he delighted in opposition, but because these evils stood directly in the path of the constructive system which he was trying to build up. They fell straight across the electric lines, so to speak, so that the current of truth could not proceed unobstructedly on its way. But when these evils were removed and the breaks mended he was enabled to see the end from the beginning with respect to all great religious truths.

What we call telepathy in physics is probably nothing more than suggestion in the world of mind; and if this be true it is not difficult to understand how it is that a thoroughly logical mind will often have one truth suggested by another. Contact with the first at once brings into view the second, while this second truth immediately suggests another, and so on to the end of the line of communication.

Now if this view of the matter be philosophically correct, it is easy to see how such a man as Mr. Campbell, when once properly located with respect to religious questions (as he was by the celebrated "Declaration and Address"),would necessarily construct a religious system that would be harmonious in all its parts and would also be consistent with the point of view occupied by the author.

This is precisely what may be said of Mr. Campbell's constructive theology. Whether one agrees with him or not, it is impossible to find fault with the consistency of the system. It certainly holds together and is in perfect harmony with the point of view from which it was constructed. It contains no contradictions. Neither did Mr. Campbell make any mistakes in matters of fact or interpretation while advocating it. I doubt if there is another instance in history where this consistency is more distinctly marked than in the case of Mr. Campbell's teaching. Of course, I do not mean that none of his positions or interpretations may not be questioned. We have more light now than he had. We have all the advantage of what he wrote with many other advantages he did not possess. Nevertheless, it is by no means certain that even with our superior opportunities we are able to show a more excellent way in many of the things for which he contended. Taking him all in all, as a biblical expositor, we doubt if his main positions will ever be successfully controverted; and it may be truthfully affirmed, I think, that much of the great strength of the plea for which he contended lies in its philosophical harmony.

THE MINISTRY WHICH OUR AGE DEMANDS.*

(CONCLUDED.)

4. I would indicate as a fourth essential in the ministry for our age that it must be one which has experienced the sweetness and power of following Jesus, and which can interpret the message of his cross. I do not say how absurd it is for a ministry to call itself Christian which has not these qualifications. What I do say is, that as a matter of practical helpfulness the ministry which has met the deepest and most universal wants in past ages, and which in the nature of things must continue best to meet these wants, is the ministry thus equipped. Often blindly, always inadequately, the great conviction of the world is that it is best and according to the divine will to give up all and become a disciple of Jesus. Even where it sees more clearly, the world is not yet brave enough to make the full sacrifice. But it demands and has a right to demand of those who present themselves as the ministers of Christ that they shall be what they, in the name of Christ, urge others to be. It is hoped that we have forever outgrown that false philosophy which says that the doctrine is greater than the teacher, that the message is true independently of the messenger. Christ is the Word incarnate—God incarnate. The world does not need more theories of God and his nature. It needs to see those theories alive and to see, and hear, and handle—shall I speak so boldly?—to see and hear God; and so God sends his Son into the world as God manifest in the flesh. "In him was life, and the life was the light of man." And the Master says, "As thou didst send me into the world, even so sent I them into the world." And the Apostle Paul expressed the same idea in a simpler form when he says, "Ye are my epistles, known and read of all men." The minister himself must be the embodiment of his own message, must be the incarnation of God's message. He may be a preacher, a speaksr of words, without this, but without it he can never bring sweet healing to sinful souls, nor the bread of life to famishing hearts, and these are the central purposes of his ministry. Mr. Horton, in his Yale lectures, entitled Verbum Dei, tells of a minister at a fashionable watering-place who prefaced his sermon with the remark that his hearers were to do as he said, not as he did. Whenever the ministry sinks to that level, its words are indeed as sounding brass. Every true minister must say to his flock, follow me. If he cannot, his resignation is instantly due. Not that the true minister can never blunder or err, but he must be above reproach, when his whole life is known.

And, too, he must be able to interpret the message of the cross. This was the central and all-encompassing theme of the primitive church, and it has always met the deepest wants of mankind. However grossly it has abused it, yet the Roman Catholic Church has shown in this as in so many other instances its remarkable wisdom in crowning every edifice with the symbol of the cross. To this insight into the deepest satisfaction for sinful humanity I believe may be attributed much of the Romanists' success. This age is selfish, and it knows it, and it knows, too, that selfishness is the grossest sin against the will of God—that it is open rebellion against him, and the utter perversion of the highest ends of man. It knows this truth, but it is unable to rally itself from the powerful fascination of its long-practiced delusion. What it needs is a ministry which has been before it over the road to Calvary, and which with strong hand is able to lead it to the sacrificial altar, and cause it to linger there until it may be heard to exclaim, "I have been crucified with Christ; yet I live, and yet no longer I, but Christ liveth in me; and that life which I now live in the flesh I live in faith, the faith which is in the Son of God, who loved me and gave himself up for me."

And, too, this ministry must so fully understand this message of the cross that when men are convicted of their sins and of their estrangement from God, when they are without hope and the darkness of their utter unworthiness hangs over them like a pall—when like the great appostle they are crying out, "O wretched man that I am! Who shall deliver me from the body of this death?" they may be led also to say with this same apostle, "I thank God through our Lord Jesus Christ," "Who was delivered up for our trespasses, and was raised for our justification." "He that spared not his own Son, but delivered him up for us all, how shall he not also with him freely give us all things?" "There is, therefore, now no condemnation to them that are in Christ Jesus." The cross of Christ is the only and it is the eternal assurance that God forgives sinners, and it must ever be held before their eyes. We may be Trinitarians or Arians, we me may be Calvinists or Arminians, we may belong to the old or the new school; but whoever we are, the message of the cross will alone meet the deepest needs of a sinful race.

5. And now in the last instance I must emphasize the fact that our age demands a ministry which lives in the eternities—which has for itself the eternal life and which can transmit it to others. What would have been the ministry of Jesus without this? What message, separated from this basic reality, could the apostles have delivered to the world? Surely, without it no one would have a better message than the pessimistic preacher who concludes his catologue of human frailties and follies with the requiem-like refrain, "Vanity of vanities, all is vanity and a striving after wind."

Many a soul is hopeless about the future life who is doing a noble service for humanity because he believes in the reality of truth and the unavoidable demands of duty. He is uncertain about the existence of a personal God, but he realizes his own personal obligations. But no ministry can be strong and no age can long ward off a collapse of morality while shrouded in this darkness. It simply is not worth striving for if this life is but the vague dream of an unrealizable hope; and despair and pessimism speedily follow the loss of faith in immortality.

But simply because we might be worse off otherwise is not the reason why we should cling to this old doctrine; but because eternal life is a fact. It was because Jesus knew that he and his Father were one that he was able to endure as he endured, and it is for this reason that he has filled a desparing world with hope. Herein lay the ground of his statement, "That he that believeth in me hath eternal life."

And this the most important message the world has ever received. You and I must be able to realize the relation to God which Christ enjoyed and to deliver the message which he gave to the world.

Certain scoffers have afforded themselves some amusement, and given the ministry some healthful chastisement, by dubbing us "sky-pilots." There has been some ground for the charge, perhaps, that we have been more interested in getting men to heaven than we have in getting heaven to men. I am in the heartiest sympathy with all social settlement movements, charity organizations, social philosophy clubs—all these new movements and theories which are already so numerous that only a specialist could catalogue them. But I am still convinced that the Christian ministry is a higher ministry than this. Jesus fed men and taught them, and his influence has always brought a greater degree of plenty and comfort. But all these things he provides, not as ends, but as means.

It is not the most important thing in the world that men should be well fed and comfortably housed. Many a man is on the high road to hell because he is not able to resist the temptations brought him by a warm house and enough to eat. It is not of the first importance whether men have access to art galaries and can appreciate good music and can talk learnedly about Greek tragedies. Jesus has given us our message. The most important thing for this world to know is that God is our Father. The greatest accomplishment ever wrought by the co-operation of human and divine influence is to enable men to live as the sons of God. Our great message to this sinful and quickly passing generation is that their actions do not find their fruitage simply in the accomplishments of the moment, but that every thought and every deed have remote connections and infinite significance. As my voice by the vibration of little plates at each end of the wire may be distinctly heard a thousand miles away, so this deed of mine may shape for good the course of future generations, or it may thwart for ages the purposes of God; and, too, my own soul will thereby be saved or lost. No ministry can long affect for good its generation which is not founded upon an unshaking faith in God's existence and upon the belief that he is a rewarder of them that diligently seek him. The minister who has not such a faith should, it seems to me, very carefully revise the supposed call which he has received for this divine work. God's existence, God's presence, the infinite significance of the eternal "now" for the present and the future of the world and of ourselves should become such realities to us and to those to whom we minister that all the influences of our lives may fall into natural and harmonious conformity and unity with the will and heart of God.

To know God, to know his message, to declare the gospel of the Christ, to live in the eternities—I am praying God that in her travail and sorrow the church may be able to give birth to such a ministry. Such have been all the great preachers of all ages. Amos and Hosea and Isaiah; Paul and John; Chrysostom and Augustine and Ambrose; Eckhardt and Tauler and Luther and Calvin; Robertson and Brooks—they are all too great to be entitled prophets or saints or doctors or bishops—they were the ministers of the universal gospel of God; their ministry will be for all ages and all conditions of men.

Such a ministry is not of mere educational manufacture. It is in its ripened vigor a strong and unhesitating soul-life.

When the Butler Bible College is able to send from its halls a ministry thus equipped, we may truly say of it—Chosen of the Lord, planted by his hand.

THE BELIEF OF UNBELIEF.

A. M. GROWDEN.

Lord, I believe; help thou mine unbelief.—Mark 9:24.

Every man who truly lives believes. Belief is essential to intelligent, rational life. The idiot is taken care of; his brain-power being deformed, abnormal, lacks the power of intelligent action. From a given premise he draws no rational conclusions, he lacks the essential element of real life—he exists only.

The mind, which leaves out the true faith-element, is diseased. Unbelief is a disease to be deplored, not gloried in; a thing to be regretted, not advertised. The greatest infidel is the one who most needs the kindly offices of the man who spoke as never man spake. The man who truly diagnosis his own pitiful condition will cry out as did the father of this epileptic boy: "Lord, I believe; help thou my unbelief!" This was a manly, noble confession of unbelief—a pleading with that great character for help for a mind-trouble; not only a manly act, but an evidence of great wisdom. He plead with the one who understood the mind, who could "minister to a mind diseased." In dealing with creation man must accept a higher, more intelligent, greater mind.

The illustration, here is an egg, there is a bird; it is not a question as to which was made first, but this: Could the egg make itself? Could the bird? To ask these questions is to answer them to the satisfaction of all who are not playing with and encouraging a diseased mental condition which they ought to strive to cure.

Here is a man. Did he make himself? Or was he made by a lower power? Here is a mind that can weigh planets, read the heavens, talk through the ocean or draw a picture through a wire, reproducing it at the other end! Did such a mind make itself? Could it come from an inferior order? An answer is not necessary. A great mind demands a greater; an intellect demands a greater intellect.

Christ dealt kindly with this doubting believer. He dealt kindly with Thomas. He regards with kindness every man who seeks for light. It is not a sin to doubt when no light is on the mental vision, but it is a fearful thing to disregard the source of truth and power.

The central thought in faith is Christ. Theodore Parker said: "It would have taken a Jesus to have forged a Jesus." It is interesting to note the tributes paid by professional infidels to Christ.

Strauss said: "As little as humanity will ever be without religion, as little will it be without Christ. . . . . He remains the highest model of religion within the reach of our thought, and no perfect piety is possible without his presence in the heart." John Stuart Mill: "Who among his disciples was capable of inventing the sayings of Jesus?" Who, indeed! Rosseau: "The Jewish authors were incapable of the diction and strangers to the morality contained in the gospel. The marks of its truth are so striking and inimitable, that the inventor would be a greater character than the hero."

M. M. Noah, a prominent lawyer and politician of New York, said in an address: "When one hundred and fifty millions believe in Christ's divinity and we see around us evidences of the happiness, mild government and liberal feelings which spring from his religion, what right has any one to call him an impostor?" Only the right which is granted to those who are diseased to that extent.

Richter says: "The holiest among the mighty, the mightiest among the holy, lifted with his pierced hands empires off their hinges, turned the stream of civilization out of its channel and still governs the ages."

Certainly, and shall forever govern, for the government is upon his shoulders. He is the Father of the everlasting age (Psa. 9:6), a truth expressed centuries before Richter saw the light of this world.

How should we treat this mental obliquity?

Men should not deny it, nor make it an excuse for continued ignorance, nor give it as a reason for enmity toward Christ, or his religion or people.

The cure is found in studying and practicing the precepts of Christ, who said: "My doctrine is not mine, but his that sent me. If any man will do his will, he shall know of the doctrine whether it be from God or whether I speak of myself" (Jno. 7:17).

Knowledge of Christ through his Word and the manly practice of his sublime teachings will lead any man who is sincere out of fogs and doubts that cling like dirt to our nobler selves into clear vision, strong faith and nobility of action. Truly did Renan say:

"Repose now in thy glory, noble founder; thy work is finished, thy divinity is established. . . . Whatever may be the surprises of the future, Jesus will never he surpassed."

And why not?

Because he answers every necessary question, gives testimony upon which to base faith, promises to remove every doubt for those who follow him; to such faith grows brighter unto the perfect day.

Findlay, O.

Our Budget.

—Next week our Jubilee edition.

—Enthusiasm for the Jubilee Convention is rising.

—The largest missionary offering of our history will be reported at our next convention.

—The distress caused by the flood in Texas appeals to the philanthropy of the entire nation.

—The press reports indicate that the Endeavor convention at Detroit was up to the standard in attendance and enthusiasm, notwithstanding the rains.

—In our letter from Syria this week Brother Shishmanian tells of the establishment of a new church, with 51 members, at Haineh. He seems to be having marked success in his tour of Syria.

—The "conservatives" place the number of the delegates that will attend the Jubilee Convention at only 10,000; the more "liberal" insist upon from 15,000 to 20,000.

—Cincinnati will do herself proud in providing for the comfort of the delegates. Fourteen local commitiees have been marshaled for this important task. The committees are composed of men and women, preachers and "laymen," professional and business men; in a word, the composition of the committees can not be improved upon.

—The American Home Missionary for June, just out, contains the address of J. H. Hardin, President Eureka College, on "College Endowment," delivered before the Congress of Disciples of Christ, held in this city in April. This number of the American Home Missionary is chiefly occupied with college and educational interests.

—The Social Forum is the name of a new monthly magazine recently inaugurated by the National Christian Citizenship League, Room 822 Association Building, Chicago, and placed under the editorial management of John W. Leonard and Frederick G. Strickland. There have been two numbers of this magazine issued, and from these it is plain to be seen that it has come into the field for aggressive work. It is decidedly radical in some of its utterances and strongly opposes the present order of things in general.

—The Budget notice of the Illinois Encampment last week should have appeared the previous week. The program appears on the second page of the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST of last week.

—We present to our readers this week the picture of our lamented missionary, Charles E. Garst, who died at his post in Japan. Elsewhere in this paper will be found a sketch of the life of Bro. Garst by H. H. Guy, another of our missionaries and co-laborer with Bro. Garst in Japan. The First Church of Christ in Japan was organized by Bro. Garst at Akita. A further history of the life and work of Bro. Garst will appear in another issue of this paper. An instructive series of articles by Bro. Ragland, of Fayette Ark., on "Leaves from Mission Fields," now appearing in the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST, also treats of the life and work of Bro. Garst in Japan.

—One of the most sensible admonitions to some men of more or less prominence in our ranks who seem greatly troubled of late about the old landmarks appeared in the Christian Standard of last week from the pen of D. A. Wickizer, of Des Moines, Ia. To be "over suspicious and unduly cautious" is not only a sign of weakness, as he says, but of presumptuous sins, also. To deprive a greater number of people of an increased knowledge of Christ's spirit and kingdom by trying to stop an assumed doctrinal error on minor things is not a kind of work that meets the approbation of our King.

—Clear and definite announcements of the Jubilee Convention, Cincinnati, Ohio, Oct. 13-20, 1899, should be made in every pulpit at once. It would be well to repeat these announcements from time to time.

—Among the interesting institutions of Cincinnati may be mentioned the University of Cincinnati, Public Library, Art Museum, Historical Society, Society of Natural History, Zoological Garden, May Musical Festival and a large number of Medical Colleges. Cincinnati is also celebrated as being one of the earliest astronomical observatories in the United States.

—BRETHREN OF THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST:—In the issue of July 6, your editorial on "Consolidation of Missionary Societies," is opportune. It is wise. It is just what we need and must have as soon as possible. With our present arrangement we can do nothing more than play at missions and make ourselves appear foolish in the eyes of successful business men. I plead for more along that line.

JAMES R. MCINTIRE, Pastor.

Ames, Ia., July 8, 1899.

—The total receipts of the American Christian Missionary Society for the first eight days of July were $1,772.31, being a gain of 549.95 over that of the same period last year. The healthful gain indicates a rising tide in the great work of Home Missions. Those not having yet remitted their offerings should not delay the matter longer. Send to Benj. L. Smith, Cor. Sec., Y. M. C. A. Building, Cincinnati, O.

—By comparing decades of church history in three of the leading religious bodies in the United States the Christian Endeavor World claims to have ascertained beyond a doubt that the Christian Endeavor movement increases additions, contributions and attendance in the churches in which it is actively maintained. We have no doubt of the truth of these claims, but they are not the only good fruits that the movement has borne. We could add to these a higher standard of citizenship, a better life, a larger fellowship, a better education and a deeper interest in home and foreign missions.

—The address of the Executive Committee and Minutes of the Educational Conference of the Christian Churches of Missouri, held in Moberly, December 6, 7, 1898, have been printed in a folder, tract form, envelope size, and not only can now be had of the secretary, S. G. Clay, Fayette, Mo., but should be secured and read by every Disciple of Christ in Missouri. The extent to which this address and these minutes have been and will be read will be an index of the measure of interest taken by the Disciples of Christ in Missouri in our educational institutions in this state.

—The whole atmosphere in and about Cincinnati will be heavily charged with missionary interest from Oct 13th to 20th. Cincinnati will prove to be not only a rallying center at the time of the convention, but a radiating center when the convention closes. The firebrands of missionary interest will be scattered throughout the whole land. All the tribes go up to our Jerusalem (Cincinnati) in October.

—The July Central Christian Collegian, Albany, Mo., is a decidedly newsy number, and to it we are indebted for some items of interest for our persoocal mention column this week.

—L. C. McPherson and wife, of Buffalo, New York, have been appointed missionaries to Havana, Cuba, by the Foreign Society. They will sail for the new field in September or October. It will be remembered that Melvin Menges and wife, of Stanford, Ill., were appointed some weeks ago. These are splendid people for the very important work. Both men are graduates of Eureka College, Illinois, are well equipped for this service, tried and true, and will command the unbounded confidence of the churches. We congratulate, not only the Foreign Society, but our churches generally upon the hopeful outlook for the mission in Cuba.

—The variety of missionary literature and dress as well as of missionary items and news in the Missionary Intelligencer for July makes it a very interesting and pleasing number.

—Christian College Chronicle for June is full of the spirit of progress that has possessed the present managers of that institution for the past year. New buildings will be presented to the brotherhood and to the public at opening of the next school year.

—We have a report of the Montana convention, recently held in Corvalis, but the writer's name is not given, and under our rule we cannot publish it until the same is known to us. We are sorry to delay the report thus, but we cannot do otherwise. Will the writer please forward his name?

—Booker T. Washington's appeal to the citizens of the Southern States to assist in the creation of a stronger public sentiment against lynching, will meet the approbation of all good citizens, both North and South. A supreme respect for law ought to be the chief characteristic of the American people in every state, North, South, East or West. We are but courting anarchy and destruction when we wink at the punishment of criminals in any other way than by due process of law.

—The third annual Ministerial Institute of Central Christian College will be held at the chapel August 1-3. Able speakers are being procured for the occasion and the program will be one of the best yet offered. Free entertain- will be furnished for all visiting delegates.

—The leading article in our Family Circle last week, entitled, "A Message to Gracia," by Elbert Hubbard, should have been credited to the Interior. Though not originally written for that journal, it is there that we found it, and heartily second the desire of that journal to give it a wider circulation.

—The educational value of the Jubilee Convention cannot be overestimated. If your preacher is somewhat indifferent to the cause of missions, let your church provide for his transportation to and from the convention and he will come back a live coal from the missionary altar; not only so, but he will have larger views and a deeper interest in the local work. He will preach better and work harder and be sweeter and happier and more useful. Indeed, a church cannot make a better investment than to send its preacher to the convention.

—Not a few prerchers, Sunday-school superintendents, prayer-meeting and Endeavor leaders ought to join "The On Timer's Tribe," or at least to be a subscriber of The On Timer's Tribe Monthly. It is published by The On Timer's Tribe Publishers, Denver, Col., and in the interest of punctuality in all things, especially in religious services. Tardiness is the ruination of many excellent meetings, prospect in life, and even of human character. Be not slothful, is a divine injunction.

—The Sunday-school of the Mt. Cabanne Church and a host of friends were delightfully entertained by Frank P. Merriman on Monday evening, July 3rd. Bro. Merriman prepared a platform for speakers and chairs for his guests on the beautiful lawn about his residence in Cabanne Place, and then served them to speeches, music, sandwiches, coffee, ice cream and fireworks, until late in the evening. Among the distinguished guests of the evening were ex-Gov. Johnson and Capt. Coghlan, both of whom made speeches. A band of eight pieces, dispensing the national airs, and the sweet singing of the children put everybody in a mood to enjoy the occasion hugely, and all felt under great obligations to their host for the happy occasion. Brother Merriman is a living testimony to the attorneys of St. Louis that Christianity is not diametrically opposed to success in the practice of law, as he is one of the most active members of the Mt. Cabanne Christian Church; he is active in all its activities.

—Through W. H. McClain, a member of the official board of the First Christian Church of this city, we have just learned of the death of Mrs. Dr. W. A. Edmonds, July 1st, at the residence of Mrs. Alice Rainey, Columbia, Tenn. The funeral services were held at Columbia, but the interment took place at Versailles, Ky., beside the body of her husband, the late Dr. Edmonds. Brother and Sister Edmonds were for a number of years faithful members of the First Christian Church of this city and were esteemed by a wide circle of friends, all of whom will be greatly saddened by the news of her departure, as they were at the news of her husband's death. Sister Edmonds' pleasant ways and words cannot be soon forgotten by those who knew her, and her prominence in church activities left a deeply felt vacancy when she and her husband removed from this city to Kentucky. She seemed the picture of health when last we saw her, and the news of her death comes in the nature of a great surprise to us, as no doubt it will to all who knew her.

—John Watson (Ian Maclaren) is reported as having said of America, after he returned to Europe, that "churches are fast losing their hold upon the people. Sunday is losing its beautiful significance and is a day of rest no longer, far less a day of worship. The gospel is being supplanted by faith in self. The result is strong character, but a lack of their finer sensibilities." How can this be when the leading religious bodies in the United States report a substantial gain every year? The irreligious element may be increasing more rapidly by birth and by immigration than the religious, but this does not argue that the churches are losing their hold upon the people. They cannot lose what they never possessed. As long as their membership and missions are on the increase in the land they are gaining their hold upon the people and the world.

—The convention program which was announced for the Christian Church in Nora Springs, Ia., June 26-28, was carried out in excellent form. All but four of those on the long program were presented and had come prepared, and the result is that the praises are loud in regard to the excellency of all the convention sessions. The two leading addresses were given by Chancellor W. B. Craig, of Drake University, and State Secretary B. S. Denny, both of Des Moines.

—The following description of the Pope's life, from an article in Self Culture on "Pope-Makers and Pope-Making," certainly leaves little room for envy even on the part of any enviously disposed persons—outside of Catholic ranks, of course:

Viewed from the human standpoint, nothing can be more joyless than the daily life of the Roman Pontiff at the present day. The era of magnificence, of pageantry for the Roman Court, has passed away. Extreme austerity, at least outwardly, distinguishes the dwellers in the Vatican. The atmosphere there is gloomy and chill. The Pope lives alone; no one shares with him even a meal. A walk in the garden attached to the palace has for years been the only source of relaxation for him who, while styling himself "The Vicegerent of Christ, is nevertheless, by his own volition, "The Prisoner of the Vatican."

"Evil Dispositions Are Early Shown."

Just so evil in the blood comes out in shape of scrofula, pimples, etc., in children and young people. Taken in time it can be eradicated by using Hood's Sarsaparilla, America's Greatest Medicine. It vitalizes and enriches the blood.

Hood's Sarsaparilla
Never Disappoints

—The following incident, told by the Bible Society Record, indicates that the people of Manila are taking to Occidental usages quite readily:

Bishop Thoburg, of the Methodist Episcopal Church, preached in the Filipino Theater at Manila, on the 5th of last March, to a miscellaneous and "spiritually hungry" audience. To meet the expenses of the day a collection was taken, which showed both the liberality and the cosmopolitan character of the audience. It amounted to $92, and included coins from many countries—the American nickel and the old-fashioned dime, Mexican coins of various sizes, the Indian rupee, and coins from Malayasia, Australia, Japan and China, with a fair number of American cents and British pennies.

—The 29th annual catalogue of the Female Orphan School, Camden Point, Mo., in beautiful cover, is out, and bears evidence to the successful work of the school. With a good building, good location, good faculty and good practical courses of study this institution of learning lays rightful claim upon the Christian families of Missouri for patronage.

—Not only are we at the threshold of a new century, but of an era of new inventions as well. If any one doubts that the horseless age is at hand, let him read an article in Maclure's Magazine for July, on Automobiles. A few years more and the horse will scarcely be seen upon the streets of our great cities. The age of airships seems likewise near. Not so near as the automobile, but close upon its heels. The use of liquid air for motor purposes and of aluminum for constructive purposes have greatly helped in the solution of this problem. With liberal assistance from the government Prof. Langley, of Washington, D. C., has constructed an airship that will fly without the use of the huge gasbag for bouyancy purposes. It is on the æroplane or bird-flying plan and called an ærodrome. The air is also full of the spirit of moral and industrial reforms. Unless these keep pace with mechanical changes the latter will be short-lived in their usefulness. But moral and industrial reforms, as revolutionary as anything in the mechanical world, are coming. Dreaded diseases are yielding their secrets to the persistent researches of researching men. Moral evils long recognized as detriments to prosperity and progress must go, and the time will come when locality will not give one man advantage over another in trade, transportation and the essential elements of prosperity and progress as it now does. Neither will the religious world continue in its ways of old. Medieval things, in this as in other realms, have about lived out their day and must give place to better religious conditions than the world has yet seen. This a is grand age in which to live. The fields are white with the harvest of new inventions, new conditions and better things, and the inspiration of these momentous things ought to fill the young men and young women of our nation with an energy that will make them the forerunners of this new age, the heralds of the new heavens and the new earth.

—In a recent number of the Central Baptist, this city, there appeared a paper which its editor, Dr. J. C. Armstrong, prepared and read before the Kansas City Baptist ministers and, later, before the ministers of this city, which is commendable for its purpose, spirit and breadth of treatment. The theme of the paper is "Union of Baptist Forces in America." In this paper the Doctor says that "there has not been found a shadow of justification for the separation of our forces in the present." The arguments put forth in the paper upon the necessity of the union seem to us to be strong and timely. Briefly stated, they are "economy," "harmony" and the "supremacy of the Master's cause." All that Dr. Armstrong says against division and in favor of unity, in Baptist ranks, applies with equal force to the entire religious world. And all that he says in favor of unity in mission work in Baptist Churches applies with equal force against the multiplicity of mission boards in any other religious body. We are glad, therefore, to see this turn of thought toward the oneness of Christ's cause in the mission field at home or in foreign lands.

PERSONAL MENTION.

Evangelist H. A. Northcutt is attending a course of lectures in Chicago University.

S. M. Martin is expected to assist W. P. Shamhart, of Aberdeen, S. Dak., in the near future.

W. H. Hanna wishes all correspondents to address him at the University of Chicago, Chicago, Ill.

J. F. Floyd has been unanimously called to preach for the Church of Christ in Kokomo, Ind. He closed his work at Winchester, Ind.

W. P. Shamhart, of Aberdeen, S. Dak., delivered the address for the graduating class of the High School of Redfield, S. Dak.

Elmer Ireland, singing evangelist, is assisting D. A. Youtzy in a tent meeting in Bloomfield, Neb.

E. T. McFarland, who was recently called to the pastorate of the Fourth Church, began his work there on last Lord's day.

V. E. Ridenour is now engaged in a tabernacle meeting in Ft. Scott, Kan., with R. L. Lotz, of Pratt, Kan.

L. W. Thompson will close his work at Volga, S. Dakota, Oct. 1st, and solicits correspondence with churches desiring a minister.

J. P. Lewis has held a meeting at Fernandina, Fla., the first held by any of our preachers in that city of three thousand souls.

C. S. Earley writes hopefully of the work of the Central Christian Church, Pueblo, Col., of which he has recentlybecome the pastor.

Geo. F. Hall, Decatur, Ill., was one of the entertaining lecturers of the 11th session of the Beatrice Chautauqua, Beatrice, Neb., June 21 to July 4.

C. C. Davis, pastor of the Christian Church, of Davenport, Ia., preached the baccalaureate sermon for the Davenport High School in his church, June 25th.

Garry L. Cook can be had to help as singer in one or two meetings during the summer. He has had experience both as singer and pastor. Address him at Hartford, Mich.

Prof. M. V. Danford, a graduate of Bethany College, will succeed Prof. Pratt in the chair of mathematics and sciences in Central Christian College, Albany, Mo.

A. M. Haggard announces that his addrees until further notice will be Cambridge, Mass. The name of Cambridge, under the circumstances, may hint the object of his sojourn there "until further notice."

Cards announcing the marriage of Miss Uva Lena, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. B. C. Stevens, of Marceline, Mo., to Mr. J. S. Nolan, July 15, have been received at this office.

H. Newton Miller, A. M., recently elected professor of English and elocution in Bethany College, resigned as pastor at Wellsville, O., and will spend the summer traveling in the interest of the college.

J. W. Hardy, of Mayfield, Ky., has become the duly authorized financial agent for Christian University, Canton, Mo., and is just entering upon his work. He called at this office on last Thursday on his way to Canton.

R. F. Thrapp, pastor at Pittsfield, Ill., will use his afternoons on Lord's days for needy churches in Pike County. There are 21 organizations in that county, many of them needing a helping hand.

Frank H. Marshall and wife, missionaries of the F. C. M. S. at Tokio, Japan, have been compelled, owing to the failure of Mrs. Marshall's health, to return to this country. They are now visiting her parents, Mr. and Mrs. Eli Waite, of Garden City, Minnesota.

T. W. Grafton and his wife, of Rock Island, Ill., attended the Endeavor convention at Detroit, and from there went out to the Atlantic Coast, where they will spend the remainder of the present month. Letters sent them at Rock Island will be forwarded to them while on this tour.

W. S. Lowe has resigned his pastorate at Manhattan, Kan., and solicits correspondence with churches wanting a minister or a protracted meeting. He has been in Manhattan for three and a half years and added about 100 members to the church in that time.

Harry J. Aldrich, of North Tonawanda, was ordained to the ministry of the gospel. The pastor, B. Q. Denham, was assisted in the ordination services by F. W. Norton, of Niagara Falls, and by Bro. Hootman. Bro. Aldrich has entered upon his first pastorate at Richland, N. Y.

T. M. Myers, who has been located at Jeffersonville, Ind., for a number of years, writes that he has been compelled to move from there to Kentucky Heights, Asheville, N. C., on account of the health of his wife. He has purchased Kentucky Heights for a permanent home.

A directory of the church at Dixon St., Gainesville, Texas, just received at this office, indicates that that church is in order and active. J. B. Sweeney is the minister. The resemblance of the building in which that church worships to that of the Second Christian Church, of this city, is very striking. They are on the same plan, if not from the same plans.

J. L. Brandt, J. H. O. Smith, Jabez Hall, Lon J. Beauchamp, Prof. Hagaman and T. J. Legg are among the entertaining speakers who will address the audiences at the Maxin-Kuckee Assembly, Culver, Ind., July 20-28, under the management of J. V. Coombs. The music will be in charge of F. C. Huston and J. T. Reese.

On the 20th of June, Zwinglius Moore, president Central Christian College, was married to Miss Eda F. Thompson, of Tarkio, Mo. The marriage ceremony was pronounced by Melancthon Moore, of Reserve, Kan., a brother to the president, both in the flesh and in the Lord. The occasion was an event of more than ordinary interest from many considerations. President Moore was recently honored with the degree, A. M., from Bethany College.

F. C. Aldinger, of Sutherland, Ia., has been called to the pastorate of Beulah Christian Church of St. Louis, during July and August. If the arrangement proves mutually satisfactory, as it is hoped will be the case, the connection will become permanent. Bro. Aldinger is one of Drake University's brightest graduates and Beulah occupies one of the very best and most hopeful fields for our cause in the city. The combination should prove a satisfactory one in every way.

Prof. O. B. Sears, A. B., formerly senior editor of this paper, and who has so ably filled the chair of Latin and Greek for the past four years, has resigned and will enter the University of Virginia where he will pursue a special course of studies. Prof. Sears has won for himself many friends, and has amply demonstrated his fitness for the position he has so long held. He will be followed by the good wishes of the entire faculty and of the student body. He is an able preacher of the gospel, a painstaking and conscientious teacher and a thorough student.—Central Christian Collegian.

Dr. D. R. Dungan, of the Mount Cabanne Christian Church, St. Louis, preached the baccalaureate sermon at the Christian Church Sunday evening. It was a unique sermon in its way. Dr. Dungan spoiled a good novelist when he entered the pulpit. He is master of an easy style, and above all he knows how to be fascinating and polite at the same time. We do not intend this as a half compliment. Few men possess this fine tact. The Doctor's text was the book of Esther, and his sermon a comment upon how the Hebrew woman moved Xerxes to save the children of Israel. The discourse maintained in a worthy spirit the traditions of baccalaureate day.—Christian College Chronicle.

Aaron Prince Aten, now pastor of the Christian Church at Hutchinson, Kansas, has been elected president of the Kansas Christian College, at Harper, Kansas. This is the only college under the control of our people in Kansas and we congratulate both the school and Brother Aten on the new and responsible position to which they have called him. The name AaronPrince Aten is familiar to our readers as the author of some of the best poems that have appeared in our columns The next session of the Christian College, Harper, Kansas, will open September 14, with a full and efficient faculty and under "the most favorable auspices."

During the three years' pastoral work of B. Q. Denham in the Church of Christ in North Tonawanda, N. Y., there were 314 additions, 270 of whom were baptized. The tolal amount raised for missions in that time was $4,908. Bro. Denham now has under advisement a call from the West 56th Street Church of Christ in New York City, and may accept. He and his wife recently attended a surprise party at Niagara Falls in honor of the 12th anniversary of Mr. and Mrs. Norton's wedding. A handsome sum of money from the church and other presents were presented Bro. and Sister Norton on the occasion as a token of the appreciation of their pastoral work in Niagara Falls.

Chas. E. Garst.

Chas. E. Garst was born in Dayton, Ohio, U. S. A., August 21, 1853. From Dayton he went with his parents to Iowa where he worked on the farm in the daytime and spent his evenings in study. After spending a few years in the common schools he entered the Iowa State Agricultural College. Here he cut wood, dug potatoes, tended horses, and all such work, in this way paying for his schooling. At the age of 19 he entered the Military Academy at West Point. Here he was known for his earnestness and zeal in attending all the meetings of the church, and especially the prayer-meeting, often under the greatest difficulties. During the four years of his stay in this school he was a constant reader of the Christian Standard, and it was in this way that he came to know that the sprinkling which he had received when a baby would not stand as valid baptism. Upon graduating from the Academy, in 1876, he went to Dayton, where he was immersed by M. D. Todd. Upon receipt of his commission he went at once to Ft. Union, New Mexico, where he began his career as a soldier, only to give it up at the call to "promotion" from the Ruler of the universe. He served as an officer in several different places in Texas, Dakotah and New Mexico. While in Ft. Stanton, New Mexico, he was often found in prayer. "I believe Charley has some deep plan in mind, for I often see him in his room alone, praying," was the remark of one of his fellow soldiers. In 1889, with the intention of entering the ministry, he sent his resignation to Washington and enternd Butler College. However, at the instance of his friends, he withdrew from it and returned to his post to settle up affairs. It was at this time he first met Laura DeLaney, who afterwards became his faithful wife. They were married Nov. 8, 1881. From the time they were married they began to read and think and pray about the heathen. With the intention of becoming self-supporting missionaries in Africa, Mr. Garst invested in an extensive stock farm in New Mexico. This proved in the end to be a losing investment. During all this time Isaac Errett, who knew and had a personal interest in the DeLaney family, kept a close watch over the daughter. When the proper time came he made the offer to Mr. and Mrs. Garst to become the Lord's representatives in Japan, which offer they accepted at once and sailed for Japan in October, 1883. His resignation as an army officer, however, did not take effect until the following year. They came to Japan in company with Mr. G. T. Smith and wife. Upon coming here they were located for the first six months in Yokohama, where they spent the time in studying the language and consulting with other missionaries as to the best field to take as the beginning of the new mission. Mainly at the instance of the Baptist Mission they finally settled on Akita, in Akita Ken, on the west coast. They moved to Akita in the spring of 1884. Bro. and Sister Garst lived four years in Akita. During their stay here they passed through the usual trials of "first work." They were misunderstood, even abused and hated for Christ's sake. From Akita they moved to Shonal where they lived a little over three years. Here Mr. Garst spent much time preaching in the small towns and country places, often putting on straw sandals, and with a bagful of Bibles on his back, he could be seen walking from place to place. I have heard him say that there is hardly a district or country office or police station north of Sendai which he has not visited sometime in his travels.

In 1891, after eight years of hard service, he with his family returned to America for a short visit and rest which, however, was lengthened into a two-years' vacation on account of the sickness and death of their oldest boy. In September, 1893, they returned to Japan for a second term. H. H. GUY.

Sam Dash's Question.

When I took notice of Sam Dash's dash at me a few weeks ago, I had no thought of defending the Christian Standard, but left what he said about that paper to be attended to by its editor if he should see fit to notice it. But inasmuch as Sam insists that I must answer his question as to what I think of two editorials which he copied from that paper, and thinks it desirable that I and the readers of the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST become better acquainted, I cheerfully comply with his request.

The main point in the first of the editorials referred to is the insistence by the editor that Prof. Briggs should not be denounced as an enemy of the Bible. If by enemy is meant one who is intentionally such, I say the same. I have no reason to doubt the sincerity of Prof. Briggs when he claims that his method of dealing with the Bible is the best way to defend it against the infidelity of the German scholars, the chief part of whose teaching he has accepted. But there is another sense of the word enemy. We say of a kind-hearted drunkard, that he is his own enemy. He is an enemy to himself by action, though not be by intention. In this sense Paul said of certain brethren in the church that they were enemies of the cross of Christ (Phil. 3:18), and James says that to be a friend of the world is to be an enemy of God (4:4). Our Lord also called Peter Satan, saying, "Get thee behind me, Satan," when Peter, with the best of intention, had acted the part of Satan, the enemy of God and man. In this sense I regard Prof. Briggs as an enemy of the Bible—a more effective enemy than Col. Ingersoll. And I regard every man as an enemy of the Bible to the full extent that he seeks to throw doubt on any of its narratives, or to bring into discredit any of its teachings respecting itself.

The other editorial had reference to the remark made by Prof. Geo. P. Fisher, that "the inspiration of the Scriptures, though a fact, is not necessary to our faith in Christ; that the Bible may be regarded as a purely human book, and yet the proof of Christianity remain unimpaired; that all the evidence we need from the Scriptures we may get if we regard them as the production of reliable men." I understand Prof. Fisher to mean by this that though inspiration is a fact, it is not necessary to use this fact as proof of the faith in Christ—that we can prove our proposition without it. That we may grant for agument's sake that the Bible is a purely human book, written by reliable men, and yet gather from it the proof of Christianity.

This has been the common ground of writers on evidence since the days of Paley, and before. It is the ground on which my own argument in my book on evidences is constructed. But this is very far from admitting that the man who denies inspiration has already attained to faith in Christ, or that he is a Christian who denies that the Bible is anything more than a human production. I might prove to a man that Sam Dash wrote the article to which I am replying without using the fact that it appeared over his signature in the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST; but for me to deny that it has appeared in the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST would be an inexcusable falsehood. Prof. Fisher is right, then, when rightly understood; but my Brother Sam (not Uncle Sam) sets his remarks before us in a wrong light.

The next time that Sam makes a dash I advise him to be more careful what he dashes against. He might profit by remembering the fate of old Dan Tucker.

New York Letter.

The New England convention, recently held at Haverhill, Mass., was in many ways the most successful in the history of that missionary society. Pastor E. M. Flinn and the Haverhill church entertained royally the delegates and visitors. The record of the past year's work was reassuring and the outlook inspiring. Among the good things toward which the New England brethren will work are the support of two young men while studying for the Christian ministry and the employment of Bro. R. H. Bolton, editor of the New England Messenger, as general evangelist. The next annual convention will meet with the church at Boston and which in all probability will prove to be the largest in the history of the New England Disciples. Secretaries McLean and C. C. Smith, and Dr. James Butchart, missionary to China, helped the Haverhill meeting much with their presence and inspirational addresses.

Bro. Frank H. Moore, formerly of Ohio, is supplying the pulpit of the 56th St. Church just now.——Bro. B. Q. Denham, of N. Tonawanda, has accepted a call to that church and will begin work with them on Oct. 1st. We hope he and this church may be blessed in their labors together for Christ.——It is reported that Bro. L. C. McPherson, of Buffalo, is favorably considered as a possible pastor for the Sterling Place congregation, Brooklyn.——On Monday, July 3rd, the "New York Letter" writer took his family to Sing-Sing for a short term (that is to say, not to the institution at that place, noted the world over, but) to our new summer cottage at Sing-Sing-Heights-on-the-Hudson, for the months of July and August. The New York Letters for a time now may partake of the breeziness if not the beauty of this delightful, restful place.

Here is what the North Side News, a local paper of Bronx Borough had to say a few days ago about our local mission work:

The Disciples of Christ have inaugurated and maintained its branch on the Southern Boulevard at considerable sacrifice, but the Sunday-school has been prosperous from the beginning, and no little strength has been added to the church forces by it in one way and another. The new chapel represents an outlay of more than $1,300, exclusive of the ground, saying nothing of the time and strength expended on the part of the church in projecting and completing it. Not only is it of much significance as a new force in the community, making for righteousness, but as it is a new experience for the Disciples of Christ in New York City along the lines of local church extension, it becomes therefore of great importance, as doubtless it will be looked upon in future years as an epoch-making enterprise in the history of this city. The church on 169th Street, which has planted and is sustaining this work, is not a large or wealthy congregation, but the people have a mind to work. Without a dollar's assistance from any mission board, this church has kept up its own ordinary work and is also carrying on this at the same time. Moreover, it has met every bill when presented and proposes to do so through to the end. The church does not owe a dollar on current expenses or in its branch work. It is the hope and purpose of the Disciples of Christ to produce and sustain other mission points in Bronx Borough upon the strength of the success of this effort.

Story-telling in the pulpit is rather a novel way of preaching, but no doubt it will become more asd more popular for a time, since Mr. Sheldon's great success in the publication of the book, "In His Steps," which was first preached, or read, from the pulpit. The Rev. Dr. J. B. Hamilton, a Methodist pastor of Brooklyn reads at the evening services pulpit romances, as he calls them, instead of preaching. Usually he reads a story at Christmas and Easter in place of a sermon. Recently he preached a short series entitled "The Sermon in a Saloon," and another soon followed called "The Parson's Free Lunch." In close connection with these he invited his people to listen to "The Parson's Wife," "A Methodist Saint," "The Only Baby in Town," and "The Lost Parson." Is it to be thought a strange thing if the pulpit is losing its power, as some assert it is? What else can we expect when those who are commissioned to preach the gospel of the Son of God to a lost race are preaching stories, lecturing on literature, delivering political harangues and announcing the treatment of the latest sensational topics in the pulpit? These things are all right in the proper place and time; but the pulpit and the Lord's day should be sacred to the gospel of Christ. Let us be true to our mission as the heralds of salvation, holding up Christ as the only hope for dying men, and he will make us able ministers of the New Testament, for we are not sufficient of ourselves. "I, if I be lifted up, will draw all men unto myself," is as true in the twentieth as in the first century.

HAINEH, May 4, 1899.

EDITOR CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST:—During my short visit to Diarbekir the Lord opened the heart of the father-in-law of our Bro. Hagop to obey the gospel, and I baptized him in the river Tigris, after which he joyfully returned home and we started for this old inland city of a thousand homes equally divided into Armenians and Mohammedans. From the Armenians there are some fifty families, Congregationalists, who have a large church building and a school for their children. Many of the Congregationalists by reading our tracts and by the preaching of our martyred blind brother, Malkhas Melkonian, had been led to search the Scriptures, and being fully persuaded of the truth, had been writing to me for nearly three years to pay them a visit. So when the Lord opened my way and I came to them, they received me joyfully. Seeing that a large number of the people were desirous to hear my preaching, and knowing that the authorities did not permit the people to gather together anywhere except in their houses of worship, my first effort was to ask the Congregationalist leaders to allow me to preach to the people in their church. But they at once rejected on the ground that without a special request from the missionaries they could not permit me to preach in their church. Then I went to see the governor and explained the purpose of my visit, and told him that under the present circumstances I was obliged to preach to the people in a private house. To my great surprise I found him well informed of the matter, and quite willing to allow us to meet and preach wherever we saw fit. Then I went to see the chief of the police also to satisfy the minds of the people that their gathering into a private house would not cause any suspicion against them. The police received me courteously, and in the course of our conversation said that he was well informed of the matter and that he was persuaded that this people had a right to meet wherever they desired, and that in regard to baptism they had a right to reject infant baptism. He also added, "If you wish you can meet and preach in my own room." Soon the brethren hired a house, and on Lord's day, April 30th, the people crowded the house and I preached to them. At the conclusion of the preaching, when I extended the gospel invitation, thirty-eight men and eight women arose and made the good confession. On the following day again the chief of the police having been informed, we went down to the river, which is over half an hour's walk from the city, and nearly two hundred people following us. I baptized them in the presence of the large crowd. Returning home the same afternoon I baptized also the women and some of the men who had been left behind, in a baptistery hurriedly built in the house of one of the brethren; the number of all that were baptized the same day being fifty-one, forty-two men and nine women.

Thus on the 1st of May the Church of Christ in Haineh was born with 51 members, founded on the foundation of the apostles and prophets.

Seeing that our place was too small for the crowd, I gave notice that on the following forenoon I would preach to the women. When the time came the place was packed and I preached to them. Also in the afternoon I preached to the people, many of whom could not find place to enter. Yesterday I preached to the members of the church only, exhorting them at once to select ten men to look after the setting in order whatever was necessary to do for the good of the church, and last night they met and chose their men. A few seeing that they have no suitable preacher, they desired me to find an able preacher for them. My God has led me thus far from victory to victory, removing all apparent obstacles from before me, and has shown his power in my weakness leading precious souls in the fold of the Good Shepherd. But all this is but the beginning of the grand victory of conquering this country for Christ, but "where are the reapers?"

Four of our brethren and two widowed sisters (one of them the widow of our lamented blind brother), having heard of my expected visit, came to see me from the city of Lidgeh, seven hours distant from here, and they rejoiced with us when the new-born church met together to break bread the evening of the baptism.

MAY 8.

During the week one man and six women were added by the Lord to this infant church, and they rejoiced greatly. It must be remembered that during the recent cruel persecution and plunder the Armenians of Haineh suffered their full share. Many of their husbands, brothers and sons were put to death, their wives and daughters were carried away, their homes plundered, set on fire and destroyed, and the remnant were left homeless and without food or covering for their body, from which every one of them is still suffering and in want, but the Lord has richly rewarded them and planted a Church of Christ in their midst. I have seen the indescribable poverty of this people. I have been in the homes of the members of the church, and in the name of our great brotherhood I told them, "Go in peace, be ye warmed and filled." And to-morrow morning I expect to start on my homeward journey. Yours in hope,

G. N. SHISHMANIAN.

Nerves and Heart

Are what do the work of life for the human body.

Except by your sensations you know little of them, but they are untiring as servants, sentinels and supporters.

If they are strained you falter; if they are hurt you suffer, if they get weak you fail. Are you aware that

DR. J. H. McLEAN'S STRENGTHENING CORDIAL AND BLOOD PURIFIER

Is the most precious agency known for stimulating the Heart and Nervous System?

This is true; over fifty years of use have established it beyond question.

It repairs the tissue-waste of hard physical labor; it sustains the overworked brain and develops the faculty of thought.

It cures Malaria, Debility, Dyspepsia, Low Spirits, Insomnia, Poor Appetite, Malnutrition and Stomach Troubles and builds up the run down or exhausted system. Try it.

All druggists keep it. 50c. and $1 a bottle.

The Sunday Newspaper.

DEAR MR. EDITOR:—You appear to be slightly in favor of the Sunday newspaper, while you object to its association with the phrase "Continental Sunday." You appear also to never have lived in England, or you would not sneeringly refer to the conservatism of the English Christian public. I lived 50 years in that country and 15 years in the states. There we were contantly scared lest our Sundays should be continentalized. Here it is so far continentalized that people from Europe see very little difference between that and this. When I arrived here I was shocked to see drugstores open wide for the sale principally of cigars, whiskey and ice cream drinks, and not ten per cent. of their sales for legitimate drugs, etc., candy stores, cigar stands, fruit stands, in some places the saloons also, unblushingly open. The Catholics and Lutherans going to church mornings, and spending the rest of the day either at work, cards, or beergardens, etc. People of no religious convictions patronszing the open stores, and too many of the Lord's own professed people doing much the same, their consciences never having been touched by the demand on them of God's ideal; and never but once have I heard in a sermon any admonitory remarks on the subject of Sunday obligations, either in Michigan, Missouri or Kansas.

I am proud, like our friend Durban, of this great country in which I claim the privilege of citizenship, but in the matter of training the people in the lines of quiet Sunday, I am prouder of England and believe that God has enlarged her in proportion as she taught her people the sanctity of Sunday.

The Great Eastern Railway never paid a cent of dividend while it ran excursion trains Sunday, and you can't find an open drugstore in the whole country unless it is in the south of Ireland. Methodism in all its seven branches teaches conversion and a holy life. Episcopalianism teaches regeneration by baptism with morality, and in many churches a go-as-you-please life and very seldom highly exemplary. Methodist Episcopalian is an improvement on the Episcopal. But you couldn't find a Methodist, Baptist or Congregational professing Christian going to a store on Sunday getting his bill made out and settling the same. Neither could you find a member of either in a saloon on the Sunday, although unfortunately the Episcopalian brewer, distiller and saloonkeeper (publican) are all more or less allied to the Episcopal Church and these are used by the bishops and parsons, as in the last general election, to defeat the Liberals (mostly nonconformists), and will repeat the attempt when the proposal for disestablishment comes out. The mottoes, "Church and Beer," "Beer and the Bible," being approvingly displayed by Episcopalians.

Then you are tardy in your article on Sunday newspapers. The fight has been on for weeks. A layman occupied the pulpit of the largest Baptist church in this city three or four years ago. He had no use for Sunday papers. He said: "The reason why you people fail to get a blessing at the Sunday morning service is because you come here filled, not with the spirit of worship, but with the rot and gush of the Sunday newspaper." "Amen!" said some of us!

Are not many of the women worshipers' heads more full of Sunday paper bargain counter ads than they are of the blood that bought them? Sunday ads made them very late at the service. You know that a large proportion of women come in after the service has begun. It is not household duties or cares that belates them always. Only one Detroit paper is voicing the pulpit utterance on Sunday desecration.

Ours isn't the highest form of civilization on the earth. The Sandwich Islands are ahead of us in keeping the Sabbath! How d'ye like that? And the Disciples of Christ are as bad as others in this country. Isn't it time to wake up lest the Sunday newspaper help on the efforts and interests of advocates of the Continental Sunday? They are trying hard to do it. Ecclesiasticism helps the matter. Romanists that have wandered away from the true (?) fold—there are many thousands of them full of papal indifference as to God's ideal of holy living and not Protestant enough to appreciate the blessing of Protestant New Testament teaching.

I hope to see the dear CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST doing the work of an evangelist amongst the Sunday dissipators and jogging the consciences of the "Christians" in the matter of Sunday trade, as leading down to Continentalism. Advise the men to buy their cigars Saturdays (better still, to devote their smoke to Christian missions, as "incense of a sweet smell," sweeter than tobacco fumes, anyway), clean their bikes Saturdays instead of Sunday forenoons—a frequent excuse among young fellows for nonattendance at the forenoon service. If I misinterpreted your remark about English Christian conservatism I offer apology.

Yours truly, H. BIDDLECOMBE.

[We admit the foregoing, not as a reply to anything we have said, but as a needed emphasis on the importance of maintaining the Lord's day as a day of rest and of spiritual recuperation.—EDITOR.]

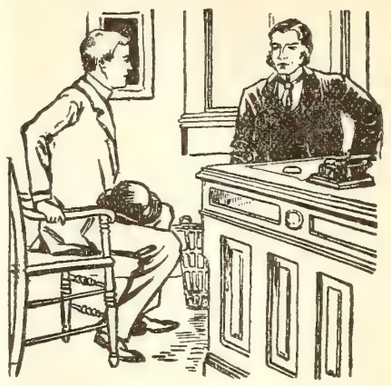
Minnesota.

The 3,000 brethren of the state will meet in annual convention at Rochester the closing week of August and a most refreshing time is looked forward to. E. T. Gadd, of St. Paul, the state secretary, is at work on the program which it is proposed to make a "rouser." Lay your plans for attendance. By the way, the treasury is empty and has your church and all of its auxiliaries given due support to the work for the year? If not, why not? Attend to the matter forthwith and save embarrassment to God's work.

The Minnesota Christian Missionary Society is not a close corporation, owned by the dozen officers and directors managing it, but is a society made up of units of churches and individuals, of which you are one; therefore, display interest of a substantial kind in furtherance of its work. Foreign Missions, Home Missions and other benevolences have been happily responded to, and now at least may this child, particularly our own, be given due attention. A. T. Goldberg, of St. Paul, Shuneman & Evans, is the treasurer.

The following from the Minneapolis press is self-explanatory:

Minneapolis is to lose another of its pastors, Rev. Carey E. Morgan, Portland Avenue Church of Christ, having decided to accept the call extended by the Seventh Street Church, of Richmond, Va.



Although he has definitely decided to make the change, Mr Morgan will be in no haste to leave Minneapolis, but will remain for a time sufficient for the Portland Avenue congregation to obtain a satisfactory successor.

Mr. Morgan has had charge of the Portland Avenue Church for five years past, and his administration has been more than ordinarily successful. At the present time, after steady and continuous growth, the congregation numbers over 450, and the church is in first-class condition financially.

The Richmond church is one of the oldest and largest of the denomination in this country, and has a congregation numbering between 800 and 1000, and the change may therefore be looked upon as a promotion for the popular pastor. Before coming to this city Mr. Morgan filled a pastorate at Wabash, Ind.

The Minneapolis congregation feels that a serious blow has come to it, but will bravely set about securing as worthy a successor as possible and raise the standard of the cross still higher if possible.

Preceding Brother Morgan was W. J. Lhamon, of Allegheny City, both beloved. The brethren are a unit in everything undertaken and hence the pastor to be is to be congratulated. A more loyal and enthusiastic body of young people cannot be found.

From the day that a young man starts out to seek his first position to the end of his business life, his health has a world to do with his success. When a young man applies to a business man for a position, his personal appearance has a deal to do with the outcome. "Personal appearance" does not mean dress alone. It does not mean exterior cleanliness alone. A young man may be clean, so far as soap and water will make him, but be disfigured by unsightly pimples, eruptions and ulcerations on the skin. These are due to impurities in the blood. The blood becomes impure because it is improperly nourished. Instead of receiving the life-giving elements of the food, it receives the foul emanations of indigestion, bilousness and costiveness.

The reason that Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery is the best remedy for disorders of this description is that it goes right to first causes. It gives a man an appetite "like a horse." It facilitates the flow of digestive juices. It corrects all disorders of the digestion, and makes the assimilation of the life-giving elements of the food perfect. It invigorates the liver. It purifies and enriches the blood. It makes the muscles strong and active. It tones and steadies the nerves. It makes a young man look as he should—strong of body, alert of brain and clean and wholesome of skin. Medicine dealers sell it, and have nothing "just as good."

"I had eczema in its worst form," writes Austin Ramsey, Esq., of Saltillo, Huntingdon Co., Pa. "I tried three doctors but got no relief. I thought it would set me wild, it itched and burned so badly. The neighbors thought I would never be cured. I took your 'Golden Medical Discovery' and am now well."

Brother Morgan was recently given a week's vacation, by request of the foreign board, to visit the brethren of Manitoba, and reports having had a royal time at Portage La Prairie in a convention. Portage has a population of 5,000 and the little church there is doing bravely under the leadership of John Monroe. Minnesotians in their isolation think themselves entitled to commiseration, yet here is a body of brethren still 500 miles further to the North happy and determined.

The Richmond church will receive scriptural measure in many ways in fulfillment of the contract with Brother Morgan. Mrs. Morgan will be an asset of priceless value in all matters both in and out of the church. She is president of the Minnesota C. W. B. M. and a member of the Minneapolis Society of Women's Clubs. Two sons, almost young men grown, and active in Y. P. S. C. E. cirles, add to the ensemble.

Contrasts seem to mark Mr. Morgan's change. From one of the youngest states he will go to the "Old Dominion," the oldest, with five presidents to its credit, Washington being first; from the North to the South 500 miles; from the West to the East 1,000 miles; from expansive plains to the Blue Ridge Mountains; from isolation to contiguity, for Richmond has three churches, and Washington with its Brother Power but 100 miles away, etc. F. H. MELLEN.

The Iowa Letter.

One of the happiest occasions of a happy year was my recent visit to Corning, Adams Co., Iowa. The date was June 25th, and the occasion was the dedication of our church house. That house has for me more interest and more attraction than any other. One Iowo house is attractive because my father's handiwork is in it. Another is dear because I began my ministry in it. In another I was ordained, and a brother and sister were baptized. I helped build and save the one in which our son was baptized. But into no task have I put so much of my heart and brain and soul as into the rescue of the house at Corning.

It was a desperate and oftentimes hopeless task. But in spite of all difficulties it was dedicated free of debt on June 25th. Looking back now over four years packed full of romance, tragedy and heroism I feel profoundly certain that God saved that house. I could not prove it to a skeptic, but I believe it with all my heart. On June 25th there was no other spot on earth more attractive to me than this beautiful county-seat in Southwest Iowa.

In saving this house I was surrounded and helped by a noble bad of men and women in and out of the town and county. I think I can mention almost a dozen who at critical periods with one word could save or destroy the whole enterprise. These all said the right word or did the reght thing. I will not attempt to mention all, lest I cmit some of the most worthy. But four or five of the choicest ones must not be omitted. At one time Keith Vawter was absolutely indispensable. At another Bro. Carter, of Blue Grove, rose up like Moses in Egypt. Then came Wm. Orr, of Clarinda, as a Joshua. Like Gallio in Paul's day was Dr. Rawson, of Corning. Though not a member of our congregation, he was a friend in deed and in truth. Bro. Freeman, of Tingley, wired a message at a critical period that was of untold worth to us, and last but not least is the pastor, who took the helm in the midst of the storm, W. B. Crewdson. Without his unselfish, patient, faithful work of years all the previous efforts would have gone for nought. His people, I am pleased to know, realize this and have called him for another year. This pastorate seems destined to be a perpetual monument in his life work and one well deserved.

Two missionary boards were interested in this rescue. The board of the Iowa Christian Convention had the wisdom and the patience to stand for Corning as steadily as the pole star. They borrowed money at a critical period, and when that was not enough, Gov. Drake, W. W. Williams, G. L. Brokaw and the secretary subscribed liberally of their own means. The Church Extension Board, of Kansas City, Mo., G. W. Muckley, secretary, came to our help early in the struggle. Their telegrams came in the nick of time and was worth more than the figures on its face. God bless these boards and the churches and hosts of good friends whose faith did not fail them in the hours of temptation.

One by one our churches are freeing themselves from debt. Marshalltown was first after the coming of better times. Oskaloosa and Corning are the most recent. University Place is planning to lead the van next spring. What a mission force Iowa will be when its church houses are once paid for.

EDUCATIONAL.

This is Educational Day for our churches. I have just listened to a good sermon by A. E. Cory, suitable for the occasion. If any Iowa preacher has neglected the day, pray do not let July pass until you present our educational interests to your people. Bro. Cory asked me to say a few words after his sermon. At the moment I declined, but now I will accept and say them in print:

When our leading churches are out of debt, as suggested above, the colleges should feel it as well as the mission societies. All our strong churches in Iowa, save Cedar Rapids, were heavily loaded with debt from 1894 to 1898. This fact as much as any other stood in the way of Chancellor Craig in his heroic struggle to free Drake University from debt.

"Which would you rather have, $5,000 in cash or your child (son or daughter) for a full course in Drake University?" I do not hesitate a moment in answering, "The child." If we can get your child until graduation we will have his intelligent interest and influence for the rest of his life, and if that does not mean more than a paltry $5,000 God's arithmatic is is wrong. $5,000 is nowhere with the future of an average young man or woman of Iowa or any other state.

"None of our own schools will ever get a child of mine if I have to send him from home to reach it. I will patronize any good college at home first." So said a friend of mine after the sermon to-day. So do a host of good people, on the ground that the home influence is too valuable to sacrifice at any cost. As parents we want to keep our children at home; if we followed our feelings they never would leave home. But does that prove us wise? Think for a moment: Your child must leave home sometime. Providence has so decreed it. For that first flight from the home nest, what better place on eart can you choose than a good Christian college? It is no strange, untried experiment. We know the results and challenge you to find anything superior. In the secend place, home influence does not cease when the child is one or two hundred miles away. If it is valuable and praiseworthy it is strengthened and multiplied. Some poor souls live and die without either really seeing or knowing father or mother in any wide, deep sense. They have never been far enough away. I know this from a thorough and wide experience. I got it afresh the other day from the letter of a soldier boy in the Philippines. I would very much rather support a missionary for the Methodists or the Presbyterians than to give them the college years of my son. That gives them a mortgage on him and his home forever. The cause I love most shall have that mortgage whether our school is near or far. I shall be as true to Christ in sending him to college as I was in my baptism.

Another word, suggested by the sermon this morning. The influence of the life and death of one man has been worth more to us than all the money sunk by our people in unsuccessful college ventures. I mean the life and death of James A. Garfield. If this is too strong a statement for you, do not debate it, but put in a few more lives and learn this lesson: "God has paid us more than a hundredfold for every dollar paid or sunk in our educational enterprises.

IN your experience with White Lead have you ever been troubled with cracked, pulled or alligatored surfaces, or have you ever heard of such trouble in the use of White Lead?

Never; and these conditions were never known until the introduction of zinc white, "combination lead," and ready-mixed paints, the two last composed largely of zinc, barytes, whiting, etc., very little lead, if any.

THE GOLDEN WEST. MISSIONS IN CALIFORNIA. T. P. REED AND THE WORK AT MADISON.

When people in "the states" speak of the golden West it does not always suggest to them the real origin of the phrase. It does not come from the fact that gold ore is so plentiful, but from the rich golden coloring of the harvest fields in June and July. Almost the entire central part of the state is of this tan or yellow or the much-coveted metal without the statutory amount of alloy. The immense ranches of thousands of acres appear as if they were vast sheets of gold spread over the surface of the earth. This is harvest time, and in this part of the state the harvest is abundant. The great machines, drawn by thirty-two horses through the waving grain, leaving in their wake grain threshed and sacked, are fine specimens of our modern mechanical skill, compared with the old reaping hook, are striking illustrations of human progress.

In Central California a great many missions are located. In this county and city I think they predominate. A good many laughable stories on this account are perpetrated at their good-natured expense. I give an exanple: A witness on the stand was asked his native place. He supposed it was a scheme to get a laugh on him, so he refused to answer. The judge told him he must answer the question or go to jail for contempt of court. He replied, "From Missouri; now laugh you," with Missouri emphasis. It gives a fine opportunity to study the effects of migration and change of environment. Mr. Darwin would have made use of these conditions for the enlightenment of scientists. Not having the scientific sense I cannot detect such minute differences as would be marked to his class. To me they are very much the same—hearty, good willed and generous people as people that great state to-day.

Along with Missouri's sons have notably come some of her prophets. One of them I had the pleasure of hearing last week. Bro. T. P. Reed was formerly in the employ of the Missouri state board. He is now located at Madison, where he is doing a good work. He is as faithful here as he was in his native state. I heard nothing but good reports of his work. I addressed the Endeavorers of his church a few evenings ago. They are a happy, earnest band of young people, appreciative of anything good a speaker happens to say. Bro. Reed has the strongest church in the town, and his Endeavor is the most influential society of young people. His many friends will be glad to know his health is much improved.

CHARLES E. GARST.—II.

"A lofty hope, if earnestly pursued,
Is its own crown, and never in this life,
Is labor wholly fruitless. In this faith
I shall not count the chances—sure that all
A prudent foresight asks, I shall not want;
The rest is God's."

Man proposes, but God disposes. Many are brought along a way that they know not. Charles E. Garst, the future missionary, was first to see service as a soldier in the regular army. He was appointed a cadet to the Military Academy at West Point, from which he was graduated in the centennial year. All the associations and the traditions of this famous school are calculated to excite and to develop the national spirit. This is well enough in its way. Some students, however, who were educated in this institution, became noted for piety as well as for personal bravery. Stonewall Jackson, and Bishop Leonidas Polk are well-known examples. While obedient to the rules and regulations of the academy, Mr. Garst was also mindful of his allegiance to a higher authority. Prayers and the study of the divine Word received the same diligent attention that he gave to the drill and the recitations in the class room. He also exercised his gifts both in the prayer-meeting and in the Sunday-school. One who was his most intimate associate during these years says: "I first knew him, when he was appointed a cadet, fresh from his father's farm in Iowa. Tall, straight, soldierly, with a keen sense ot honor, he won the appreciation of his classmates, and the respect of his superior officers. He never allowed his good fellowship, however, to interfere with his stern sense of duty." About that time he became a regular reader of the Christian Standard, edited by Isaac Errett, a prince among writers. This paper had much to do in molding the opinions and in shaping the religious life of the gifted young soldier. After graduating he visited Dayton, the home of his childhood. Here he heard M. D. Todd, a strangely endowed preacher of the Word. Having given himself thoroughly to the service of the Lord, he was buried with him in baptism, and at once identified himself with the Disciples of Christ. He was commissioned a lieutenant in the regular army, and assigned to duty in New Mexico. A soldier of his country, he did not forget that he was also a soldier of the cross. His admirable character and his influence for good are curiously suggestive of Cornelius, the Roman centurion, whose prayers and whose alms went up as a memorial before God. His genial nature and rich fund of humor made him a delightful companion. This rare and radiant gift of attracting and holding friends he devoted to high and holy ends. It gave him access to many a soldier's heart. He improved his opportunity, and before he knew it he was a missionary. He took the confession of a fellow officer and baptized him in the Rio Grande. This was the earnest of a greater work he was given to do in a wider field. Obtaining leave of absence, he entered Butler University in order to pursue a course of Bible study. Later he resigned his commission in the army and became a foreign missionary.

November eighth, eighteen hundred and eighty-one, he was married to Miss Laura De Lany, a granddaughter of Jonas Hartzell, of blessed memory. In her veins flows gentle blood. She is a woman of intelligence and culture. Her gifts and graces shed a radiance over every circle in which she moves. She was in hearty sympathy with her husband in all his purposes and plans to preach the gospel in heathen lands. Later she walked with him the thorny pathway of the mission in India. She shared his trials and sacrifices in sowing the good seed of the kingdom in that virgin soil. She was his inspiration in life and his refuge in the shadow of death. This angel of light was by his side when the summons came, and the spirit passed out into the infinite and the unknown, where the sun is ever shining and separations never come. Mr. Garst first thought of becoming a self-supporting missionary to darkest Africa, out of which he expected an ample income. Drought, however, soon swept away all these interests, and brought his plans abruptly to an end. God had work for him to do in another way and in a different field. He accepted the disappointment gracefully and patiently awaited the leading of the divine Spirit. He also serves who only stands and waits. The waiting time, however, was not very long. Get thy spindle and thy distaff ready, and God will send thee flax. Isaac Errett, who was president of the Foreign Christian Missionary Society, was looking about for suitable parties to open a mission in Japan. He was well acquainted both with Mr. Garst and his wife. He knew their qualifications for the delicate and difficult task of establishing a mission in the land of idols. He also knew that their eager hearts were in the foreign work, and that it would give them the greatest joy they had ever known to attempt a mission in a heathen land. The appointment was made and gladly accepted as a trust from God. Mr. George T. Smith and wife were selected as associates in the proposed mission in Japan. This little company of four gifted and consecrated missionaries became the first representatives of the Disciples of Christ among the Japanese, who are the Anglo-Saxons of the Far East. Having been called to this high and holy service, Charles E. Garst at once resigned his position in the army and entered on the life and experiences of a missionary. This was as great a change in the life of the young lieutenant as was that of Saul of Tarsus when he espoused the cause of Jesus of Nazareth. In the month of October, eighteen hundred and eighty-three, the final farewells were spoken, and these witnesses for Christ sailed away to the land of the rising sun. After a delightful voyage over the autumn seas the gallant ship cast anchor in the beautiful harbor of Yokohama.

"Passed the long, unvarying course, the track
Oft trod, that never leaves a trace behind;
Passed the calm, the gale, the change, the tack,
And each well-known caprice of wave and wind;
Passed the joys and sorrows sailors find,
Cooped in their winged sea-girt citadel;
The foul, the fair, the contrary, the kind,
As breezes rise and fall, and billows swell,
Till on this jocund morn—lo, land! and all is well!"

Theory Versus Fact.

There it is again! A man caught in the whirl of his own theory and turned and turned until his brain grows dizzy and things get to bobbing and twisting out of proper time, because out of relation. Why must it be so? There are beautiful things in Mr. Hughes' book on Revelation. One feels the movement of a new life in reading it. The interest is intense from the first. He has worked out his theory well. It has as much right to be true as many other theories, perhaps more. But would it not be a mistake to press the theory too hard and try to topple over the very foundations of truth—at least so far as the theorizer may be concerned? Is the early teaching of Christianity less perfect than the later? Mr. Hughes says so. "Those who are looking for Christ to come in person to accomplish this [his conquest of the world] owe their faith to an earlier and less perfect expression of Christianity." That is to say, we should not have as much confidence in Peter and Paul when they speak plainly, as in John when he hides his thought in the inextricable muddle of symbols. This may be comforting to some who love dark sayings and to strain after things in a "glass darkly," but others prefer to hold to the "sound doctrine," and Peter and Paul are to them good authority.

The author's entreaty that we should seek Christ in the "clearer atmosphere" of the Apocalypse reminds one of the man who plead for the Jewish Sabbath as a day of Christian worship. It was, in effect, that the very existence of God was established by the fourth commandment while all the rest were insufficient.

Any way the theory that the preaching of the gospel in this age is to bring upon the earth the universal dominion of "righteousness, peace and joy in the Holy Spirit" seems, when one considers facts, an evanescent dream. And if the faith founded upon the "earlier expression of Christianity" begets a hope of the personal coming of the Lord to take unto himself his own bride and reign, then say I, let it be so, for it is a wholesome doctrine and full of comfort.

Vacation.

Come ye yourselves apart into a desert place, and rest awhile.—Mark 6:31.

The season is upon us when the tired workers are dropping their burdens and hieing them away to the places of comparative solitude for a season of rest and recreation. In the above passage is found the divine warrant for taking a vacation, and suggestions as to why and where it should be taken.

It was to those who had just returned from the performance of arduous labors in the interest of his kingdom that he said, "Come apart and rest awhile." They had been toiling and were tired. The invitation was not to those who had been following him merely for the sake of the loaves and the fishes, nor to those who had kept close in his wake only to dispute with him and to find fault with his teachings. Nor was it to those who had spent their time in idleness, or those whose only exertion had been to find some excuse for doing nothing. The rest to which he invited his disciple was possible to those only who were weary from actual service. The consciousness of having honestly earned it is essential to the enjoyment of rest. Think of the church member who has done absolutely nothing for Christ and his church in five years, trying to enjoy a rest from religious toil! But there are those who are weary from honest, faithful toil in the Master's vineyard, to whom the invitation to rest is very precious. The faithful mothers, teachers, professional and business men and women, and all the toilers in all callings and stations in life who, in addition to their other duties, take up the work of the church, are in a position to enjoy the rest and renewing to which the text invites.

The divine law of compensation demands that rest shall be the reward of toil. The same law that demands compensation, demands that it shall be adequate. Rest, therefore, is as necessary as the toil for which it is the compensation. All injury wrought by toil must find reparation in rest. If toil produces tension, rest must furnish relaxation. If work wrecks, rest must rebuild. If labor depletes, rest must replenish. This is true in the realms of matter, mind and spirit. Wherever we turn we are confronted with manifold illustrations of the value and necessity of rest. The tenderest plants are the plants that perennially bloom and bear. If Dr. MacLure had taken regular vacations a very much older man would have been "beeried" on the day of the saddest funeral ever known in Drumtochty. If the locomotive that draws the long laden train must have rest and reparation in order to avoid a break-down and to be in condition to make the next trip, how much more does a man need rest for the same reasons. To save the strength that remains and to supplement it with a new supply is the true purpose of a vacation, and the all-sufficient reason why it should be taken. "But," says one whose only work is to find fault with the workers, "the devil never takes a vacation!" I am glad of it. He will break down the sooner. God and Christ both rested themselves and recommended it to others. Their example and recommendation ought to outweigh those of the devil, with Christians.

Where shall we go to rest? With Christ to the desert. He did not say "Go" but "Come." As he had gone before them in the work, so he proposed to lead them to a place of rest. If we have been glad to have him with us in the work, surely we shall be equally glad to have him with us while we rest. As only they who work with Christ can rest with him, so only they who rest with Christ can come back prepared to work with him. As his presence is essential to the success of the work, so it is essential to the success of the rest. How sweet is the society of the resting Christ, only those know who have rested with him. The resting Christ is the renewing Christ. "Come [with me] apart [from the scenes of toil and strife] and rest [from active service] awhile." Where, Lord? "Into the desert." Into the solitude of the uninhabited regions where you can be alone with nature and nature's God. There, with your weary hand close clasped in his, and your tired head pillowed on the lap of mother-earth, be lulled into perfect repose by the soothing tones of his gentle voice as he speaks to your tendered heart through the manifold media of multitongued nature. Through the stillness that is broken by no harsher sounds than the murmuring of brooklets and the singing of the birds and the soughing of the winds in the boughs of the trees, he will speak to your soul of the peace of God that passeth understanding. Through the spotless snow that crowns with glory the lofty peaks, and the diamond dewdrop that mirrors in its tiny bosom the myriad hosts of the measureless heavens, he will speak to thee of the purity of heart that is but the reflected radiance of the glorious God. In the bared head of the beetling crag, he will speak to thee of the reverence that is due him of whom it is said, "The Lord is in his holy temple; let all the earth keep silence before him!" In the giant trees that grasp with their roots the eternal rock and lift their laden arms to heaven he will speak to thee of the living faith that clings to the Rock of Ages while it lifts the lost in the arms of love to share in the light and life above. In the limpid stream that rushes onward here, and there pauses in a placid pool preparatory to the battle with the boulders farther on, he will speak to thee of the activity and the rest that must alternate in every life that is what the Maker meant it should be. In the vine that covers the gnarled, shattered stump he will speak to thee of the love that seeks to bind up the broken heart and to hide with its mantle the faults of friend and foe. In the wondrous scenes beheld at the birth and the death of day, masterpieces of that peerless painter, the King of Day, he will speak to thee of the effulgent glory of Him, the radiance of whose presence blots out the sun and makes eternity and endless day.

Salt Lake City, June, '99.

In the Northern Black Hills.

If you are looking for a summer outing, where the nights are always cool, where the air is always the purest, where the beauty of mountain scenery is unexcelled anywhere in the world—then rest your weary selves by spending a month in the Black Hills.

A visit to the Black Hills of itself is a liberal education. Come and shake hands with this fearless, noble-hearted people who have hearts as large as their fishboats. Come and see how the gold that runs the commerce of the world is washed from the broken golden rocks. Come and go to Sand Creek and catch trout by the hundred and shoot squirrels and mountain grouse.

There is no church of Disciples in the Hills. Then if you are a brother minister, come and preach to this people. They will gladly hear and, I believe, obey.

Let me mark out a route for you. Come to the Hills over the Elkhorn from Omaha. Stop at Rapid and visit the Hot Springs and Wind Cave. Then come on to Peidmont, take the Fort Pierce Railroad up Elk Creek Canyon to Lead, the home of the largest free milling gold ore in the world. Pull our latch-string while in Lead. Go over the B. & M. to Spearfish, down Spearfish Canyon, the finest bit of mountain scenery in the United States, so says Bob Burdette. From Spearfish go by coach to Sand Creek and catch trout, and on still farther to Devil's Tower, than which there is nothing so grandly beautiful in all the National Park. Come back to Sylvan Lake and Harvey Peak, catch more trout and shoot all the grouse you can eat, and you will go home a wiser, stronger and better man than when you came. I am not an agent for anything or anybody — simply a school-teacher. But I know of these beauties here in the hills from experience, and I devoutly wish the dear brothers in other states could know and enjoy them, too. All the Disciples in the city, with two exceptions, take the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST, and I am going to have them—must have them. We cannot begin to express the joy we receive from our weekly reading of the dear old CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST. Sister Lizzie, to whom I send it in Southern Ohio, writes: "I do enjoy the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST so much." God bless its editors and contributors.

The University of Indianapolis.

It may be of interest to the brotherhood to know that the affairs of the university are gradually being shaped as they should be. The Indiana Law School is now reorganized under the control of the university, and its capability much increased. The course in the department of law is materially strengthened, and we shall be able to look after students and their personal welfare. Any of our brethren, therefore, whose sons are sent to us for the study of law, or of medicine, or dentistry, will find that their boys receive careful personal attention from the university office.

The Bible College is in an excellent condition. There were about thirty young men in the college last year preparing for the ministry, and from what we hear this number will be much increased next fall. The demand for catalogues has been very great and the letters of enquiry many. Most of those preparing for the ministry in Butler are taking first a stiff college course before entering upon the biblical studies. This is much to be advised and commended. But many young men who have not time for so long a course are permitted to take a shorter one and are encouraged to come to us. Young men are also advised not to preach a great deal while in college, but for those who have to do so we have exceptional advantages in railroad facilities, being at the center of a network of railroads, and being surrounded by numerous small towns and country churches. There is no place in the United States more easily accessible than Indianapolis; and this fact has told very much in the opportunities our young men have had for preaching. Not a Bible student in Butler last year but could obtain all the preaching he cared for.

Furthermore, the financial prospects are better for the Bible College, and the College of Arts as well, than they have been in years. Our brotherhood in Indiana is moving strongly to the support of the college. The Indiana Christian is opening its columns in every issue to the college, and lending the most cordial aid. The preaching brethren in the state are also helping us by individual effort and sending us students and gaining us endowment. We have upwards of $30,000 of the $1000,000 which we have started out to raise for the Bible College and the remainder will be forthcoming. As to the financial affairs of the university, they are promising indeed; money is promised us in large amounts, which can be announced in the near future. Our church can find here the opportunity it has so long sought, of building up a great educational center, a university.

Three things our university has determined to do for next year:

First. To increase the number of students. In order to this end six young men have been employed as agents to go out and solicit attendance. And to every student of the college the offer has been made of $10 for every new student brought in.

Second. It has been felt that a site must be decided upon at once for erecting the new buildings for the university, as they are needed. Many have urged that the institution be brought into the city of Indianapolis, and there are many favorable consideration to be urged. But for college life, athletics and such pleasant accessories of the college a suburban site is needed. Irvington is strongly urging that the institution shall remain there, and is offering fifty acres of land in addition the present campus.

Third. Endowment must be raised within the next year amounting to about $250,000, in order to place the management of the Department of Arts more closely under the administration of the university.

These three objects we hope to accomplish in the coming year, and doubtless will.

BURRIS A. JENKINS.

In Memoriam.

PRESIDENT LOOS' REMARKS AT THE FUNERAL OF FATHER SWEENEY, PARIS, KY., MAY 25, 1899.

The occasion that has brought us together here to-day—the passing from the earthly to the heavenly life of Father Sweeney—is not one for sorrow or tears, but one of exultant rejoicing.

King David gave the the measure of an ordinary long life to be threescore years and ten; only by reason of strength will it reach to fourscore years. But "the measure of the days" of this father in Israel transcended fourscore and ten years. To few of men is vouchsafed so rich a gift of life as this.

And these years, even beyond threescore, except the latest, were not marked by bodily or mental decrepitude. Our good Father above gave to our brother unusual vigor of body and mind up to a high age. It was providentially a munificent inheritance from the sturdy Scotch-Irish stock of his ancestors; his father died 100 years old!

Those who knew him intimately can testify that to his last days he felt a deep interest in the great events and movements of the world. He read much, understood well what he read, and had a retentive memory. It was a pleasure to him to converse with men of intelligence on the great religious and secular questions of the times. Doubtless this thirst for knowledge, this keen interest in things worthy of the human soul, kept alive his intellectual and even his bodily vigor. Some men die in the outer, because they die in the inner man; they have lost the life of the soul. Internal often begets external decrepitude.

And this entire, rich and strong life, devoted to the greatest cause on earth—the kingdom of God in Christ Jesus. For seventy-one years he was a minister of the Word of life. What a record is this in the life of a man! The first year he was a Baptist preacher, a good prelude to the 70 years devoted to the mighty plea for the complete restoration of apostolic Christianity. And this great reformatory plea he embraced, like multitudes of others, with all the burning zeal of his soul, accounting no sacrifices of any moment for the joy and the priceless value of so great an enterprise. He was a preacher of power in those days of our reformation when every sacrifice was demanded of its advocates. Few, we believe, at this day, know of the exuberant joy that filled the hearts of these early pioneers in proclaiming to men "the old apostolic gospel," in pleading for "the Bible alone," for "the emancipation of the church from the bondage of human tradition;" in striving to make men understand that "all should be one," and that there is a sure foundation for the union of all Christians. To plead for these great thoughts and principles was the exalted and joyful task of such men as Father Sweeney, a task in which the glorious company of true men, of which he was one, never wearied, and which to them was its own rich reward. To his last days this great cause was to him as true, as necessary, as divinely approved, as inspiring as in the days of his youthful ardor in its service.

It was delightful and instructive to note how clear in his latest years was his discernment of what was right and what was wrong, what was wise and what was unwise, in the events of our history; he was always on the right side. With enlightened judgment he decided on what he saw and heard.

And what a testimony to the strong and good influence of this remarkable man in his own intimate domestic life, is the fact that all his four sons of their own accord became preachers of the gospel of the grace of God. Let this fact rest as a chaplet of honor and rich fragrance on his tomb.

We may truly say of Father Sweeney what was said of Abraham: "He died in a good old age." Like Job, "he came to his grave in full age; like as a shock of corn cometh in its season."

To his three sons here present, ministers of the gospel, I would say: Cherish as a blessed inheritance the history and memory of your father's life and seek to imitate it in its long and earnest devotion to the cause of God and to the inestimable interests of the great effort to restore in its fullness primitive Christianity on the earth. No ambition greater than this can inspire your souls. Live, labor and endure, as your father lived, labored and endured.

"The Fact of the Atonement."

DEAR CHRISTIAN - EVANGELIST: — In a late issue of the C.-E. Bro. Wickizer says: "But few people care to consider 'Higher Criticism,' and while the 'giants' may battle along these lines it is very questionable whether the masses of the people will or can be benefited by having these battles continuously waged before them." This I, too, am constrained to believe, and have been connecting the thought with the subjoined article from another pen, the reading of which had but just yielded me real delight. The article referred to, under the above title, is by J. P. Brushingham, pastor of the First M. E. Church, Chicago, and is from a recent issue of the Evangel, an undenominational monthly magazine, a stray copy of which chanced to fall into my hands.

At a time when so much that is noncommittal and evasive along this line is emanating from the professedly evangelical press and pulpit these plain and unapologetical utterances of Mr. B. are truly inspiriting. The impression that came to me as I read the article was that if Christians would but stand by this position as to the atoning blood we could indeed afford to be tolerant of one another's opinions on a thousand and one other matters. W. P. KEELER.

Chicago, June 23, '99.

I think it is Mr. Spurgeon who calls our attention to three fools. One is a soldier wounded on a field of battle and left for dead. The surgeon is by his side, and the dying man looks up with a question on his lips. Does he ask, "Is my wound mortal? Will I die? Is there any remedy?" No—he asks, "By what sword was I wounded? By what rebel's hand have I been laid low? Please, doctor, tell me every minute particular about my wound."

Then there is fool number two. A storm is raging on the sea. The ship is driven before the gale. There are dark, scudding clouds that chase each other like fluttering pigeons startled by the crack of the huntsman's gun. The thunder clouds deepen, the lightning flash adds its lurid glare to the hurricane which sweeps over the ship, while the masts creak and the sails are torn to shreds by the raging tempest Where is the captain? Is he on deck, manfully facing the gale and trying to save the cargo and the passengers? No—he has descended to the cabin and is speculating upon the philosophy of storms at sea—the mysteries of thunder, lightning and wind. He is reckless of the fated ship, the lives of passengers and crew, even his own life. That man is mad. If he were on shore he would be in a lunatic asylum.

The third fool attends church. He finds himself wounded on the battlefield of earth's spiritual and moral conflicts. Instead of seeking a remedy he cudgels his brain to find whence came the spear by which he was thrust through the heart, whence came the dread foe of his soul's life. He is on the stormy sea of evil, and instead of asking, "How can I get rid of this tempest and whirlpool and calamity of life?" he dwells upon the origin of sin and temptation and inquires as to the philosophy of redemption. He asks, "Why and how does the blood of Christ cleanse? What links the death of Christ to the forgiveness of sin?" He forgets that a single fact is worth a thousand arguments; that it is possible for him to have a personal experience in pardoning grace and redeeming mercy. The atonement need not be a theory or a speculation. He may pass from the stage of philosophy into the realm of personal consciousness, and say with the psalmist, "There is a fountain opened in the house of David for sin and uncleanness." He may behold for himself the Lamb of God slain from the foundation of the world. He may let others talk about the vicarious, substitutional, governmental, moral-influence—the penal, commercial, or personal-influence theories of the atonement. He glories in the fact of redemption through the blood of Calvary, and believes that God was in Christ reconciling the world to himself and has given unto him that ministry of reconciliation. He sings with the poet:

We may not know, we cannot tell,
What pains he had to bear,
But we believe it was for us,
He hung and suffered there.

He died that we might be forgiven,
He died to make us good,
That we might go at last to heaven,
Saved by his precious blood,

[The difference between the fact and the philosophy of the atonement is the difference between faith and opinion, which we have always emphasized. The distinction is important. The relation of the death of Christ to human guilt and to salvation from sin is vital; but no philosophy or theory of the atonement ever formed has been found adequate. We can rest on the fact and rejoice in the knowledge of sins forgiven without waiting for a satisfactory theory on the subject.—EDITOR.]

Notes and News.

The South Broadway Church, Denver, Col., S. B. Moore pastor, has adjourned its Sunday evening services during the vacation season.

Miss Lizzie Morris, of New London, Mo., writes that the church there is making a desperate effort to relieve itself of debt. Bro. Harris, a Christian University student, is preaching for the church and offers to give liberally of his small salary if the members will raise the amount needed. The help of any friend or liberally inclined persons not members of that church would be greatly appreciated.

In Good Condition.

Financial condition of the church good. One good sister loaned the church $800, some four years ago, but she has donated the church, from time to time, $300 of that debt.

On the remaining $500 we pay her five per cent. per annum, as interest, most of which she gives back to the church.

At the last board meeting all debts were ordered paid, and the church is free from debt save the above-mentioned, which will, by the liberality of our good sister, be given to the church.

The church is now being painted and new concrete sidewalks are being put down in front. The building will present a beautiful appearance in its new dress. All money required for the work is at hand,

W. H. Willyard, Pastor.

Our Invitation.

To the Churches of Christ in Virginia, West Virginia, North Carolina, South Carolina, Georgia, Florida, Alabama, Mississippi, the New England States, Nova Scotia, New Brunswick, Prince Edward Island, Ontario, Montana, North Dakota, South Dakota, Minnesota, Wisconsin, Arizona and Utah:

The School of Evangelists is now out of debt, and opens its doors to your young men who wish to preach, whether they have money or not. We are seeking to increase the number of laborers in the destitute regions. We desire young men of settled purpose and who have the staying qualities. There are no "easy places," "soft snaps" or "beds of roses" here, but we have never failed yet to make a good preacher of the young man who "stayed by the stuff." Send us the young men, and we will send you the preachers!

Particulars on receipt of two cent stamp.

Faithfully yours,

Ashley S. Johnson.

Exegetes, Attention!

The subject of polygamy is on the carpet again for discussion. When those who contend that polygamy was lawful to the Israelites are pressed from glittering generalities about David, Solomon, etc., are pressed to put their finger on the statute in the Levitcal code that repeals or modifies the original law of marriage, which they admit forbade it, they immediately quote Ex. 21:7-11; Deut. 21:15-17; Lev. 18:18; 2 Sam. 12:7,8.

Turn to the passages, read, study them with pen in hand and give me as early as convenient your level best exegesis.

I am preparing a tract that handles this subject from Genesis to Revelation, and I want the best aid I can command to split these seeming "knots on the log."

Mormon elders, "Brighamites," "Josephites" and "Whitmerites," are especially invited to participate in this exegetical feast.

The Convention in "Egypt."

We have mailed programs from center to circumference of this fertile and populous region. It will be a great convention. Thirteen new preachers are working among us this year, and these men are brainy, gritty and religious. Such men as McGarvey, Braden and Hardin are booked under written promise to be with us on important topics. No pastor can afford, nor can any congregation of true Disciples afford to neglect this great gathering. Again we urge each pastor to prepare a written report of his work; also the corresponding secretary of each district. Let C. W. B. M. and all the Endeavorers and Bible-school workers be interested and come up to this council on July 10-21 at Flora.

FIFTH DISTRICT.

To the Christian Churches of the fifth missionary district:

At the recent meeting of the churches of this district, held at Waverly, an entire change was made in the officers to serve for the ensuing year. We are very anxious to push forward the good work that has been carried on by our predecessors. To this end we ask your hearty co-operation. There is a vast field for our special missionay work in this district, and the Lord is calling us to this service.

We hope by your assistance to plant the cause of Christ in new fields, to "strengthen the things that remain" which are ready to die, secure in each county in the district county organization, to secure larger and more systematic giving to the state and district work and so arouse enthusiasm along all lines of church work. Will you join us in this service? The work is the Lord's and we are his servants.

It is our purpose to publish a monthly paper devoted to the special work we have in hand. The paper will be edited by J. W. Knight, of Carterville, and the district secretary, Paul H. Castle, of Virden. The paper will be for distribution among the churches of the district. You will be requested to contribute church news, which you will please send to the district secretary. Send in your news promptly. Do not neglect this important feature of our work.

Let us strive together to make this the very best year in the history of our organization.

May the blessings of our God rest upon all the churches of this district.

NEEDY PLACES.

Below I give a few samples of the many very needy places now crying for help. They can be multiplied indefinitely, but they are fair samples. I want all to read them closely.

Bloomfield.—This is the county-seat of Stoddard county and has a population of over 1,200. A college enterprise is now located there and the whole town is on the up-grade and bids fair to be one of the most important towns in Southwest Missouri. Our people there have just organized and are trying to build a house. They are few in number and poor in purse. To show how these people are willing to sacrifice I want you to know that Bro. J. H. Tiller, one of our preachers who lives there and to whose untiring efforts the congregation owes its existence, a poor man, yet he gives $300 towards the building. They are not able to sustain preaching and to build, and they ask aid that they may have the preaching of the Word. We have had to say them nay because the treasury was empty.

Jackson.—This is the county-seat of Cape Girardeau county, has a population of 1,000 and is rapidly coming to the front as one of the towns of Southwest Missouri. We have only six people in the town, but they have organized themselves into a committee of the whole and are determined to succeed. All are women but one and the sacrifices these women are making to try and establish the cause there put to shame all our littleness in that direction. They have appealed for help to sustain the preaching of the Word, they believe in their 161,013 brethren throughout the state. We had to disappoint them, and all this on account of an empty treasury. How long shall it be so?

Steelville.—This is the county-seat of Crawford county, has a population of 600 to 700. It is the seat of the Steelville Normal and Business College, which is manned almost exclusively by our own people as teachers. We have about twenty members in and about the town. They have been trying to establish the cause at that place and had arrangements all made when that terrible flood came last year in which fifteen people lost their lives and nearly half the town was destroyed. This placed our people in such condition that without help they cannot establish the cause. Other religious bodies have sprung to the rescue of their people while we have had to let the appeal go by on account of an empty treasury. We have the man to place there who can build it up, but the means are wanting. What shall your answer be to this appeal?

St. James.—This is one of the prominent towns of Phelps county, situated on the St. Louis and San Francisco R. R. It is beautifully located. Is the seat of the Soldiers' Home and a place of more than ordinary importance. We have a congregation there in an unorganized condition. Yet they have struggled on in face of difficulties that are very great indeed, and would have discouraged those of less heroic mold and have a house enclosed and floored and painted. It is not touched inside, neither ceiled nor seated. They have reached the limit of their power in this matter and in their discouragement they have appealed to us. If they could have a minister they could go on under his guidance and complete the house and establish the cause. Sad as it made us we have had to say, We cannot help you now. Brethren, the calls for the year's apportionment are in your hands. Will you not at once raise the whole apportionment and send it in? We want to answer these calls, we want to help these struggling heroes of the cross.

Remember, these are but samples, a few taken at random, from the many places that are asking for the bread of life. Many other places there are just as needy, some of them more so. The opportunity is ours to-day, let it pass and it may never return. "The King's business requires haste." We can answer these appeals if the churches will respond at once to ours. Only three months more and the convention year will be ended. Shall we not fill them to the full with such work as will rejoice the hearts of God's people and make heaven melodious with the joy-notes of victory? Yours in His name,

T. A. Abbott.

LIFE OF

ALEXANDER CAMPBELL

By Thomas W. Grafton.

This book is a condensed and accurate account of the life of this great religious reformer, beginning with his boyhood, and following him through his trials and triumphs to the end of his eventful life. This biography meets the wants of the busy people, who desire to know the important events in the life of this great man.

The following Table of Contents will indicate the scope of this book:

Preface, Introduction, Early Days, University Life, Emigration to America, Ministerial Preparation, Religous Discoveries, Trials and Triumphs, Christian Baptist, Religious Dissensions, The Christian Church, The Defender of the Faith, A Wise Master Builder, The Prince of Preachers, Travels at Home and Abroad, The Bethany Home, Closing Labors, His Place in History.

This book is printed in clear type, bound in latest style cloth, contains 234 pages, and the price is $1.00, postpaid.

Missouri and the Jubilee.

Dull indeed must be the ear that has not already caught the echoes of the trumpet notes, sounded out from Cincinnati, announcing the near approach of the great "Jubilee Convention" to convene in that city October 13, 1899.

The clear silver tones of the trumpet have been heard to reverberate along the mountains of the West and the great Northwest of our goodly land and have fallen, subdued and mellowed, upon the slopes of the peaceful Pacific. Texas, Arkansas, the Indian Territory and Oklahoma have each caught the echoes from the same blast as "westward" it sped its ways. An everywhere the people rejoice.

Missouri lies in the great Mississippi Valley, and possibly might not hear the trumpet peal as wafted from the highlands of the East to the "regions beyond," unless our ears are properly attuned. Some kind of communication should be made with the upper strata of air, that not one single blast sent out from Cincinnati should fail to be heard in the low lands of grand old Missouri. Let every preacher, therefore, become a kind of "receiver," and then echo and re-echo the trumpet call until the mighty hosts in this great state shall know that the "Jubilee Convention" is at hand.

We are a great people in a great state, and we should send a great delegation up to the greatest of all of our great conventions. Will the preachers of the state frequently announce the October convention, and help to work up a splendid representation from Missouri? Call attention to the Jubilee Convention next Lord's day, ask your people to get ready, tell them that it will be harder to stay at home, when the time comes, than to go.

Yours for a great convention,

J. T. OGLE.

Jubilee City Letter.

A CONVENTION CITY.

Cincinnati is a convention city. Back in ante-bellum days she was called the Athens of the West. Here many an intellectual contest was waged in those days, among which the great Campbell-Owen debate was not least.

To-day 500 business men are joined in a league for the sole purpose of bringing great conventions to the city, and recently their president made a call for a fund of not less than $100,000 so the league might provide all needs of coming conventions without expense to the visitors. They will furnish us with Music Hall and the Odeon in October, and have been most generous in every particular. Last week they sent a delegation of Christian people to Detroit with inducements for the C. E. convention of 1901, and the latest report indicates that we will get it. So far this year they have entertained the national conventions of merchants and manufacturers, of music teachers, the German Sangerbund, and later will come the Welsh singing societies.

THE GOLDEN JUBILEE SANGERFEST.

The German Sangerbund, or Choral Societies of America, have just celebrated their Golden Jubilee with a great Sangerfest, or "festival of song." The first society was organized here just 50 years ago, and like ourselves they returned to the mother city for their golden anniversary. An auditorium to seat 14,000 people was erected expressly for the occasion at a cost of $75,000. The Cincinnati Symphony and Thomas' Orchestra were united for the occasion, giving a splendid instrumental ensemble of 150 pieces, which to hear alone was worth coming many miles. These societies are composed of men only, and the immense chorus of 4,000 male voices was probably the largest trained chorus brought together since the great Boston Peace Festival. To look upon them was magnificent, to hear them inspiring. In the mother country these societies devote themselves almost wholly to German folk songs. The American societies have been given to the classical of late years, but this year made a return to the mother country idea, and will dispense even with soloists hereafter. Neither out-of-town attendance nor receipts were up to expectations, and thereby is a warning.

CONVENTION NOTES.

Every indication is now good for the expected 10,000 visitors in October.

Justin N. Green, chairman of the assignment committee, has gone to Detroit to study convention methods. The general committee have voted both him and Bro. Harvuot supply pastors for the summer that their individual attention may be given to the convention work. The Jubilee City intends to show its generosity from the start, and will prove as generous a host in October. A. W. TAYLOR.

"Consolidation of Missionary Societies."

The article that appeared under the above head in the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST of July 6 will meet the approval of the average preacher and his congregation, and the paper is to be congratulated on the sensible statement of the case. This, however, is simply to submit the recommendations of the Illinois board of missions as offered to the state convention two years ago. They were tabled at that time because of the hope that a plan of united effort would be unfolded at the Indianapolis convention. As no plan was offered at that convention the Illinois convention passed the recommendations at the last state meeting, and they are helping many churches to solve the question of proportionate giving, and they also do away with the annoyance of a multiplicity of "days." The recommendations are:

(1) That four Lord's days be set apart for special instruction in missionary work and the making of offerings, and that each day be preceded by a thorough canvass of the congregations for offerings in pledges.

(2) That the sums collected be divided proportionately among the missionary societies now organized.

(3) That at least twenty-five per cent. of all the money raised be paid into the treasury of this convention.

(4) That the secretary be instructed to solicit the churches to accept this plan.

(5) That in cases where churches are not ready to accept this method of raising and distributing their gifts to missions, the apportionment plan now in vogue be adhered to.

With four days to be observed the missionary preacher with his coworkers can make them "high days" indeed, and the churches will grow to love these rallies and look forward with pleasure to them. Let us not delay to find some means for consolidation of interests, but in the meantime the above plan will furnish a sensible relief.

J. FRED JONES,
Illinois Secretary.

The Work at Fredericksburg, Va.

We have, through general appeals to our brotherhood, raised $1,200 toward a building fund for a new church at Fredericksburg. This amount, with what we can control here, will enable us to finish up our building. We need $300 for furnishing our building, we must have pews, lights, carpets, etc. We ask the the brotherhood to help us raise this amount. The new building is now in course of erection and will be finished in August. We hope to dedicate free of debt the fourth Sunday in August and to follow the dedicatory services with a good meeting. Fredericksburg is an important point, sustained by our general and Virginia state missionary boards. The work was organized twelve months ago, and has been seriously crippled for want of a better building. We have been worshiping in an old unfurnished building, erected in 1832, wrecked by the Civil War, and since used a barn and outhouse. With a better building a fine work ought to be done and F. made an important center forour operations in Northern Virginia. If churches and individual brethren will answer our appeals by sending us small amounts we can soon raise the $300 and by the first of September be comfortably housed in our new church, and in a revival meeting. Let us not further cripple the work here for want of a few dollars, but let us have the three hundred. CEPHAS SHELBURNE.

The above report speaks for itself. Receipts to date are double those of last year of the same period. This was accounted for early in the year by the named loan funds and annuities.

This last month, however, we did not receive any amount from these sources. The gain which is nearly double that of last year, or over $5,000 in one month, which we believe is the largest per cent. of gain ever made by any society, is in contributions from churches and individuals. If we con keep this rate of gain until October it would bring us to the convention with $80,000. Then there may come to us in this our Jubilee Year still farther gifts in the way of annuities and named loan funds. So we still have a good fighting chance of celebrating our Jubilee with this gift of $100,000 to preach the gospel in America.

We know that thousands of loyal Christians will say when they read this—we must go up to Cincinnati in October with the full amount. It will be worth much to all our church and missionary enterprises. To accomplish this, all must work and work now.

We propose to make the campaign on each month and will give results to our friends. The first of August we will report what gain we have made for July. Then let all heed the following:

1. If your church has taken the offering, send at once your contributions.

2. If subscriptions have been taken in the church, be active in collecting the same now.

3. If you have not yet taken the offering, see that it is double any former offering.

4. Be on the sharp lookout for large gifts—annuities and otherwise.

4. This is the time for persons of even limited means to take life memberships and life directorships.

6. Every Endeavor Society should be on the Roll of Honor by sending a Jubilee offering of five dollars,

In short, this is the time for work, that we may come to our Jubilee with rejoicing.

To the Bible-schools and Endeavor Societies of Iowa.

The time is drawing nigh when we will need to make our final report to the Iowa Christian Convention. Blank statistic cards are being sent to the pastors of all our congregations. We have place on these for the report of Bible-school and Endeavor work. Ask your pastor for the card and see that it is filled out. If you fail to receive said card write Miss Jessie Williams, 232 West 4th St., Des Moines, and she will inclose you blank card at once. Once more I would like to urge upon our schools and societies to send in their name either for a life member or directorship to the Iowa Christian Convention. A life member will be $5 per year for four years. The life directorship will be $5 per year for five years. We have at least 100 schools and societies able to take one of these. I think so far we have only about 30 who have taken a life membership. Other states are supporting evangelists from the prooeeds of the schools and societies and I am certain we can do so in Iowa if we will. No greater field is open for aggressive and permanent work among the Disciples in Iowa at the present time than is found among our people. We need some one who shall give his entire time to this work, and our societies and schools are abundantly able to support a man if they will. May we not hear a response from schools and C. E. Societies at once saying we will take a "membership?"

Remember, the time is very short until convention time. Our state convention this year will be the first week in September. Begin now to get ready. Remember, the school or society that takes one of these memberships will be entitled to a delegate in convention. We have a great field among our young people in Iowa out of which to reap a bounteous harvest for the Master. Young people, the Lord will give us strength to reap this harvest if we will trust him and push forward. May I not hear a response from many of you at once?

DEAR SISTERS:—Three-quarters of the missionary year have passed and during that time our cause has not advanced as we had hoped. The first half of the year we were not able to find competent women who could go out and organize, but later Mrs. Clay and Mrs. Gilliam were sent into the field and both did good work. For months our president, treasurer and secretary were seriously ill and could not counsel with those who were trying to extend the work. Our sympathies have been touched and our hearts saddened by their suffering. We have all felt proud of our representatives, Mrs. Alice Williams, our president, Mrs. Carrie Johnson, our treasurer and Mrs. Virginia Hedges, our corresponding secretery, knowing them to be worthy and efficient in their respective official positions; and it is to be hoped that each of them will be speedily restored to health and continue to give us their valuable aid and counsel in our state work. In the meanwhile, let each of us by extra effort supply the loss sustained by their enforced suspension of labor. It has already been announced that Sister Hedges was compelled, on account of failing health, to give up her position, and that Mrs. B. F. Clay was chosen to fill the place. While we regret that Mrs. Hedges could not at least finish the year's work, we feel that we are fortunate in securing the services of one so capable as Sister Clay; and we ask for her your cordial co-operation. She will spend a part of the time in organizing new auxiliaries and strengthening old ones. We also desire to keep Sister Gilliam at work for some weeks. Will not every auxiliary in the state make an additional contribution in order that we may do so? How many sisters will, by a little self-denial, send one dollar to help push the work during the three months that yet remain before our state convention? The advisory board assigned me the duty of writing these lines and making this appeal to the sisters. A letter written in May should have appeared in the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST some weeks ago, but Bro. Hopkins wrote me that in his absence from the office the manuscript was lost. Since that time I have been ill—hence the delay. Sisters of Missouri, let us unite our efforts, overcome all obstacles and discouragements and close up our state work for this year in a manner worthy of the great cause for which we are laboring. Evangelistic.

MICHIGAN.

Du Plain, July 1.—One addition last Lord's day.—J. H. LACEY.

SOUTH DAKOTA.

Clark, June 29.—Five baptized last night; nine additions to date.—LAWRENCE WRIGHT, evangelist.

KENTUCKY.

Hodgenville, July 4.—Ten added in a recent two weeks' meeting, held by Bro. R. H. Crossfield, of Owensboro, Ky. The seed sown in this meeting will bring forth a larger harvest in days to come.—J. E. PAYNE, minister.

INDIANA.

Macy, July 3.—Two baptisms, man and wife, at Liberty Chapel, June 25.—J. A. LYTLE.

Indianapolis, July 5.—There were three additions at North Park Christian Church on last Lord's day.—J. M. CANFIELD.

CALIFORNIA.

San Bernardino, June 26.—Two baptized and one restored at our regular services Sunday. My son, Paul, recent graduate from Eureka College, Illinois, will join me next month. He has been called to the pastorate at Redlands. —J. C. MCREYNOLDS.

NORTH CAROLINA.

Asheville, July 4.—I have just held a most successful meeting of 25 additions at London, Ky. They are now going to build a new church. Bro. Dickinson, their pastor, is the most godly man and the best pastor I have ever known.—T. M. MYERS.

TEXAS.

Abilene, July 1.—Just closed a meeting at Wylie, with 24 additions. A Christian Endeavor Society of 34 active members and a Junior of 18 were organized. I am now in the Texas state mission work again, after a four years' rest. I hold my next meeting at Brownwood. Pray for me and the work in Texas.—A. J. BUSH.

NEBRASKA.

Plattsmouth, July 3.—Two young men made the good confession yesterday morning, another at the C. E. meeting and one from the Baptists a week ago. Our Children's Day offering for Foreign Missions was $18.75; apportionment, $15. Work is progressing finely on our new addition. The building will seat twice as many as it formerly did. We expect to rededicate early in August.—R. M. DUNGAN.

ARKANSAS.

Boothe, July 8.—I expect to help Bro. Bethel in a meeting at Logan Hall, five miles south of Boonville. Here is a booming town on a new railroad, where a Church of Christ should be established. Seven miles east is the town and mountain of Magazine. Here is a Christian Church and a town site company is advertising the mountain resort. Brethren may do well to look these two towns up for business or pleasure.—J. F. CALLAHAN.

KANSAS.

Kansas City, July 3.—Closed our meeting with 17 added to our congregation.—ELMER T. DAVIS, pastor First Church.

Hutchinson, June 30.—There were four additions to the church at our regular services last Lord's day; two of them by confession. The church progresses. Children's Day offering $30, the largest ever made by this church.—AARON PRINCE ATEN, pastor.

St. Francis, July 3.—On last Lord's day only I was called out in the country to preach. Four confessed Christ and were baptized.—H. C. VARNER.

Mound Valley, July 7.—I preached at Hiattsville last Lord's day; had five additions. The brethren there have been without a preacher for over a year, during which time some of the members have gone to the sects "for church homes(?)". O, may the people of God become established in the "present truth." We had five additions at our last meeting here at Mound Valley. The cause is in a prosperous condition.—J. P. HANER.

Erie, July 7.—Thirteen additions since last report. One by confession at Shaw; one by confession at Galena; nine by confession and two otherwise at Savonburg.—C. J. SAUNDERS.

MISSOURI.

Joplin, July 3.—We had six additions yesterday; four by letter, one by statement, one by confession. Instead of ONE slot machine being banished, as the last Budget has it, there were 27, or all there were here. We are now free from the money slot machine.—W. F. TURNER.

Blackwater, June 27.—Two confessions at Shiloh, and two last Lord's day at Versailles. —JNO. G. RUSSELL.

CHRISTIAN PUBLISHING CO., St. Louis, Mo.

Farmington, July 1.—Our report for month of June is as follows: The work here increases some in general interest. The church and Sunday-school attendance has grown. New song books bought, weekly song practice established, Children's Day observed, a delightful "pounding" given the pastor and wife, one marriage. Preach each first Sunday at Mine La Motte. Five additions there. Assisted Bro. Eugene Burr in a few days' meeting at Liberty; five additions.—A. M. HARRAL.

New Franklin.—Two additions Sunday morning and two at the weekly prayer-meeting at Booneville, Wednesday.—G. F. ASSITER, pastor.

Gilman City, July 6.—I am now engaged in a short meeting at this place. We have organized a church here with 14 charter members. The brethren here want to build a church sometime in the near future. The church at Craig gave me a call for another year, beginning June 1. I have the privilege of holding two meetings this year. Churches desiring meetings can address me at Craig, Mo. The work at Craig is prospering, and all the forces are at work.—H. W. CIES.

ILLINOIS.

The ministers of Marion County, Ill., have organized the "Marion County Ministerial Association," for the purpose of bringing themselves into closer touch with each other's work and to go out two by two into the Macedonias of the county whence cometh the cry for help. Accordingly, Elder J. H. Smart, of Centralia, and Elder G. Halleck Rowe, of Salem, were sent to Kinmundy to hold a meeting and establish the church there. Elder Smart did the preaching and Elder Rowe conducted the song and devotional services and did the baptizing. Meeting lasted three weeks and resulted in organizing a church with 42 charter members, to which were added four more by confession and baptism, making 46 in the total; 35 of these held membership here and there, and 11 came by primary obedience—four of the 11 were heads of families—one was the wife of the mayor of the city. A provisional committee was appointed, a board of trustees chosen, and steps will be taken at once to secure a lot upon which to erect a house. Elder Rowe will return one evening in each week to preach for us till we can make arrangements for a permanent pastor.—E. C. BARGH, clerk.

Longview, July 3.—Seven additions at Hugo, fourth Lord's day in June. Preached Monday night and up to Thursday night at Camarg; had a fine interest. Hope to be able to reorganize the work there soon; had three additions here at Prarie Chapel first Lord's day in July.—B. N. ANDERSON.

Scottville, July 6.—I baptized four last Sunday. I preach regularly at Modesto one-fourth time. I have one Sunday in the month not taken; would like churches to take notice.—C. D. MAPLE.

Kankakee, July 2.—Three confessions today as a result of "Decision Day."—W. D. DEWEESE.

Rosville, July 3.—Had seven additions by confession and baptism at my regular appointment yesterday morning at West Liberty, Fountain County, Ind.—T. L. STIPP.

ALBERT BUXTON.

Our nation's God! not this our prayer—
These loud huzzas and vaunting boasts,
Nor this our incense in the air—
The sulphurous blaze of blatant hosts,
Nor prayer, nor incense, but a sin
This choking smoke and rattling din.

Not thine this anthem that we sing
With boastful chant, mid trumpet's blare
Nor these thy altar fires, O King—
The bonfire and the rockets glare.
For hymn, O God, nor sacrifice;
But vaunting tune and flaming vice.

Forgive, O God, a misspent day;
Teach us to celebrate aright
On grateful knees, in reverent way,
Our nation's guidance by thy might.
This tardy prayer hear, God of hosts,
And pardon our forgetful boasts.

The Power of Song.

M. E. DUTT.

"Music hath charms to soothe the savage." I never have yet seen a person who did not like good music. Man is a want and God is a fullness. Music supplies part of that want.

I imagine when Adam was lonely in Eden that it was the melodious strains from heaven's choirs that caused that "deep sleep" to come on him, and when he awoke and beheld Eve in all her beauty (for she must have been extremely so), I think I can read the thought that is in his joyous heart: "Surely, this is the personification of those sympathies that lulled me to sleep mid the fragrance of Eden's bowers. Those were the sounds, this is the substance. One, music for the ear, the other, music for the eye and soul."

Realizing that this is a weakness of mankind—if weakness it may be called—we must take advantage of it and use it as one of the avenues of approach to his soul. Many a man will listen to a gospel song who will not listen to a gospel sermon.

The immortal Paul told us to "sing and make melody in our hearts." I have an idea he meant it. We have heard people sing, or try rather, whose melodies were all minors and chromatic and were far from being pleasant to the musically talented person, but by reason of the fact that we knew they felt the words—that it was a prayer from the most secret chambers of the soul—the discord melted away and became harmony in our ears.

The song is mightier than the (steel) sword. You can lead men, but you cannot drive them. Pardon a personal illustration. One evening another preaching brother and myself were in a store. A young man came in and wanted us to sing. We sang a few gospel songs, and in a short time the store was full of the "bum element" of the town, although there was a dance across the street. Singing always has a drawing power. The devil is up to date and has his representative singers out also. Here is a "coon with a banjo." What is he doing? See that crowd around him? Now he has stopped and says: "Dis concert will be continued up de street; come an' heah de worle's greatest singah." The concert is "continued," but he continued it in a saloon, and nine cases in ten he took the whole crowd in.

The great work the Salvation Army is doing may be accounted for on no other ground than by their gospel singing and going where the masses are. Although they have a misconception of the Word of God, we must admit that they are doing what we ought to do and what we must do before "the earth shall be filled with the glory of God."

The Master said: "Go out into the highways and hedges and compel them to come in." Our churches are open two or three times a week. We preachers play a little while on our "firstly," "secondly," and "thirdly," pray for the conversion of the world and then go home and wonder why people don't come to church. Just think! Over a million Disciples of Christ in the United States and poor Bros. McLean and Rains are just working themselves gray-headed to get each member to pay ten cents a year for foreign missions! The audacity they have in asking a million of us for ten cents can be compared to nothing save the audacity you have to withhold it from them.

Get out among them, you who can sing and preach, and compel them (by love) to come to Christ. When those who have the talent of leading song services can make up their mind to come down from their lofty habitation and work with the common herd, then we will see souls flocking to the cross, and not before. If any of you have the talent of leading the song service and by so doing you can make the gospel powerful in song but will not because you can not get pay enough for it, I would use the words of our Lord: "Zaccheus, make haste and come down."

Did I say, "Pay enough for it?" How much pay do you want? When I led my first convert down into the water and baptized him in the name of the Father, Son and Holy Spirit, was I repaid for the hard study and little privations I had undergone at school? Yes, a thousand times. If you, my brother, really love the Lord Jesus, you will feel amply repaid for all the expense you have been out for musical education when you can sway the minds of men and move them to tears and action by a simple gospel melody.

The successful singer must be like the successful preacher. He must be a man of unquestionable character. He must know how to feel the pulse of a congregation and prescribe for its many ailments. The gospel put up in "Song Pellets" may prove effectual when having been given in the form of a "Spoken Porous Plaster" it had no effect at all.

To make the truth effective both preacher and singer must work in perfect harmony. Hymns relating to "heaven" when the subject for discussion is "hell" would be quite out of place.

The songs that reach the heart are those that come from the heart. A good example of this is Ira D. Sankey. Mr. Sankey sings from the heart, hence his songs melt the hard-hearted sinners.

My brother, my sister, if you have been singing in an idle, listless way I beg you stop and stop now! Change and mean business. Let your heart be on fire with zeal for the souls of men and your tongue the avenue by which it escapes.

How much weight do you suppose a song has with a congregation when the soprano is surveying the "acres and acres" of the organist's new hat; when the alto is very much interested in a young man seated in the rear of the church; when the tenor is greedy and wants all the attention paid to him and goes through actions and facial expressions to make himself conspicuous and also ridiculous, and when the bass is big and sleepy and covers himself over two or three chairs with his feet upon another chair or the railing? I am afraid our choirs are becoming that way.

I am strongly in favor of plenty of books and congregational singing. When the right moment comes, a solo rendered by some one who has learned to talk plainly will prove very effectual.

And now if we ever expect to have our hearts attuned to the saving power of God; if we ever expect to be enraptured by the music of heaven's angelic armies, yea, be one of that innumerable throng and wear the conqueror's crown and lay our trophies all down at Jesus' feet, we must get out of this cold, half-hearted way of singing, and

"To God the Father's throne
Your highest honors raise;
Glory to God, the Son,
To God the Spirit praise.
With all our powers, eternal King,
Thy everlasting praise we sing.
And above all the rest this note shall swell,
My Jesus hath done all things well."

Education and Dollars.

Dollars are comparatively scarce in the world, and while there is enough of them to go around after a fashion, there is not enough to give to each person anything like as many as he wants. But satisfaction is pretty scarce also, and is at least as hard to secure as dollars. If the years spent in pursuit of education increase the farmer's chances of getting satisfaction out of life, they are profitably spent, even though they leave him somewhat behind in the race for dollars. For dollars and contentment are not synonymous terms, and the man who can combine few dollars with intelligent contentment is obviously better off than the man who, having more dollars than he can use, finds that the only employment which is really congenial to him is accumulating more.

It is more profitable to spend some time in youth in cramming the mind with knowledge not immediately useful than to be compelled for lack of other resources to spend one's old age cramming one's pocket with money that one does not want.—E. S. Martin, in Saturday Evening Post.

The Better Way.

Who serves his country best?
Not he who for a brief and stormy space
Leads forth her armies to the fierce affray.
Short is the time of turmoil and unrest,
Long years of peace succeed it and replace;
There is a better way.

Who serves his country best?
Not he who guides her senates in debate,
And makes the laws which are her prop and stay;
Not he who wears the poet's purple vest,
And sings her songs of love and grief and fate;
There is a better way.

He serves his country best
Who joins the tide that lifts her nobly on;
For speech has myriad tongues for every day,
And song but one; and law within the breast
Is stronger than the graven law on stone;
There is a better way.

He serves his country best
Who lives pure lives, and doeth righteous deeds,
And walks straight paths, however others stray,
And leaves his sons as uttermost bequest,
A stainless record which all men may read;
This is the better way.

The Boyhood of Sir Walter Scott.

MARY E. WARE.

The spirit of every great epoch in history incarnates itself in some soul and a genius is born. Puritanism gave us Milton; feudalism gave us Scott.

There used to be a tradition that Scott was a typical dunce in school. Nothing could be farther removed from the truth. All of the instruction from the primary grades to the close of the college course was arranged so as to produce the classic scholarship. Those who had not this classic education were considered dull or ignorant. Scott had neither the taste nor the talent for the classics. He knew little of Latin syntax and nothing at all of Greek. On the contrary, he was a born lover of romance. Everything in his environment and education fostered the development of his romanticism.

He traced his genealogy to Auld Watt, a Border chieftain who thought nothing of replenishing his herd at the expense of some English lord. His ancestors had all been shepherd-farmers, his father being the first to adopt town life.

His mother was a fine woman—educated, cultured, refined and imaginative.

Instead of being dull, his fine memory and inquisitive mind led those who knew him to think him a prodigy. At four he had not only committed four Border ballads, but recited them with great enthusiasm; at six he called himself a virtuoso, one who wishes to and will know everything; at ten he had collected several volumes of ballads.

During those cold winter days in Scotland when play out of doors was impossible, Scott was king among his playmates. They would gather around him while he told the stories of the Border chieftains. He was always the prince of narrators, but he studied hard to have his narrations varied and accurate.

When he entered college his tasks in the prescribed course were very difficult for him. But he feasted his soul in the college library. "My appetite for books," he says, "was as ample and as indiscriminate as it was indefatigable. I waded into the stream like a blind man into a ford, without the power of searching my way unless by groping for it."

He was in college but a short time when he had to return home on the account of poor health. He was forbidden to talk, but allowed to read. That disease was a blessing in disguise, for it enabled him to fill his mind with material to be used in after days.

The study of romance was the absorbing passion of his life, and he pursued it as faithfully and as laboriously as the college students did their classics. He could speak nearly every one of the romance languages. He learned French to read the Trouveurs and Troubadours; Spanish, to read Cervantes, and Italian, to read Dante.

He was a born antiquarian. The discovery of an old coin, a rusty sword, or an antique hunting horn filled his soul with as much delight as unearthing a bit of Greek statuary does the artist of to-day. The battlefield of Bannockburn was the most beautiful scene in all Scotland to him. For seven successive summers he made what he called "raids" in Liddesdale, learning every tradition, legend and custom of the people.

He was very fond of hunting up a lost stanza of an old ballad, or the missing line in a couplet. When a lad of fifteen, he attended a reception in Edinburg, given in honor of Burns, who was then at the height of his fame. The "Peasant Bard" admired a picture in the gallery but wanted to know about a curious verse written beneath it. Scott was the only one in the company who could give him the history of it.

He had deciphered so many quaint doggerel-Latin inscriptions in old abbeys and cathedrals that before he was twenty antiquarians sent for him to aid them in interpretation of them.

He was apprenticed to his father to study law. While hard at work he heard a fine lecture on German literature, in which it was shown that a great development in the Romantic thought was taking place in Germany. He then determined as soon as he had completed his legal studies that he would learn the German language, that he might enjoy the latest development of Romanticism.

It was always with such method and system that he took up romance. No wonder that in late years he could write a novel in five or six weeks. He had all of the material collected in his youth; it had only to be arranged.

After studying German, translating some of Burger's best poems and reading Goethe, it dawned upon him that he might do the same for the Borderland of Scotland that Goethe did for the Rhineland.

We must keep in mind that in the meanwhile he was admitted to the bar before he was twenty-one, had been appointed clerk of the sessions, and afterwards elected sheriff. He worked as faithfully in these offices as he did in literature, with this difference: his heart and soul was in the history of feudalism and chivalry.

No great success ever just happens. Scott was now the best prepared man in the world to write a historical poem or romance. His historical imagination had been thoroughly and scientifically cultivated. "At last because the time was ripe" he found a form in which he gave the world the result of the study of his youth.

A countess of the house of Buccleugh told him the story of the hobgoblin and asked him to write it in verse. He seized the idea with delight. He connected the story with the history of her house. With his rare Mideral knowledge and historic imagination it developed into the "Lay of the last Minstrel."

Its beauty and popularity was probably as much of a surprise to Scott as to any one else. He had discovered himself.

"Marmion," "Lady of the Lake" and others followed in rapid succession.

Popular as his poetry was, his fame rests on his historical romances. He was the first English writer to succeed in this difficult field.

When quite young he commenced writing "Waverly," but on the account of some adverse criticism of his friends had thrown it aside.

He now determined to finish it. He hunted up the MS., completed the story and published it under the signature of the "Great Unknown." The other novels of the series appeared with wonderful rapidity; three or four within a year.

What sustained energy it must have taken to prepare these MSS. when he was at the same time performing the duty of clerk, sheriff, laird, poet, essayist, publisher and writer. Nothing but the most systematic arrangement of duties and the firmest determinalion to abide by that arrangement could have enabled him to accomplish so much.

He was up at five every morning and by the time the family came down to breakfast at nine he said that he "had done enough to break the neck of day's work."

Carlyle criticises his "extempore speed," but he forgets the years spent in preparing for this speed.

The story of his financial ruin, and his heroic efforts to pay his debts arouse noble but sad thoughts.

His great energy, his genius for narration and his romantic scholarship are the secrets of his success.

A Chinese Compliment.

The German Prince and Princess Henry were visiting a notable mandarin, one of whose first questions to the prince—this being an invariable matter of Chinese politeness—was:

"How old are you?"

"A little more than thirty-six," answered the prince, smiling.

"Indeed!" said the mandarin. "Your highness appears fifty."

The mandarin then turned to the interpreter — Herr Voight, a German — and inquired the princess' age. She answered, "thirty-two." The interpreter interpreted, and the mandarin made a remark in Chinese evidently intended to be complimentary. The interpreter blusned uneasily, and hesitated to translate the remark. The prince saw the difficulty, and laughingly commanded:

"Out with it, Voight!"

"He says," the interpreter then translated to the princess, "that your highness looks like sixty!"

He had meant it well, and of course the princess had sense enough not to take it ill.—The Youth's Companion.

"Good-night."

A STORY FOR GIRLS.

They were "too tired" to sit up any longer, so good-nights were exchanged with the family down-stairs and a march upward was taken.

The candle was deposited on the dresser, and then the two girls turned and looked at each other.

"Nan!"

"Estelle!"

"You dear old thing! I haven't had half a chance to look at you yet."

"Nor I you; how's Harry?"

"He's all right. What a sweet little room you have!"

"Yes, isn't it cute?"

"Perfectly lovely! Too sweet to be of any use! Where did you get that magnificent fern?"

"A friend sent it to me a few weeks ago."

"It's so much like one I had given me; but mine died."

"Too bad! What lovely hair you have, Nan, so long and glossy!"

"Do you think so? I like yours ever so much better."

"Are you going to have a new suit this fall?"

"I suppose so. I haven't thought much about it yet."

"What plump arms you have!"

"If it wasn't for that horrid old vaccination scar."

"Powder it; 'twill never show."

"So I can. Say, did you ever name the bedposts?"

"Yes; isn't it lots of sport?"

"I never dream anything."

"I dreamed of Harry last time."

"What a bore he's getting to be!"

"Is he? I haven't seen him for a long time. He has lovely eyes, though."

"And a pretty complexion; I shouldn't mind if mine was as good; but he's awfully tiresome!"

"What time is it?"

"Half-past eleven."

"Well, I guess I'll hop into bed."

"Hear the rain on the roof; don't it sound pretty?"

"Very. Shall I blow out the candle?"

"Just put on the top and it will be all right."

"My! Isn't it dark? Where's the bed? I can't find it."

"Over here."

"I have it. Scream if I step on you."

"Good-night."

"Good-night."

"I hope you'll sleep well."

"Thanks; same to you. Good-night."

"Good-night."

For a long time quiet reigns. The deep, regular breathing of the girls and the ticking of the little eight-day are the only sounds to be heard.

Estelle moves restlessly once or twice, then she sits bolt upright in bed and gives her pillow a vicious punch. In a low, sepulchral tone she calls, "N-a-n!"

"Mercy! I thought you were asleep. What is it?"

"Does Harry Goff go with any one now?"

"N-o-o. He comes over to the house sometimes. I never see him with any one. Did you hear he did?"

"No; I thought I'd ask you, that's all. Good-night."

Both girls are very wide-awake now.

"Oh, Estelle, Harry told me to tell you 'yes;' he said you'd understand. I think that looks suspicious."

"Did he? Are you sure?"

"Positive. I should have forgotten it, though, if you hadn't mentioned his name just now."

"Well, thanks awfully. I'm so tired I can hardly keep my eyes open. Let's go to sleep now. Good-night."

"Good-night."

"Have you quilts enough over you, dear?"

"Plenty. Good-night."

"Good-night."

"Oh, Estelle, who is that charming young man who lives at the head of the avenue?"

"He's my cousin, Dr. Mack. Why?"

"Isn't he fine! So courteous! He lifted his hat to me as I passed."

"Just like him. He tries to flirt with every young woman he sees."

"Just like Harry Goff. Good-night."

"I don't think Harry's a flirt."

"You don't see him as much I do. Good-night."

"What time shall we get up?"

"O-h, a-n-y t-i-me. Good-night."

Both girls lie perfectly quiet for a long time. The little clock on the mantel ticks blithely on. It strikes.

"What time is that?"

"What?"

"What time did it strike?"

"I don't know; I was most sleep."

"I guess I'll get up and see."

"Don't bother."

"Estelle!"

"What?"

"It's two o'clock."

"Never!"

"Look and see."

"So it is. Get into bed, for pity's sake."

"Look out for your toes!"

"Oh-o-o-o!"

"Ha-ha! Did it hurt? Too bad!"

"Good-night."

"Good-night. Have you any corns?"

"One. Good-night."

"What do you do for it?"

"Nothing. Good-night."

"I have a nice corn-cure in my trunk I'll give you in the morning."

"Thanks. Good-night."

"Good-night."

"Did you say your fern died?"

"Yes; too much bother to take care of it."

"I don't think so."

"Pleasant dreams."

"Pleasant dreams."

"Give me a kiss."

"You old darling! How nice your breath smells. What do you use?"

"Violet."

"It seems like old times for us to be sleeping together, doesn't it, dear?"

"Yes. Do you remember the time we talked till morning?"

"Do I?"

"We never used to squabble like the other girls at school."

"You have a lovely disposition."

"Not so nice as yours."

"Just one more kiss."

"Good-night."

"Good-night, dear."

"Guess who gave me my fern."

"I can't. Any one I know?"

"Guess."

"Tell me."

"Harry."

"Harry Goff? He gave me mine!"

"Did he?"

Silence prolonged.

An Irish Compliment.

A political candidate, on paying a second visit to the house of a doubtful voter of the peasant class, was very pleased, but somewhat surprised, on hearing from the elector that he would support him.

"Glad to hear it," said the candidate, "I thought you were against me."

"Sure, I was at first," rejoined the peasant. Whin the other day ye called here, and stood by that pigsty and talked for half an hour, ye didn't budge me an inch.

"But after ye had gone away, sor, I got to thinkin' how ye'd reached yer hand over the rail and scratched the pig's back till he law down wid the pleasure of it. I made up me mind thin that whin a man was so sociable as that wid a poor fellow-crathure, I wasn't the bhoy to vote agin him."—The Youth's Companion.

The Saturday Evening Post says: "There are more widows and unmarried women in Washington than in any other city of equal population in the world. This is due to the employment of several thousand women in the executive departments, and also the fact that Washington is the favorite place of residence for the widows of army and navy officers. Many other widows of means are attracted to the capital because of the climate and the social advantage for themselves, and the educational advantages for their children."

Dear Savior, I would follow thee,
For thou the path of life hast trod,
Thy precious footsteps now I see,
They lead me to the throne of God.

Within my heart there is no care,
Thy Word sustains me day by day,
And perfect love hath banished fear.

Knowles Shaw.

Few songs among us are more popular than "Bringing in the Sheaves." As is well known, its author was Knowles Shaw, one of the most eccentric, earnest, tender and charming characters among the Disciples of Christ. He was born in Ohio, October 13, 1834, and was killed in a railroad accident near McKinney, Texas, June 7, 1878.

As was said of him: "His head was like a tar-bucket, for everything that touched it stuck to it," and he seemed never to forget. Experiences, advice, sermons, personal admonitions—all these things of his boyhood days came daily into his thoughts as he grew into manhood. The words of his dying father, "Prepare to meet thy God," came to him unbidden while he was playing the violin for a large company of dancers, and a sadness began to steal over his face, and, being observed, one of the young ladies approached him and said: "Knowly, what is the matter?" Without reserve he walked out into the middle of the floor, and told what was passing through his mind, and he expressed a determination never to play for another dance. He went to his home. For several days he ate nothing but a little bread and milk, and spent the nights on the floor, wrapped in a blanket, but seldom closed his eyes. He talked with no one. To his mother he said that he was having a battle with the devil. After some days he attended the Flat Rock Church, confessed Christ, and was baptized by George Thomas, an elder of the church, and became a new man.

He applied himself with great diligence to acquire knowledge, for he was then very deficient. For some time he was both teacher and pupil. He took charge of a school in a very rough section of Indiana, and on the opening morning he had but one rule, which he announced as follows: "Boys, I expect you to do as I do. What I do and say you are at liberty to do and say. If I lie you can lie; if I swear you can swear; if I fight you can fight; but if you do any of these things and I don't, you will get a whipping." There was no trouble that session with the school, and every boy loved him, but a larger field awaited him. As a preacher he became a man of great power. Thousands flocked to hear him sing and preach, and during his ministry he baptized more than eleven thousand persons. He was ready to do whatever was next to his hand. If he was with the children, he had a song for them; if on a visit he found the clock out of order, he began at once to fix it; if the sewing-machine would not work, he would begin on it, and in a short while would have it running smoothly, and go on making some garment; if there was a funeral, he would join the procession, minister sympathy, and perhaps sing one of his sweet songs at the grave. One night he had to cross the Ohio River, but the ferryman was such a ragged, besotted wretch—no hat on his head, his hair matted and his whole person filthy in the extreme—that at first he hesitated to intrust himself to this drunken man in a frail skiff, but there was no other opportunity, and he had to cross. Taking his seat in the boat, he asked the man his name. "Blue Dick," was the reply. "But," said Shaw, "that is not really your name?" "Well," said he, "if I have another, it has been so long since I heard it I have almost forgotten what it is." Changing the subject, he asked, "Why don't you quit drinking?" "I can't," said the poor wretch. "Yes, you can," said Shaw. "Mister, do you think I could?" he replied, in deep earnestness. "Of course you can," said Shaw. The kind words had reached his heart, which all his neighbors thought had ceased to feel. Then he repeated the question: "Mister, do you really think I could quit drinking?" "Have you a wife and child?" Shaw asked, and the man began weeping bitterly, and he told him that he had. Shaw urged him to come out to hear him preach, but he said: "You would not let such a one as me come; and if you were willing, others would not like to see me there." Shaw urged him to come, and spoke to him tenderly of Jesus. On paying him his fare, Shaw said: "I do not like the idea of this money going into the saloon. Can't you promise me that you will not drink any to-night? and I will come back, and you shall take me over the river again." Blue Dick gave the promise, and, as the preacher went on to the church, the ferryman, with emotions that stirred his heart, stood in deep thought on the river bank. After the meeting Shaw returned, and Blue Dick was waiting for him, and had not been to the saloon, as he promised. The preacher spoke with great encouragement to him, and Blue Dick promised to come to hear him preach. He likewise kept this promise, and after several nights of regular attendance Blue Dick confessed Christ and was baptized. Years passed by, and on Shaw's next visit to the same place he found that Blue Dick was no longer there, for he had been transformed into Bro. George M., one of the best members of the church, living in a comfortable home, surrounded by a loving and happy family, and they all knelt down together, and, with tears of joy, Shaw thanked God for changing the poor drunkard into a saint.

For nearly twenty-one years Knowles Shaw was a preacher, and few men rendered such service in that length of time as he did. His work in the Murphy temperance movement, his work as singer, his work as preacher, his work as friend—in all these fields he is graciously remembered, and his life-story has been well told by William Baxter in a book of 237 pages, entitled the "Life of Knowles Shaw," published by the Christian Publishing Company, St. Louis, Mo., and sold for $1.25. It is well worth the reading, and the closer acquaintance with a character so strong and earnest will do good.—Peter Ainslie in Christian Tribune.

DR. KILMERS' SWAMP-ROOT
Is Not Recommended For Everything.

BUT IF YOU HAVE KIDNEY OR BLADDER TROUBLE IT WILL BE FOUND JUST THE REMEDY YOU NEED.

Kidney trouble preys upon the mind, discourages and lessens ambition; beauty, vigor and cheerfulness soon disappear when the kidneys are out of order or diseased.

Kidney trouble has become so prevalent that it is not uncommon for a child to be born afflicted with weak kidneys. If the child urinates too often, if the urine scalds the flesh, or if, when the child reaches an age when it should be able to control the passage, and it is yet afflicted with bed-wetting, depend upon it, the cause of the difficulty is kidney trouble, and the first step should be towards the treatment of these important organs. This unpleasant trouble is due to a diseased condition of the kidneys and bladder and not to a habit as most people suppose.

So we find that women as well as men are made miserable with kidney and bladder trouble and both need the same remedy. The mild and the immediate effect of Swamp-Root is soon realized. It is sold by druggists, in fifty-cent and one dollar sizes. You may have a sample bottle by mail free, also pamphlet telling all about it, including many of the thousands of testimonial letters received from sufferers cured. In writing Dr. Kilmer & Co., Binghamton, N. Y., mention the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST.

NEEDED ADVICE.—A paper published in Paris recently contained the following unique advertisement: "A young man of agreeable presence, and desirous of getting married, would like to make the acquaintance of an aged and experienced gentleman who could dissuade him from taking the fatal step."—Literary Digest.

ITS VALUE.—"What do you think of this persistent demand for arbitration?" asked a diplomat at the Hague. "Well," answered the gentleman from Germany, as he pensively exhaled a cloud of smoke, "I am inclined to think that if we manage things with discretion it can be prevented from becoming a casus belli." — Washington Star.

A UNIQUE ONE.—Talking about the school commencements, one of the best advertisements we have seen is that of the colored principal of a log-house school in the rural district. It reads:

"We is to hold a commencement of the endin' of this school on the 21 of June. Miss Williams will play the organ—if the pianner tuner fixes it in time. If not, there will be banjo picin' and spellin' and definin'."—Atlanta Constitution.

AN IMPERTINENT PERSONAGE.—"Did you ever hear of St. Dunstan?" asked the man who was chewing his led pencil. "St. Dunstan?" answered the friend. "Certainly. What was there so remarkable about him?" "What was there remarkable about St. Dunston? Why, great Scott, man, don't you know that his name is the only thing in the English language that furnishes a rime for 'Funston?'"—Washington Star.

HERBERT L. WILLETT.

TRIAL BY FIRE.*

The first section of the Book of Daniel is a panorama of moving scenes in which heroic servants of God pass before our eyes, overcoming temptation by their trust in the divine help, or proving their superiority to the men of heathen faiths by their power to endure and their ability to understand hard things. Daniel and his three companions is recorded, together with their refusal to partake of the kings defiling food, and the divine blessing which rested upon their conduct and their studies. Through this blessing they reached the supreme place among the wise men of the court. In the second chapter a dream of Nebuchadrezzar's defies his efforts to recall it, and those of the court magicians either to tell or interpret it. In his rage the king decrees the destruction of the whole circle of soothsayers, but Daniel is able to accomplish his will and thus save himself and his companions from the promised fate. The king's dream turns out to have been a vison of a composite image of gold, silver, brass, iron and clay, representing, as the prophetic explanation shows, the Babylonian, Median, Persian and Greek or Macedonian kingdoms, during the last of which, and the contests of its two great rival devisions, Syria and Egypt, the Maccabean author of the Book of Daniel probably lived. It was in these days, shortly following the troubled and distressing days in which he wrote, that he saw the signs of the establishment of the kingdom of heaven.

In the third chapter there is set down the narrative of the heroic refusal of the Hebrews toworship the king's huge idol. It has beenoften remarked that the pictures of Nebuchadrezzar given in this book are far less the representations of that wise and far-sighted king of Babylon than pictures of Antiochus Epiphanes whose tyrannical oppression of the Jews in the period 170-164 B. C., made his name a syncnym of terror and infamy among the chosen people. The king is represented as setting up a colossus of gold as a tribute to his god, Bel-Merodach or Marduk. One can hardly fail to consider with astonistment the enormous height and the fabulous cost of this image, if its size and material may be set down to fact. Then the entire people was summoned to prostration in homage before the idol. The three Hebrews manfully refused compliance with the royal order. Of Daniel's whereabouts we are not told. When Nebuchadrezzar was informed of the refusal, he demanded of the three men their reasons. Perhaps they had not understood; perhaps they thought the orders included only natives of the realm. At any rate another chance was offered them. If they again refused, nothing could save them from the horror of the brick-kiln and its awful death. They might trust in their God, but who could deliver from the king's hand.

Here were the three men in the most desperate straits. Attention was fixed upon them. There was no escape save in denial of their faith. They had but two courses to pursue, which reduced themselves practically to one. They could go forward, obedient to their religious convictions, trusting in God to deliver them at the last moment in some extraordinary manner. Such deliverances had been wrought for faithful men in days past. Why might they not recur? But there was the plain path followed by thousands of holy men and women of all ages, who knew that their confession of faith meant death, but to whom death was more welcome than disloyalty to truth. Along this path the three Hebrews were resolved to walk. They replied to the king that they were not concerned to make an elaborate answer. If he chose, their God could save them from the king and the fire. But even if not, if he saw fit to let taem perish, they would go none the less cheerfully and heroically to their death.

In this utterance, sublime in its simplicity, the author reaches the highest level of his appeal to the men of his day. To exhort his countrymen to hold to their faith in the presence of the tyrannical outrages they were suffering at the hands of Antiochus might have availed with some fine souls. But to draw a picture of this heroic spirit in actual color before them, taken from the story of the past, or even the productof that story-telling faculty which has ever used fiction for the highest purposes, was to give form and movement to the appeal and create afresh men of faith and power out of the discouraged Jews of his day.

The fire was heated to unusual fury. The victims were bound hand and foot and thrown into the seething mass of flame that leaped up from the awful kiln. Even the powerful men who bore them to their fate fell before the devouring fire. Then came deliverance. As the king looked he saw four men, not three. He saw them unbound, not as they had been cast in, and the fourth was like a son of the gods. Amazed he summoned them forth and found them untouched by the flames, and unscented by the smoke. Such a marvel could only call forth the admiration of the monarch, who did not hesitate to ascribe glory to a God who could work such deliverance for his servants.

Perhaps one may ask himself here the question which naturally occurs on reading the Book of Job: Would not the impression have been stronger if no marvel had been wrought to deliver the faithful? Does not the renewed prosperity of Job at the close lessen somewhat the force of his stern integrity, and hint at the payment of a reward for virtue? Would not the story of the three Hebrews going cheerfully to a cruel death, such as overtook so many of the Maccabean martyrs, have stirred our hearts and those of that age with a quickened zeal for righteousness at whatever cost? Does not the rescue somewhat detract from the picture? And do such rescues of good men happen in real life? One can only say in reply that the writer was concerned as much to affirm the power of God as the heroism of the three, and that in his narrative he has accomplished the double purpose and left the full impression of their devotion even to death in their confession that they did not know what God might do, but were resolved to obey him even to the death.

Such narratives of unbending fidelity are needed in an age when religious duty is in danger of losing the note of urgency and resolution, and where personal interests obscure the path of utter loyalty and service. Never has the Christian world more than today needed to study afresh the exploits of the heroes of this book, the men who would not compromise, the helpless children of the captivity, Shadrach, Meshack, and Abed-Nego.

QUESTIONS.

1. How large was the image, and of what material (v 1)? Consider the cost of such an idol. 2. What prompted the information against the three Hebrews (v. 8)? 3. What other reason might there be for their refusal (v. 14)? 4. What other king asked a similar question (Isa. 36:20)? 5. Did the Hebrews mean (v. 16) that they were obliged to answer the king, or that they were not anxious as to what their answer should be? 6. What did they believe regarding Jehovah? 7. What other alternative might there be? 8. What was the character of the courage here displayed? 9. Which of these two considerations, (1) that God would perhaps save his people in time of distress, or (2) that it is worth while to go to death for the sake of the truth, expecting no rescue, has been most effective in stimulating Christian heroism? 10. Is the heating of the furnace to seven times its usual heat (v. 19) to be understood literally, or as a means of expressing extraordinary heat? 11. How were the men the king saw in the fire different from those thrown in, in number? in condition? 12. What lesson was taught by their experience regarding the power of God? the power of kings? the character of faithful men?

TOPIC FOR JULY 27.

HONORING THE LORD'S DAY.

(Ex. 20:8-11; Rev. 1:10.)

It is worthy of note that the day is, in this topic, given its proper title. "The Lord's day," is a beautiful phrase, and is the true designatiin of that day, which, in heathen language, is called Sunday, and in Jewish language, Sabbath. To be sure, very much of our language is of heathen origin, and in ordinary conversation it may often sound strange, pharisaical, perhaps, to talk of "the Lord's day," instead of using the current designation "Sunday." It may sound quite as odd as the Quaker "First Day, Second Day, Fourth Month," etc. But, nevertheless, when we come to describe the true character of the day, no name is truer, sweeter, than the word so dear to us all, "The Lord's Day."

And by those to whom this phrase is dear, there is little danger that the day will not be honored: honored, not because of a command, not merely because it was honored in time past, but because it was the day which our Savior honored by his resurrection; honored, not with severe fasting and castigation or vigorous ceremonialism, but with cheerful worship and kindly companionship. Such is the spirit in which the day should be observed and naturally will be by those who revere its name.

Naturally, then, to honor the Lord's day, one must honor the Lord. It is a day for worship. "In the Spirit on the Lord's day"—this is the attitude of one who honors that day. All the week long, thoughts are too much on material things; it is needful that one day, we should be "in the Spirit."

> "The world is too much with us,
> Early and late getting and spending.
> We lay waste our powers."

It is a boon that once in a week the mind may be released from material thralldom and seek those things that are above. Wonderful, isn't it, how the world deals in material things, pays well for efficiency in practical affairs, and is little concerned with traffic in in ideas! The man whom the world remunerates is the man who manages material affairs. How small are the profits of the dealers in thoughts! And yet ideas, thoughts, after all, are the most real things in the world. There ought to be one day when we deal in them, "in the Spirit."

It ought, moreover, to be a day of good deeds, not a day of listless dreaming. It would surprise some of us what a repayment would come to us if we should invest a Sunday afternoon, not always in pleasant lolling, or an excursion, or a drive—valuable as these things sometimes may be—but in doing something for somebody. The fact that the Lord's day is a day of rest does not necessarily imply that it is a day of indolence. Rest is a change of work. And he who refuses to work on the Lord's day by getting up in season, and with shining face, betaking himself to worship in the house of the Lord, is failing to be "in the Spirit." It requires effort, to be sure. Even the right kind of resting requires effort.

Hardest work of all, the Lord's day is a time for prayer! No harder work is given men to do—the very travail of their souls is prayer. Did Jacob wrestle with the Lord in prayer? Jacob was a man of faults, but indolence was notone of them. No indolent soul can pray as it should, for it takes industry to be in the Spirit. On the Lord's day thou shalt do no labor, is one of the new commands of the Christian system—labor of soul.

If you would lift up holy hands to God you must not shake hands with the devil.

THE C. E. READING COURSES.

[There are three courses: The Bible, Missions and the Disciples. The three handbooks for the first year are: "A Guide to Bible Study," "Handbook of Missions" and "Concerning the Disciples." The three handbooks for the second year are: "Life and Teachings of Jesus," "Missionary Fields and Forces of the Disciples" and "Sketches of our Pioneers." Three handbooks and the Bethany C. E. Bulletin, quarterly, sent to any address for one dollar. All orders should be addressed to the Bethany C. E. Company, 798 Republic St., Cleveland, O. Each course has a director: H. L. Willett is director of Bible study; W. J. Lhamon is director of studies in Missions; F. D. Power is director of studies Concerning the Disciples. This column is set apart to the use of these directors.]

The Future of the Reading Courses.

By F. D. Power, Director.

The C. E. Reading Courses are as much an established fact among us as C. E. itself. They have been conducted for two years with marked success and increasing favor and have earned the right to live. Their future is assured and there is but one question now with the managers, and that how to make them more efficient. There is no reason why they may not command such attention within a few years as to be regarded as an essential feature of every young people's organization among us. In three respects they commend themselves to every one: the lines of study, the helps and the moderate cost. For four years in my church I conducted a Chautauqua Reading Circle. We dealt with Greek and Roman history, science and literature; we had a good many poor books; we paid seven dollars a year for our helps. The C. E. Reading Courses train our young people in the Bible, Missions and the History and Doctrine of the Disciples; they furnish small volumes that are admirably suited to this purpose; they come with the bulletin at the low price of one dollar to each reader. The superintendents and directors give their time and labor without money and without price that this may be possible.

The department "Concerning the Disciples" has done a profitable year's work. We have dealt with great themes and with great characters. We have reviewed the history of our great movement and the men who launched it. We have learned the priceless value of our inheritance, and in living examples have seen the power of the principles we have espoused. Nothing can be more important in the culture of our young people. Some day all these interests will be in their hands. Even now they have the power to direct them in large measure. Every young man and woman among us should be familiar with the genesis of our movement, its fundamental principles, its heroes and its aims, and no church is alive to the highest good of its young people that does not avail itself of such helps as are afforded in our reading courses.

The third year's work we trust will be even of greater interest and importance than those which have preceded it. "Bible Doctrines for Young Disciples" will be our next book. More or less in dealing with our general history and leaders we have been taught to consider the principles and teachings of the Disciples of Christ, but in our next year's study we shall take up one by one the cardinal doctrines of the church and review them in the light of the Sacred Oracles. We hope to give our readers such a drill in primitive Christianity as will enable every one to give an intelligent answer for the hope that is in him. We would make the New Testament, and especially the book of the "Acts of the Apostles," a very real and practical and living force with every young Disciple who will consent to be schooled in these divine things.

Now let us learn from experience. If there are hints and suggestions you would like to give concerning the books, examinations, or conduct of the circles, so far as this department is concerned, give them freely. We would desire the freest and fullest fellowship with our readers. We have one common purpose. May we work together with the heartiest co-operation and good will. Our watchword: "Ten thousand readers by 1900!"

A Lost Child.

When a precious babe
Is buried,
Stricken parents
Bow the head,
And the shining tears
Flow softly
On the little Grassy bed!

Going home, the Empty cradle
Starts the burning
Tears to flow,
And life seems
Not worth the living,
For they miss
Their baby so!

Will the mother
Cease her weeping?
Will she e'er know
Joy again?
Will she find
Sweet "balm in Gilead"
To assuage her Mental pain?

Yes! oh yes; tho'
Not forgetting,
She will mention
With a smile,
Her own darling,
Now in heaven,
Looking happy
All the while!

Yet how different
Is the sorrow
Of the poor hearts
Tempest-tossed—
Stricken fathers—
Hopeless mothers—
When their little
One is lost!

Lost or stolen!
Ah, the latter
Is the direst
Blow of all!
Stolen from its home
And hidden!
This would any Heart appall!

Day by day the Wound but deepens—
Ceaseless sorrow,
Wave on wave—
And to those Poor stricken parents
It will never Find a grave!

Stray Notices.

Jesus as a Teacher, and the Making of the New Testament, by B. A. Hinsdale, is an interesting and original book on an inexhaustible subject, pointing out the method of instruction by the Great Teacher. A helpful book to every one, regardless of their church relations. 320 pages. Cloth, $1.25. Christian Publishing Company.

Young Folks in Bible Lands, by B. W. Johnson, is a story of the travels of the author in Palestine and Asia Minor, presented in such a way that the young reader may gather the facts concerning these historic countries. The book is dedicated to the "Young People's Society of Christian Endeavor." 400 pages. Cloth, $1.50. Christian Publishing Company, St. Louis.

The Helping Hand, by W. W. Dowling, is a manual of instruction for the Y. P. S. C. E., that great movement of the century that is putting new life into our churches, by interesting the young, causing them to flock to the Lord's house "as doves to the windows," and encouraging them earnestly in the Lord's work. It contains, in the most condensed form, full information concerning the Y. P. S. C. E. movement, with instructions and suggestions concerning every point. This work has had a more extensive circulation, and proved more helpful to Endeavor workers than any other hand-book published. 25 cents. Christian Pub. Co

Literature.

MAGAZINES AND TRACTS.

In the Outlook, July 1st, James McArthur, associate editor of the Bookman, talks most interestingly of books for vacation.

Article IV. from Bibliotheca Sacra, for July, on "The Catechumenate: Its Achievements and its Possibilities," by Rev. Thomas Chalmers, has been reprinted in pamphlet form for wider distribution. It is a strong plea for the use of the catechism in the religious training of children.

The only contribution by General Merritt to the literature of the Spanish-American War is an article on "The Fall of Manila," which he contributes to the Youth's Companion of July 6th. The article is especially valuable for its revelation of the attitude which Aguinaldo and his principal colleagues bore to the Americans following the battle of Manila Bay.

Every man who lives in a city and pays his share of the running expenses of that city will find interesting reading in Mayor Carter Harrison's paper on The Misgovernment of the Modern City, which will appear in the July 15th issue of the Saturday Evening Post of Philadelphia. The writer's wide experience in the practical politics of a great city and his insight into municipal affairs, gained during the years that he has been mayor of Chicago, qualify him to give expert testimony concerning the corruption of city governments and to make some useful suggestions for the suppression of the bribe-giver and the boodler.

A glance at the table of contents of Self-Culture Magazine for July presents an inviting field for the hungry intellect. Thoughtful papers on "The Race Problem at the South," by Dr. Goldwin Smith; on "The People and Politics," by the Hon. Boyd Winchester; on "The Dominant Sea Power," by Leslie J. Perry, give good food for reflection on prominent subjects of the day; and in view of the advanced age and precarious health of Leo XIII. an account of "Pope-Makers and Pope Making," by the Rev. Edmund Guilbert, describing the methods of creating cardinals and the work of the Conclave is of more than ordinary interest.

The opening illustrated article in the Treasury of Religious Thought, this month, is on "The Finding of Homes for Homeless Children," which is done by the Children's Aid Society; and the "Timely Occasion," on "Emancipation," consists of selections from the addresses of Governor Roosevelt and the Hon. Wm. A. Sutherland, on the recent inauguration of the statue of Frederick Douglass at Rochester, N. Y. All the usual and minor departments of the magazine are maintained in their usual fullness; and it continues, even in vacation times, a well-furnished helper to the active Christian worker.

The subjects that to-day have the foremost place in the thoughts of American readers are are here discussed by writers in the North American review for July who possess unequaled qualifications for expounding them. The most conspicuous feature of this number is a significant illustration of the elevation and breadth of purpose, which which the new editor has brought to the service of the Review. This is a poem—the first poem published in this periodical for many years—by the greatest living English poet, Algernon Charles Swinburne. It is a description of a storm during "A Channel Passage" from Calais to Dover as seen by the eye of a genius of dauntless imagination, and is a marvelous exhibition of Mr. Swinburne's mastery of language, abounding in instances of the ingenious and felicitous phrasing which distinguishes his style.

Marriages.

BARDEN—MOORE.—Tuesday evening, June 27th, at the home of the bride's father, Dr. J. M. Moore, West Rupert, Vt., Mr. Frank Barden and Miss Nelia E. Moore were united in marriage by W. W. Witmer, pastor Church of Christ, West Rupert.

DUNN.

Julia Ann Hughs was corn in Adair County, Ky., March 18, 1814. She was married to Wm. Jackson in 1838 at Putmanville, Ind. They came to Missouri and lived 1861-64, when they moved to California, where Mr. Jackson died in 1868. Her second husband, W. H. Dunn, Sr., to whom she was married in January, 1871, near Oreana, Ill., departed this life at Appleton City, Mo., three years ago, since which time "grandma" has patiently awaited her call to the higher life. Our sister had been a member of the Christian Church for 65 years. She was earnest, consecrated, full of good works, and as a ripe sheaf has been garnered home. Sister Dunn passed through the portals of death to the city of "our God" June 5, 1899. After the funeral services by the the writer her body was tenderly laid to rest in the necropolis, but her spirit had gone to its God. Her children and friends mourn, but not not as those wh have no hope. "Blessed are the dead who die in the Lord."

F. B. ELMORE.

Appleton City, Mo., June 24, 1899.

LYTLE.

On June 29th the body of my mother was laid to rest until the morning of the resurrection, when it shall be fashioned like unto the glorious body of our Lord. Mother was born Oct. 22, 1819, in Little Washington, Pa. She was married to John A. Lytle in 1841. To this union nine children were born, four of whom preceded her to the world beyond. Father preceded her nearly 23 years. Mother united with the Christian Church about 57 years ago in in Clarington, O. She knew her Bible and toward the last expressed her desire to depart and be with Christ. We mourn, but not as those who have no hope. She lived and died in the faith of the Son of God, who loved her and gave himself for her. J. A. LYTLE.

PAUL.

Nannie Estella, daughter of Wm. and Louisa Paul, fell asleep June 5, 1899. She was born near Stanford 28 years ago and with the exception of a period at Eureka College and a short residence in Bloomington spent her entire life in and near Stanford. From the time she was 15 years old she had been a Christian. Her disposition, naturally religious, was constantly deepening through an active participation in all the work of the church for which her talents fitted her. On June 9th, in the presence of a host of sorrowing friends and relatives, we laid her to rest among the flowers in beautiful Mt. Pleasant cemetery to await a reunion with earth's loved ones at the pleasure of the Lord.

Publishers' Notes.

A VALUABLE HELP.

Some of the Sunday-school lessons for the third quarter of 1899 are taken from Daniel and a recent publication of the Christian Publishing Company contains a very thorough explanation of the prophecy of Daniel. The book we refer to is the "Exiled Prophet," by J. G. Encell. The first seventy pages of this book has an essay on the Book of Daniel, written by the well-known author and Bible scholar, Dr. D. R. Dungan. The Sunday-school teachers will find this essay such a thorough explanation of the Book of Daniel that they will be well prepared to teach the lessons of the present quarter. In order to reach as many readers as possible the price of the book has been reduced for sixty days from $1.25 to $1.00. The remainder of the "Exiled Prophet" is an explanation of the Book of Revelation, by J. G. Encell, who has devoted years of study and investigation to this book of the New Testament. The entire book embraces 245 pages and is profusely illustrated. Remember that the book is sent postpaid for $1 for 60 days and is an explanation of Daniel and Revelation. It is a valuable book for preachers and Sunday-school teachers.

THE SCIENCE AND PEDAGOGY OF ETHICS

Is the title of Prof. H. W. Everest's late book, just from the press of the Christian Publishing Co. The author says in the beginning of his preface: "This volume is the result of life-long devotion to the study and teaching of moral science and religion."

The subject is treated under the following heads: Theoretical Ethics, Practical Ethics and Pedagogical Ethics.

The subdivisions are as follows: Who are moral beings? what is a moral act? conscience, moral freedom, subjective and objective right, duties in respect to inanimate nature, duties in respect to animals, duties in respect to self, duties in respect to our fellowmen in general, duties respecting the home, duties respecting the state, duties of state to state, duties to God, moral education in the home, example in the home, moral habits, moral powers to be developed, moral powers should be trained, worthy models of moral character, immmoral contagion, education in self-control, family government, moral education in the school, difficulties and encouragements, guarding against vice, positive training in morals, religion in the school, moral training in the higher schools, moral education in the church.

It will be seen from the above that this work covers a vast field of thought and is worthy the attention of teachers and preachers, and is especially adapted for family reading. The work embraces 312 pages, is neatly bound in cloth, and the price is $1.50 postage paid.

What We Plead For

The Christian-Evangelist pleads for:

The Christianity of the New Testament, taught by Christ and his Apostles, versus the theology of the creeds taught by fallible men—the world's great need.

The divine confession of faith on which Christ built his church, versus human confessions of faith on which men have split the church.

The unity of Christ's disciples, for which he so fervently prayed, versus the divisions in Christ's body, which his apostles strongly condemned.

The abandonment of sectarian names and practices, based on human authority, for the common family name and the common faith, based on divine authority, versus the abandonment of scriptural names and usages for partisan ends.

The hearty co-operation of Christians in efforts of world-wide beneficence and evangelization, versus petty jealousies and strifes in the struggle for denominational pre-eminence.

The fidelity to truth which secures the approval of God, versus conformity to custom to gain the favor of men.

The protection of the home and the destruction of the saloon, versus the protection of the saloon and the destruction of the home.

For the right against the wrong;
For the weak against the strong;
For the poor who've waited long
For the brighter age to be.
For the truth, 'gainst superstition,
For the faith, against tradition,
For the hope, whose glad fruition
Our waiting eyes shall see.

CURRENT EVENTS.

As the time approaches for turning the water of Lake Michigan into the great Chicago drainage canal the people along the line of this canal, and below, on the Illinois and Mississippi River, are becoming more apprehensive of results. St. Louis, we understand, has resolved to test the legality of carrying out this project by resorting to the courts. It is a little late, perhaps, to institute legal proceedings to prevent the turning of the water into the canal, as the Secretary of War has granted permission for this to be done, and the trustees calculate that by the 1st of December next the canal will be ready to receive the water. There is a move on foot now to solicit the aid of the government in converting this drainage canal into a ship canal as well, deepening and improving the Illinois River so as to make it navigable. This would indeed be a gigantic engineering feat, but it is thought that the cooperation of the general government would make it practicable. This would destroy most of the opposition to the canal on hygienic grounds, not only because of the larger amount of water required, but from commercial considerations as well.

As the story of Dreyfus unfolds it becomes clear that it is to rank among the great tragedies of history. The facts concerning his treatment as a prisoner on Devil's Island, as they come out, are filling even France with indignation. The inhuman character of punishment to which he was daily subjected is a sad commentary on the cruelty and barbarism of many of the French officials. No wonder the unfortunate victim has aged so rapidly and become broken in health. The series of letters which he addressed to his wife and children during his imprisonment is now being printed, and seldom has anything appeared in literature more pathetic. The letters reveal a wealth of affection for wife and children which appeal very strongly to every man and woman who values the home ties and the family relationships. They also breathe a spirit of true patriotism, a high sense of honor and of conscious innocence utterly inconsistent with the theory of his guilt. That the court will vindicate his good name may be taken for granted. It remains to be seen whether it will also bring to justice the conspiritors against an innocent man.

The Americans who formed the China Development Company, and who secured a concession from the Chinese Government for a railroad from Hankow to Canton about a year ago, find that they are encountering opposition from other foreign powers that are seeking to divert the concession to Belgians. They have made an appeal to Washington, and the case has been laid before Secretary Hay by W. Barclay Parsons, the engineer who made the survey for the road, who asked that Minister Conger be instructed to represent to the Chinese Government that this government would protect its subjects in the concession secured. The Washington dispatch adds:

> Secretary Hay laid the matter before the President and instructed Minister Conger to present to the department an extra statement of facts upon which to proceed. If the facts are as presented by Mr. Parsons, instructions will be sent to Minister Conger to protect the American company in its concession, and represent to the imperial government of China that this government will hold it responsible for a violation of the contract made with the citizens of the United States.
> It is claimed by Mr. Parsons that the American company has met all the conditions of the concession so far, having deposited $100,000 and made a complete survey of the route. It is now ready to enter upon the contract for building the road, and expects China to do her part and show that the concession was granted in good faith. The state department has always been careful that its representatives should not be interested or interfere where there were rival American interests seeking concessions in foreign countries, but in the present instance there is no American rival to the China Developing Company, which represents a great aggregation of American capital, to which is opposed the combined influence of strong financial interests in Europe. There is no reason why the United States should not protect the American company, which has enlisted in the development of China.

A new enemy to human life and happiness seems to have entered the lists of late, if we are to accept the reports in the papers concerning the depredations of the "kissing bug." The picture of this insect as it appears in the papers resembles somewhat that of a spider. The scientific name of this bug of osculatory instinct is monalestes picipes. Professor Chope of the Field Columbian Museum gives the following description of it: "The 'kissing bug' resembles the bug commonly called the 'squash bug.' He is, however, longer, narrower, and darker. He is about three-eighths of an inch in length and about an eighth of an inch wide. On each side of his body are three legs, long and spindling, which he moves fast and with great agility. His back and sides are smoother than those of the 'squash bug' and of a dull brown color, with few markings, if I remember correctly. His beak is his fortune. It is long, sharp and mobile, not forked, as it has been described, but with a single lancet-like prong. On each side of his head are antennæ, which are extremely sensitive and always moving. His armor is harder than that of the 'squash bug.'" The Professor denies, however, that the monalestes picipes attacks human beings. It appears, however, quite certain that some ungainly bug, whatever may be its name, has stung a number of people on the lips, and that in some cases it has proved fatal.

A study of the details of exports from the United States during the fiscal year just ended shows that every part of the world has evinced an increased desire for American products. Europe is the only part of the world which has failed to increase the amount of money paid to us for our products, and this is solely due to the plentiful supply of breadstuffs in that part of the world in 1899 as compared with 1898 and the consequent decrease in price paid per bushel, thus making a slight reduction in our cash receipts from that part of the world. To Asia, to Africa, to South America, to Mexico, to Canada and to the Hawaiian Islands and Oceanica our sales have increased in quanty and value as compared with the phenomenal year 1898, the only grand division from which our receipts have been smaller this year than last being Europe, and even there the reduction is confined to the four countries, United Kingdom, France, Belgium and Spain and, as already indicated, is due to the fact that a large home supply of breadstuffs has reduced their payments to us for this class of our products. To British North America the exports in the fiscal year 1899 will be in round numbers $90,000,000 as against $85,000,000 last year; to Mexico the exports will be about $25,000,000 as against $21,205,000 last year; to Cuba, the exports will be about $18,000,000, against $8,260,000 last year: to Porto Rico, the total will be $2,500,000, against $1,500,000 in 1898, and to the entire West Indies group the total exports of the year will be $35,000,000 in round numbers, against $26,439,000 last year. South America, to which our sales in the past have not shown as rapid an increase as those to other parts of the world, shows a slight gain in 1899 and will reach a total of over $35,000,000, against $33,821,000 last year. To Asia the exports of the year will be about $47,000,000, as against $44,844,000 last year, China showing an increase of over 33 per cent. and Hongkong about an equal increase, while Japan, which purchased enormous quantities of raw cotton and various manufactured goods from us last year, has somewhat decreased her purchases in those lines so that the total to Japan during the year will show a reduction of over $3,000,000 compared with 1898, but an increase of $3,000,000, compared with 1897. Oceanica shows remarkable gains, the total for the year being likely to exceed $30,000,000, against $21,991,000 last year, and to Africa the exports of the year are in excess of those of any preceding year.

AFTER FIFTY YEARS.

We are glad to give a generous share of our space this week to various phases of the great Jubilee Convention to be held in Cincinnati in October next. We hope our readers will give careful attention to the several articles on this subject, that they may appreciate the better the magnitude and importance of the occasion, and may be the better prepared to fulfill their part in making it all that it ought to be. It will require the co-operation of all the churches and all the members in the various churches to achieve the highest possible results, and to make the convention a fit memorial of our past progress and achievement.

Fifty years of experience in co-operative missionary effort should have taught us many valuable lessons. It has undoubtedly achieved results the value and magnitude of which eternity alone will reveal. That the results have been all that they might have been, or should have been, no one will affirm. Our efforts have been halting, ill-supported at times, and never marked by the unanimity and zeal to which they were entitled. But in spite of this fact, God has blessed them, and this very blessing is a call from Him to wiser and more consecrated efforts in the future. It must be remembered that it took twenty-five or more years for the religious movement which we represent to reach the point of its conscious obligation to God to engage in co-operative work in spreading the gospel and to agree upon any method for such co-operation. And even when the work began, a half century ago, it was with the feeble steps of beginners, feeling their way to better things, and growing very gradually in the consciousness of unity, which is essential to all co-operative efforts.

Nor are we to be surprised or dismayed by the fact that many who had entered into the movement for a return to original New Testament Christianity had not as yet learned to feel the weight of moral obligation resting upon them to assist in the evangelization of the world in any system of co-operation. Some of them, indeed, had false ideas as to their liberty to adopt any method of co-operation not specifically authorized in the New Testament. Besides all this, there was bitter opposition manifested on the part of leading religious bodies to the new movement, and the first quarter of a century was devoted very largely to defending our right to exist, and explaining and vindicating the reasons for our existence. This religious controversy, unavoidable as it seems to have been under the circumstances, was not conducive to the cultivation of the missionary spirit.

But in spite of these negative forces which had to be overcome, the growing conviction that a religious brotherhood, claiming to be under the authority of Jesus Christ, should bear its part in carrying out Christ's commission to evangelize the world, gained the ascendancy, and the first missionary convention was called and our co-operative work began. This was a victory, the consequences of which were far-reaching and most important in their influence on our history. With that first convention there was born a consciousness of unity among those engaged in a common effort to restore the Christianity of Christ, which could not have existed before. Thenceforth it became an organized movement or body with a common spirit, a common aim and a common work—a distinct entity in the religious world, with a mission to fulfill, the various parts co-operating together for the fulfillment of that mission.

Let one try to imagine what would have been our history in the absence of any such effort at co-operative work. There would then have been no state or national conventions in which the brethren could have met together to confer about their common interests, to devise ways and means for furthering the progress of the cause, forming mutual acquaintanceships, comparing views on leading questions, and thereby fostering the very unity among us which we have been urging upon others. Who can doubt but that instead of the practical unanimity which now prevails among us in every state and territory in the Union, there would have been, without co-operation and without these great national gatherings, not only a variety but a contrariety in types of religious life and thought which could have but resulted eventually in a number of distinct denominations? We are indebted to no one thing for the unity which we have maintained among ourselves more than to the influence of our national conventions, and our joint efforts to evangelize our own and other lands.

There can be little doubt that if the surplus energy of our people had not been drawn into active mission work, the spirit of controversy would have increased rather than decreased, and would have ended in internal disruptions and the neutralization of our influence as a Christian union movement. But just in proportion as our people have been gathered in great state and national conventions, and have been brought face to face with the world's need and with the pathetic calls for help from destitute fields in our own country, they have been drawn away from petty controversies and have turned their minds and hearts to the solution of these greater problems that have to do with the world's redemption. This has contributed to both our intellectual and spiritual development. Controversy over small differences tends to dwarf the intellect and impoverish the soul, while the consideration of the vast problems involved in the execution of Christ's commission for the world's evangelization enlarges the mind, enriches the heart and lifts man up to higher levels of thought and character and action.

If it be true, then, that we are indebted to the inauguration of co-operative missionary work for the unity of our brotherhood, for the advancement of our cause, for the preservation of the simplicity of the gospel, for the intellectual and spiritual enlargement of our membership, that event is well worthy of commemoration. There is little doubt, in view of the systematic effort being made to that end, that the Jubilee Convention will be great in numbers beyond anything we have ever had in our own history, if not in the history of other religious bodies. Let us see to it that in its higher qualities, in its spiritual tone, in its liberality, in the spirit of unity and brotherhood, in the spirit of devout consecration and self-abnegation, it shall rise to the height of the great occasion. These characteristics of the convention will require most serious and earnest preparation, both of heart and life. Let there be honest self-examination on the part of individuals and churches. Let all causes of strife and alienations be put far away from us. Let us get right with God and with each other. Let us enter into the closest possible communion with God and walk with Him until our faces shine with the light of His countenance. The coming together of a vast multitude of men and women imbued with that spirit, actuated by such motives, cannot but result in a convention that will be as memorable in the character of its proceedings, in the spiritual tone of its addresses and worship, as the vast numbers which shall assemble.

It is not too early for these matters to receive the earnest consideration of every one among us who has just pride in our history and larger hope for our future.

PURITY, UNITY AND LIBERTY.

Where the Spirit of the Lord is there is liberty. Yes, but the purity and unity of the Spirit come first. First pure, then peaceable, said James, and the meaning of Paul's first letter to the Corinthians was first pure and then free. Archbishop McGee said he would rather see England free than England sober. His poor dear Lordship forgot that England drunk could never be England free. Only England sober could be England free. Only the church pure can be the church in freedom of the Spirit. When Paul sent his first epistle to the church at Corinth it was in a fearful condition of corrupion and impurity. If its faith was Christian its morals were pagan. He tells them that they were tolerating fornication that was absolutely unmentionable among the heathen. They were carnal and worldly minded to a shameful degree. Contention, strife and division, and the meanest kind of factionism, existed among them. The body was torn by contending factions, as corrupt as they were contentious. They had turned the Lord's Supper into a common meal and a bacchanalian orgy, one of the drunken feasts of heathenism. Being but partially converted from paganism, they had brought with them into the church pagan religious ceremonies, and the corrupt morals and manners of their old pagan life. Paul's first epistle was written to urge upon the church the necessity of purifying itself from these pagan and worldly abominations, and his second letter was written to congratulate the church upon its self-purification, caused by his first epistle. Paul's four great epistles have been called the "Epistles of the Contention." The truth is that the Romans and Galatians are epistles of the theological contention, while the two Corinthians are epistles of the disciplinary and moral contention. The first one commands the church to purify itself from immorality and corruption. The second one is encouragement and congratulation upon the fact that the work in a measure has been accomplished, and the way is now open for the Spirit of God to dwell in the church, with the attendant blessing of spiritual liberty and freedom from sin-bondage and corruption.

At the beginning of our own religious movement we made an honest effort to restore the discipline as well as the doctrine of the New Testament church. Our pioneer preachers urged upon all their converts to set up the family altar in their homes, and they exhorted the officers of churches to use the utmost vigilance in keeping the church pure. They turned to the Scriptures where these things were taught, for Scripture then was the end of debate and the beginning of action with us, and they urged upon the brethren to be faithful, and keep the church free from scandalous and flagrant sin. Believing that the church was responsible to Christ for its moral condition, and hence for the conduct of its members, they insisted that conduct should be right, they demanded in fact that such behavior should be near enough to the divine rule as not to bring reproach on the cause of Christ. I have some old records of a church reaching back to the thirties and forties, containing a careful record, in detail, of each case of discipline, the sin, the proof, the decision of the church, the repentance and confession of the sinner, and the final disposition of the case. Brethren, the publication of these records would make "mighty interestin' readin'" to some of us. These dear good brethren doubtless made mistakes, they probably went to extremes in some cases, but the extreme that at least tries to do its duty is vastly better than the extreme that is too indifferent to do anything. It is always more comfortable to let things remain as they are then to make them better, and we have chosen the easier but not the better way. Discipline has played out and the churches have become indulgent and tolerant of corruption, and I do not know but what we should blush for shame in daring to claim that we have restored the Apostolic Church. There is one thing certain, we cannot claim the Holy Spirit, unless we make an honest and persistent effort to keep ourselves and the church pure as the fit places for him to abide.

Where the Spirit of the Lord is there is not only purity and liberty, but there is unity. If the Holy Spirit has been grieved away by immorality and division, it can only make the church its abiding-place on condition of pure life and unity. Where corruption and faction exists, there is no Spirit of God. I am not referring, as Paul did not, to denominational unity, or to the amalgamation of churches into one colossal organization. I doubt if such union was ever consummated, if the Holy Spirit would preside over the nuptial ceremonies, or remain an hour after the benediction. Nor does the apostle refer to congregational union as the mere absence of strife and division. That kind of union exists in the cemetery, and it exists there for the same reason that it exists in some of our churches: there is no life there, and dead men do not quarrel. Heine said there were no infidels in Paris, because the people hadn't enough interest in Christianity to reject it. There is perfect peace in some of the churches, the peace of death, because there is not enough interest in the subject of religion to quarrel about it, and the absence of interest is the absence of life. Some people think when a church gets into a quarrel it is going to die; but no church with life enough to quarrel was ever known to die. It is the church that has not interest enough in religion to quarrel about it that is going to die. It is better to live and quarrel than to die and be at peace. Division, as bad as it is, is better than the apathy that ends in death. Paul does not speak of the negative union of the graveyard, as a condition of the Holy Spirit's indwelling; nor of the unity of Romanism, brought about by the suppression of human liberty and the rights of conscience. It is a real unity he is battling for, positive and vital, consistent with mental freedom and the right of private judgment, the oneness of the soul with Christ and of souls with each other.

Do you ask how liberty and unity can exist together in the same church? Do you say, if men are free they will not be united and if they are united they will not be free? This is true of the worldly organizations generally, but it is not true of the spiritual organism of Christianity. If one hundred men possess the Holy Spirit, they will be as free as the Spirit they possess, and as united as the Father and the Son. They will not necessarily be one on intellectual questions, on matters of opinion and speculation, but one in religious feeling, fellowship and character. If you love and live Christ and I do the same, we are one in Christ, and free on the broadest and highest plane of freedom. This is the unity of the Spirit in the bond of peace, which results from the indwelling in the church of the Lord, the Spirit.

Hour of Prayer.

LOT THE SELFISH.

(Uniform Midweek Prayer-meeting Topic, July 26.)

(Gen. 13:5-12; 19:15-17.)

CENTRAL TRUTH: Sin is progressive; beginning in a selfish desire for the material over the spiritual, it is apt to end in spiritual disaster.

Lot was a man who by reason of his kinship with Abram and his association with that "friend of God," and by his material prosperity, might have been a bright and shining example of aggressive righteousness in his day and generation. Instead of that, while he seems never to have descended to the low level of morals which prevailed in Sodom and Gomorrah, his influence was nevertheless neutralized largely by his surroundings, and his family ruined.

When Abram made he generous proposition to give him the choice of the land, Lot instead of courteously deferring to his uncle and giving him the choice, "lifted up his eyes and beheld all the plain of Jordan, that it was well watered everywhere . . . like the garden of Jehovah." And he chose that. It was a fatal choice for Lot. He did not stop to inquire into the moral character of the people who dwelt in the cities of the plain, and what influence they would be likely to have over his family and over his own life. He was attracted by the hope of material prosperity and ignored the fact that "the men of Sodom were wicked and sinners against Jehovah exceedingly."

We may call this selfishness, but after all it was shortsighted selfishness. By the way, selfishness is always shortsighted. It never looks to the end of things. It consults only present and material good. This was Lot's weakness. It has been the fatal weakness of many another man since the days of Lot. How many, alas! are to-day pitching their tents toward Sodom in search of material gain, and regardless of its effects upon their own character, and upon that of their families!

When we stop to analyze, closely, the mistake of Lot, to call it by no worse name, it was his preference of the material to the moral and spiritual. Poorer land, less water, with the influence of Abraham and of other kindred spirits, would have been worth infinitely more to him than all the fertile land in the Jordan valley, contaminated as it was with the awful sins of those who dwelt in the cities of the plain. We know of no more common mistake among men to-day than that made by Lot. Those who prefer smaller wages, less profits, less luxuries, with moral and religious surroundings, to larger salaries, larger profits and larger fortunes, with greater luxuries and greater moral depravity, are still in the minority.

The evil results of Lot's choice is brought out most graphically in the story which follows. It was only the pleading of righteous Abram for Sodom that prevented its complete destruction with all who dwelt therein. But because of the intercession of Abram, angels were sent to deliver Lot and his family. And when the morning arose, then the angels hastened Lot, saying, "Arise, take thy wife and thy two daughters who are here, lest thou be consumed in the iniquity of the city." This note of warning, one would think, would have been enough to have caused him to hasten from his wicked environment. "But he lingered." How many are lingering to-day under the fatal spell of sin, on the plains of iniquity, against the repeated warning of God's messengers! It was necessary for these heavenly messengers to lay hold upon the hand of Lot and upon the hand of his wife and upon the hand of his two daughters, and literally pull them out of the city, to save their lives, saying, "Escape for thy life; look not behind thee, neither stay thou in all the plain!"

Lot's selfishness had now degenerated into moral insensibility. He had by degrees become so reconciled to the wickedness that prevailed about him in the doomed cities, that he was unwilling to break away from it, even when God's wrath was impending over the city. This is one of the saddest and most dangerous features of sin—its insidious, progressive character from bad to worse.

Perhaps there are those gathered in the prayer-meeting to-night who are lingering on dangerous ground. They have heard the voice of God speaking through their consciences, warning them to give up their sins and their sinful environments, but still they linger. O that every one who reads this may examine his own heart and see if he is pitching his tent toward Sodom and becoming enamored with the ways of sin. If so, may they hear and heed the voice of God calling them to flee from the plains of sin, and escape to the mountain of God for safety.

PRAYER.

O Thou, who art the Searcher of all hearts, look with infinite compassion, we beseech Thee, upon our poor sinning and suffering race. Remove from our hearts, we pray Thee, all traces of selfishness, and enable us, always and everywhere, to place a higher estimate upon the spiritual and eternal than upon the material and temporal. Forbid that any of us who have known Thee, and have tasted the sweetness of Thy love, should pitch our tents in the direction of Sodom, or seek worldly prosperity at the expense of our moral and religious character. Help us to fear sin, and to flee from it, before the awful destruction which it always brings shall be visited upon us. And this we ask in Christ's name. Amen!

MACATAWA MUSINGS.

As indicated in this department, a week ago, we forsook the attractions of Macatawa Park for a few days, to take in the great Christian Endeavor Convention at Detroit. We were not there at the beginning nor at the close, but we saw and heard enough of the convention to pronounce it truly great. It was not so great in numbers as some of its predecessors, but was sufficiently large for all practical purposes. We have not yet seen the official report of the attendance, but would judge that it was not much short of 20,000. The newspapers of Detroit kept us reminded, during its sessions, that the convention was not as large as they had anticipated, by half, and they seemed inclined to measure the convention largely by its numbers. There are a good many people who make no distinction between bigness and greatness. The two large tents—Williston and Tent Endeavor, each of them seating 10,000 people—were frequently both filled at the same time, besides two or three large church buildings. We hardly see how a larger number of people could have been accommodated in the way of hearing or witnessing the proceedings of the convention. The heavy rains which fell during different sessions of the convention interferred more or less with the comfort of the people, but did not dampen their enthusiasm. It is difficult for any obstacle or inconvenience to overcome the good nature and enjoyment of a Christian Endeavor Convention.

The convention was great in the high spiritual tone which characterized its proceedings, and in the loving Christian fellowship which marked the intercourse of the brethren of various religious bodies with each other. In the cultivation of a deeper spiritual life, and in the promotion of a more genuine Christian fellowship, Christian Endeavor is accomplishing a great deal for the religious world. The "Quiet Hour" meetings, conducted by Dr. Chapman, from 8:15 to 9:10 each morning, were attended by from 8,000 to 10,000 people who were deeply and profoundly impressed by these devotional services. The object of these "Quiet Hour" meetings, based upon the twenty-third Psalm, was to lead Christian people to a completer trust in Jesus Christ, leading to a more perfect obedience and to greater power for service, and a greater joy in service. The people were persuaded to put away all worldliness and all forms of sin, and enter fully and unreservedly into the service of Christ, striving to make his will the law of their lives. There was no effort at excitement; there was no appeal to the emotions. The speaker held up the glorious ideal of a true Christian life—its power for service, its peace, its joy, its reward—and urged men to accept it. It cannot be doubted that thousands who attended these meetings were permanently impressed for good and that their lives will be fuller of the Spirit of Jesus Christ in the future than they have been in the past. A convention that accomplishes this is undoubtedly a great convention if it did nothing else.

But the Detroit convention did much more than this. As suggested above, it illustrated the practicability and the beauty of Christian fellowship. On what other platform is it possible for representatives of so many religious bodies to meet together with one accord, worship God together in the beauty of holiness, and consider, in the spirit of a common brotherhood, the great interests of the kingdom of God? We have never seen a greater unity, courtesy and brotherly love in any denominational board than were manifested in the meetings of the board of trustees of the United Society of Christian Endeavor. When a question arose about which there was a difference of opinion, the effort to find a basis of agreement, and the facility with which it was found, was beautiful and prophetic of a better day for the church of God. It is not at all likely that the men who sat together in loving counsel, representing as they did various religious bodies, will ever engage in a sectarian warfare on each other. They have not so learned Christ. They will, no doubt, each strive to be true to what he believes to be the truth of God, but they will all recognize each other as disciples of a common Master, and therefore as brethren. The spirit of strife is not the spirit of Christ, nor is it the spirit of Christian Endeavor.

But the convention was more, even, than this. It presented, in masterly addresses, themes of great and vital interest, and outlined practical methods of work by practical workers. It would be impossible, in our limited space, to give even an outline of the splendid program which was carried out. The program, however, was eminently practical throughout. There were a number of very remarkable addresses, among which were the convention sermon by Dr. Gunsaulus, of Chicago, which it was not our privilege to hear, and the address by Dr. John Henry Barrows, now president of Oberlin College, on "Christian Education." This last address, separated into two parts, as it was, by a rain storm, which lasted for fifteen minutes, the interim being filled by music, lifted the great audience in Tent Endeavor to a white heat of enthusiasm. It was a notable triumph of oratory over adverse conditions. There were other able speeches, shorter but marked by great ability in thought and power in delivery. All the speakers from our own ranks, of whom there were quite a number, did credit to themselves and the cause which they represent. We are proud of all of them.

One of the popular heroes of the convention was Chas. M. Sheldon, author of "In His Steps; Or, What Would Jesus Do?" He addressed a packed audience in one of the largest churches in the city, stating some facts concerning his book, and answering a large number of questions growing out of the movement which he described in that book, and which he has begun in his own church. He is a very modest, unpretending man, who was greatly surprised at his popularity, and who evidently had no thought of creating the interest which his book has awakened throughout the Christian world. He believes in the practicability of following Christ's example and applying his principles in all our business, social and political life. Nothing in the convention awakened more universal interest than his conference on the practicability of doing what Jesus would have us do in all the relations of life. He showed that this was in perfect consonance with the Christian Endeavor pledge, for what Jesus would have us do is what he could do in our circumstances. In answer to the question as to what effect the universal adoption of this principal would have, he said it would "revolutionize the world before noon to-morrow." It is surely a significant sign of the times when a book like this meets with such marvelous popularity, and when his utterances urging the importance of putting the principle it advocates into practice are received with such demonstrations of enthusiasm. Who can doubt that we are coming to a worthier conception of the meaning of the Christian life, and that the coming century will witness a better illustration of Christianity than the world has ever yet seen?

To us Disciples of Christ, the meeting on Lord's day at Light armory Hall was one of the crowning features of the convention. There were present not less than 3,000 persons in that great assembly, although a large number of our ministers were preaching at different points in the city, and no doubt attracted many members, while others went to hear some of the distinguished speakers in other religious bodies. The fact that the communion service and our mutual fellowship together in a great religious reformation could draw together so large an audience of Disciples under these circumstances was truly gratifying. It was a deeply impressive service. The communion which preceded the sermon took the form of a sort of consecration service, in which there were registered, no doubt, solemn vows to God to live in closer fellowship with the Christ who died for us. The splendid order by which the great congregation was waited upon could not be surpassed. Everything moved with the precision and regularity of clockwork, and in the midst of profound stillness. Bro. Newnan, pastor of the Detroit church, who welcomed the brethren in a few words at the beginning, deserves great credit for his painstaking care in preparing for this meeting. The sermon that followed the communion service was delivered by Pres. B. A. Jenkins, of the University of Indianapolis — a plain, simple, incisive gospel sermon, great in its very simplicity and in its application to our every-day needs. The mutual greetings and acquaintanceships which followed this service was most enjoyable. So long did the people tarry in their fraternal greetings that the janitor who kept the hall was heard to remark that these were "the hangin'est-on people" he had ever seen. It was our misfortune to miss the rally of the Disciples, which occured on Thursday before our arrival, and we shall leave the report of that to others who were present, and also the closing exercises, which another engagement prevented us from remaining to enjoy.

We have only space left to say that Detroit is one of the most beautiful cities in the United States, giving evidence everywhere of a high order of civic pride, and of enlightenment. The committee in charge of the preparations for the convention deserved, as they received, the thanks of the trustees, as well as golden medals for the completeness of their preparation for the comfort and well-being of the convention. In some respects these preparations have never been equaled in any previous convention. There were many other features of the convention we should like to mention, but space forbids. Next year the World's Endeavor Convention meets in London. It will be a memorable event, not only in the history of Christian Endeavor, but in the history of religious progress. Let as many of us as possible prepare to be there to witness and participate in that great religious convocation, some of whose meetings will be held in Crystal Palace, and probably one service in Westminster Abbey. One who can take in both the Endeavor Convention in London and the World's Exposition in Paris, next year, will have a splendid opportunity of witnessing the vast progress which the world has made both in religion and in all the arts of civilization.

A day in Chicago, following the Detroit convention, completed a week's absence from the Park, during which Bro. Earl's youngest son died of typhoid fever, contracted prior to his coming here. Bro. Earl is absent on the sorrowful mission of taking the body of his dear boy to Irvington, Ind., for burial. He has the sympathy of all his friends here, who did what they could to minister to the little sufferer during his illness. Mrs. Earl has been quite ill from the care and anxiety of her son's sickness, but at this writing is improving.

Questions and Answers.

1. What event is celebrated by the Jubilee Convention?

The beginning of our organized or cooperative missionary work. The American Christian Missionary Society was born fifty years ago next October. It has accomplished a vast amount of good during its history, and has commanded the services of some of our ablest men. The event is worthy of celebration.

2. In what way is it proposed to suitably celebrate the fiftieth anniversary of this mother society?

(1) By a largely increased attendance at the Jubilee Convention in Cincinnati, the birthplace of the society, next October. The committee on arrangements there is planning for ten thousand delegates.

(2) By raising $100,000 for Home Missions the current year, in which every church and every individual member identified with us in heart and in work shall have a part.

(3) By a new consecration to the work for which the society stands.

3. In what ways is it supposed such a convention will benefit the cause we plead?

It will benefit us by showing us what we can accomplish by united effort, and the increased revenues will, of course, greatly strengthen the work of Home Missions. Then such a convention would call wide attention to our movement and to its principles. The proceeding of the convention and the character of the addresses will serve to emphasize the reasons for our being and the causes underlying our remarkable growth.

4. In what way can the preachers and other members of our churches contribute to the success of this convention?

By praying for it, by speaking of it, by acquainting the people with the work of this society and the great demads upon it, by a liberal free will offering to its treasury, by attending it, both to impart and receive enthusiasm.

1. Is Chas. M. Sheldon, who wrote "In His Steps," one of our own brothers?

2. Why was Christ circumcised?

3 Were our fathers baptized unto Moses, and why? A. L.

1. Chas. M. Sheldon is a brother of all who love Jesus Christ, but he happens to be pastor of a Congregational Church.

2. Christ was circumcised because he was born under the law which prescribed circumcision, and because his mother and reputed father were loyal Jews.

3. Our fathers were not baptized unto Moses, because they were not Jews and did not live under the Mosaic dispensation. They were baptized unto Christ, who is our Leader, as Moses was the leader of the Jewish people.

Will you please explain why we cannot have the same prayer-meeting topic in the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST that the Christian Endeavor Society has each week? If we could have the same lesson, then those who take the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST would have the subject and study the lesson. M. G.

The Christian Endeavor Society has its prayer-meeting on a different evening of the week from that of the regular prayer-meeting. It would hardly be wise to have the same topic for the two meetings, as it would be a repetition so far as the Christian Endeavorers are concerned, and they constitute an important element of the regular prayer-meeting. We give the topic for the Endeavor prayer-meeting with comment thereon, also, each week, in the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST, and those who take that paper can have the benefit of this lesson also.

Is the book called "The Christian System," or any other book published by the Christian brotherhood, used as a discipline for church government?

Spearsville, Ind. John M. Walker.

This question comes up continually, and has been often answered in these columns. It arises from the habit of certain persons who undertake to deny our ability to get along without a discipline other than the New Testament, by claiming that the book mentioned or some other book is used as such discipline. There is not only no truth in the claim, but there seems to be even no ground for the claim. The book referred to is not even read half as much as it should be among the Disciples, but in no case has that or any other book published among us been used as a book of discipline in the sense that this term is used by those who make the claim. Let it be understood, once for all, that we recognize no uninspired book as an authoritative guide in matters of church doctrine and discipline, and that the New Testament is universally recognized among us as the only standard both of doctrine and of duty.

Are the secretary and treasurer considered members of the board of officers of the Christian Church, and if so, are they not entitled to a vote in business sessions? L.

It seems strange that a question like the above should occur to any one. The New Testament says nothing about a secretary or treasurer (except a reference to Judas, who carried the bag) and knows nothing of the "board of officers." These are names adopted for convenience in our local church management and applied to persons who perform certain duties. It would seem entirely reasonable that brethren who are accounted worthy to be secretary and treasurer of a church, being present at a meeting of its officers to consult about its interests, should have a voice with their brethren on any question that might arise. The same is true of any other man or woman of good character and standing in the church, who might be present. The official board is not a close corporation, exercising special and peculiar ecclesiastical prerogatives. It is supposed to be a meeting of the leading and official members of the church for the transaction of such business as may properly come before them. When any matter of special interest is to be considered, it would be well to invite others than the official members to be present and take part in the deliberation.

If, as you stated in a recent number of the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST, baptism has an important place in the process of evangelization, how is it that thousands have been evangelized without baptism, and what have the Quakers substituted in the place of baptism? W. H. T.

This question is asked by one who sees no place for baptism in the process of evangelization and salvation. Aside from the fact that it is commanded in the New Testament and was practiced by the apostles, our querist does not see that it is adapted to human need in the process of coming out from the world and acknowledging Christ and taking our place with his people. We imagine that if he had a little experience in the work of winning men to Christ, he would understand the matter better. The need of some outward, overt act, in which the believer could embody his faith and serve notice to the world that he had passed the line and was on the side of Christ, seems to us most apparent, and the more we study the meaning and spiritual uses of baptism, the more we are impressed with the divine wisdom which instituted the ordinance. This is not to say that many people have not been good and pious without submitting to anything which they call baptism, such as the Quakers. But how long would it take the Quakers to evangelize the world? The body is decreasing, we believe, rather than increasing, and the church would soon become extinct with such methods. There is nothing safer nor wiser than to follow inspired teaching and example in this and all matters connected with human salvation.

Reformation of the Nineteenth Century

NINE DECADES OF HISTORY

THE TURBULENT PERIOD—X.

Necrology.

SOME SPECIAL CHARACTERISTICS.

Some have found fault with Mr. Campbell's philosophy. He was a disciple of Locke. But the Lockian system did not bind him at points where that system is faulty. He did not tie himself to any school or schools. His remarkable independence, which has already been referred to, practically emancipated him from any kind of bondage whatever, except service to Christ. He recognized only one Supreme Master, and he was the bondslave to him. This very fact helped him to be free with respect to all other teachers. He could not serve two masters, and consequently he acknowledged no allegiance to any other teacher. He was supreme in his own manhood, because in him dominated the imperial Christ.

(6) He was a great orator, if not one of the greatest the nineteenth century has produced. This statement will doubtless be questioned by some who have heard him speak; but before fault is found with my statement, it may be well to first determine who is the true orator. The popular understanding of this matter is probably incorrect. Archbishop Whately says the orator is one who by honorable means carries his point. If this definition be true, then unquestionably Mr. Campbell was a great orator. No man was ever so successful before an audience in carrying his point. He certainly did not possess the peculiar magnetism of some of the great speakers who have been known to sway assemblies, and to hold "listening senates breathless on their eloquence," but all the same, he was a true orator within the scope of Archbishop Whately's definition.

His honorable methods in pleading a cause have already been referred to, and it is, therefore, only necessary to know that wherever he went large multitudes flocked to hear him, and these seldom went away from under the spell of his discourse without carrying with them the conviction that what he said was eminently true.

In this connection I am glad to quote as authority the statement of such a distinguished man as Jeremiah S. Black, who was Attorney General of the United States under President Buchanan's administration. Judge Black, in a speech delivered at the time of the presentation of Mr. Hart's bust of Mr. Campbell to Bethany College, says:

"As a great preacher he will be remembered with unqualified admiration by all who had the good fortune to hear him in the prime of his life. The interest which he excited in a large congregation can hardly be explained. The first sentence of his discourse 'drew audience still as death,' and every word was heard with rapt attention to the close. It did not appear to be eloquence; it was not the enticing words of man's wisdom; the arts of the orator seemed to be inconsistent with the grand simplicity of his character. It was logic, explanation and argument so clear that everybody followed it without an effort, and all felt that it was raising them to the level of a superior mind. Persuasion sat upon his lips. Prejudice melted away under the easy flow of his elocution. The clinching fact was always in its proper place, and the fine poetic illustration was ever at hand to shed its light over the theme. But all this does not account for the impressiveness of his speeches, and no analysis of them can give any idea of their power."

I well remember how the students of Bethany College regarded Mr. Campbell as preacher during the time of my collegiate days.

As we heard him every week-day we sometimes imagined that it would be a relief if some other preacher would occupy the pulpit on Sunday. Occasionally we had an opportunity to have our desires gratified. But I do not remember a single instance where there was not an immediate cry for the "old man eloquent" in his proper place. Generally one experiment of this sort was sufficient for an entire semester, even though the substitute was a man of eminent ability. Every other speaker in the Bethany pulpit, who attempted to occupy it when Mr. Campbell could be at his post, did so at the great risk of popularity, for the students as a rule could not tolerate any one else in that pulpit for any length of time.

It is well known that Mr. Campbell's morning lectures formed an important feature of his teaching. But I think it may be safely affirmed that the value of these lectures has not been generally understood. Doubtless they conveyed considerable useful information to the students; but I am thoroughly convinced that we must not look here for their chief value. The lectures were inspiring. They carried with them Mr. Campbell's great personality. As delivered from the chair in which he sat they possessed an indescribable charm. As I think of the impression they made upon me, I cannot now remember many of their statements as to facts, either of history or religion, that have been of special value to me in my life work; but I very distinctly remember that I never heard one of these lectures during the whole of my collegiate course without feeling that it had imparted to me strength and inspiration for the great struggle of character-building, while even to the present time I feel the throbbing impulses of his marvelous talks ringing through my whole soul whenever my mind turns back to my college days.

After all, it is not so much information that we need as inspiration. Life is not made up of angles and triangles, of crucibles and retorts. Truly has it been said:

"We live in deeds, not years; in thoughts, not breaths;
In feelings, not in figures on the dial.
We should count time by heart-throbs. He most lives
Who thinks most, feels the noblest, acts the best."

MR. CAMPBELL AND HENRY CLAY.

Mr. Campbell was not only a great orator himself, but he also had the very finest conception of what true oratory really was. He once told me of his experience in hearing Henry Clay. Mr. Campbell was in Lexington, and learning that Mr. Clay was to make a speech in a celebrated slander case, he (Mr. C.) determined that he would hear the celebrated Kentucky orator, if it was possible to do so. Through friends he secured a commanding seat. Mr. Clay was defending a woman who had been slandered. The court room was crowded to suffocation. Mr. Clay was sitting at his desk, whittling with his penknife, while he occasionally spoke to some of the lawyers who were sitting around him, though in the main he seemed utterly indifferent to to the fact that he was the center of attraction for all the eyes in that great throng.

At last he began to address the jury. Mr. Campbell had placed himself in the attitude of a cold critic. He determined to fathom, if possible, the secret of Mr. Clay's power. In any case, he was not going to be carried away by any emotional appeal. He was there for the purpose of investigating a great point, and he meant to do it with as much composure as if he had been in a chemical laboratory, working with one of nature'r simple problems.

At first Mr. Clay said nothing that was above the ordinary. He examined the testimony of the witnesses, and stated his conclusions with clearness and precision; but beyond this there was nothing specially to notice. When, however, his main arguments were completed, he began his peroration. This was a marvelous piece of workmanship. He pictured the sorrow of the poor woman he was defending. He portrayed in a most vivid manner the reckless conduct of the scoundrel who had sought her ruin. Gradually he began to approach a climax. This last feat was performed in a manner which surpassed even the masterly. All at once Mr. Campbell awoke as from a dream. He looked over the audience and found that everybody was weeping, while he himself felt the tears streaming down his face.

In ascending to the climax the speaker had enumerated many things that proclaimed the woman's innocence; and when Mr. Campbell noticed how the people were wrought up, he wondered how it was possible for Mr. Clay ever to bring them all back to earth again; or, in other words, how he would let them down from their dizzy height so as not to injure his cause. Just then he turned to the judge, who was also weeping, and capped his climax by saying, "And the very tears that are now streaming down your honor's face attest her innocence!"

Immediately all eyes left Mr. Clay and were centered on the judge. This was precisely what the former desired, and the moment he saw he had effected his purpose he took his seat, practically unobserved by the weeping multitude, who were now gazing upon the deeply affected judge.

Mr. Campbell always regarded this as the finest example of the orators's power he ever witnessed, and his own graphic description of the occasion was terminated by the statement that after that experience he was never so certain of maintaining a critical attitude while under the spell of some great orator.

MR. CAMPBELL'S COLLOQUIAL POWERS.

Closely allied to Mr. Campbell's great qualities as a public speaker were his wonderful colloquial powers. I have never known a man who, without the slightest appearance of egotism or disposition to monopolize the whole time of a company, could so completely absorb the attention of all who met him in the social circle. He was a humorist, but never trivial. He was sometimes witty, though he rarely indulged in the making of puns. When I first visited him with a mutual friend he was in his study, but there was no chair for his two visitors. He arose and offered one of us his own seat, and then pointing to a pile of large volumes close by suggested that the other might occupy a literary seat. Of course, his own chair was declined and we both shared the books together.

His conversations were often inimitable. He talked upon the most recondite subjects with a fluency and ease which were really marvelous. He could also use the most trivial things to the very best advantage in illustrating and enforcing truth, for he never seemed to speak at all without attempting to teach some great lesson. His wife, in her "Reminiscences of Home Life," thus refers to his conversational powers:

"Mr. Campbell's table talk was always edifying and engaging. It was natural and always timely. He would descant upon the eye, the eyelash, the value of the eye, how to protect the eye; the human hand, its form and value; the proportion of the fingers, their shape to enable the clasping with ease, the bones of the hand—and all attentive listeners could not fail to be interested in his remarks; and if in the days of tallow candles the light would accidentally be snuffed out, no complaining, but a dissertation upon the value of light and of the adaptation of the eye to the light and of the light to the eye. It was never wearisome or monotonous, all felt a kind of inspiration or fascination indescribable. It must have exceeded Coleridge's table talk. For my own part, even with weighty cares pressing upon me, I never found in my heart a disposition to interrupt, though the discourser amidst it all did not lose his consideration, and would most timely observe, 'We will turn down the leaf and give place to the next generation.'"

(7) Notwithstanding all the great qualities to which I have referred, he never could have achieved the success he did if he had not possessed indomitable courage and industry. He knew no such word as fail. Neither did he know what it was to be idle. If he read his Greek New Testament at the end of the corn rows, when he was plowing, while his horse was resting, it was that he might meditate on what he read while he was plowing from one end of the row to the other. Throughout his life he was a hard and conscientious worker. He had talent of the very highest order, but he constantly acted upon the principle that this talent must be improved; if he had five talents given him, it was his duty make five talents more.

This was the true secret of his eminent success. He was not a genius in the popular understanding of that term. It was generally possible to trace the lines which led up to his success; and when we measure the prodigious amount of literary work he performed, as well as his labors in other directions, it is impossible not to take into consideration his incomparable industry.

HIS PLACE IN HISTORY.

In closing this imperfect character sketch of one of the greatest men of modern times, it may be well to notice briefly what is likely to be the place assigned to him in history. It may be too early to determine yet with definite certainty just what this place will be. Perhaps we are not yet sufficiently removed from the controversies involved in the religious movement in which he was engaged to enable us impartially to consider his whole influence upon the religious world. However, I think the following points may be mentioned, even if it is not safe to emphasize them:

(1) He was the apostle of true religious liberty. I emphasize the word which qualifies "religious liberty," and I do this for the reason that this phrase has been very much abused. Luther struck for religious liberty, but he afterwards tied the very hands he had set free. He broke the power of the Pope, but in doing this, like Samson in the temple of Dagon, he himself fell while he destroyed his enemies. As a matter of fact, the Vatican was exchanged for Augsburg. While he proclaimed liberty of conscience to the people, he at the same time allowed himself to be bound hand and foot by the Augsburg Confession of Faith.

Mr. Campbell's plea was for complete liberty. Hence he not only persistently oppose human creeds and confessions of faith, on the ground that they had produced divisions and disaster in the Christian world, but he also opposed any attempt at making a creed for his own people, however imperative at times the need may seem to have been. Having become free himself, he utterly refused to again be bound; nor was he willing to bind any one else with the chain which he himself had cast off. His was a plea for true liberty, and we do not doubt that history will ultimately recognize the fact.

(2) He was a great discoverer of truth. He was not a creator. He was not what most critics would call a philosopher. He was certainly not specially gifted for what is generally understood as originality of thought. Probably he was not original at all. But who is? Sometimes what is called originality is nothing more than obscurity of thought, or else it is only a new way of stating what is not true. Mr. Campbell had one source from which he started with everything. The Bible was the fountain where all living streams emanated, that ran through his mind.

He did not try to be original. He was too humble for that. He did not try to create; there was too much already created which needed only orderly arrangement. He was satisfied to uncover the hidden treasures which he found on nearly every page of the book of revelation. Hence what Newton, Davy, Galvani and others were to nature, Alexander Campbell was to the Bible. He came to it reverently, asking simply to know what the Bible taught. He did not ask the Bible to say what he said, but to tell its own story in its own words, and he was perfectly willing to listen and follow its teaching without any questioning whatever. In short, Mr. Campbell was a man of faith, and in everything he sought to be governed simply by a "thus saith the Lord." This disposition made it impossible for him to deal in philosophical speculations, and confined his sphere of activity chiefly to the domain of discovery rather than to any attempt to originate and found either a philosophy or a religion.

(3) In my judgment history will finally affim that Mr. Campbell anticipated the present-day cry of "Back to Christ." However, this phrase must be understood in the sense in which he contended for what is in it. Perhaps he did not use the phrase exactly in the words that have become so popular, but he evidently made the real truth in this phrase the rallying cry of this great religious movement. His whole contention involved:

(1) Back to the personal Christ, not the theological Christ. This would give us the true faith.

(2) Back to the inspired apostles, not to uninspired men. This would give us the true gospel in its facts, commands and promises.

(3) Back to the New Testament church, not the church of ecclesiastical history. This would give us the true society in which to prepare for the heavenly mansions.

Such in brief is an outline of Mr. Campbell's character and work. The former was incomparable in almost every respect, the latter is still on trial, but so far it has stood some of the severest tests, and at present it is believed to contain little that may be regarded as wood, hay and stubble, and much that is gold, silver and precious stones. In the fiery trials to which every man's work must be subjected, that which is true will endure, while that which is false will perish. In my judgment the future record of the historian will emphasize the fact that Alexander Campbell did a work which will endure for all generations.

A plant has been established at 531 West 33rd Street, New York City, for the manufacture of liquid air for commercial purposes. The plant has a capacity of 1,500 gallons of liquified air every twenty-four hours. It is equipped with a 100 horse-power steam plant for this purpose and is the first plant of the kind in this country, if not in the world. It is said that liquid air can be produced at a cost of six to eight cents per gallon in a roughly equipped plant, but as low as two to three cents per gallon in a perfectly equipped plant. The process for making liquid air in the above plant is first to compress the air to 1,200 pounds per square inch, at which point its temperature is said to be from 300 to 400 degrees Fahrenheit. The temperature is then reduced by passing the compressed air through pipes cooled with water, to 70 degrees. At this point the air is expanded to aqout 300 or 400 pounds per square inch whereby its temperature is reduced to 312 degrees below zero, at which point it liquifies and is then ready for commercial purposes. Liquid air evaporates rapidly and cannot be confined in closed vessels, tanks, or reservoirs, but may be carried about in open or loosely covered vessels as safely as water. The product of this plant is to be used for cooling dwelling-houses and hospitals, chiefly. It is hinted that it may also be manufactured for motor and explosive purposes. With liquid air it is possible to keep a dwelling-house or hospital as cool as a summer resort in the hottest weather. It will also be in great demand for refrigerating purposes in which field it threatens to supplant ice altogether. In fact, ice can be manufactured almost instantly from liquid air when wanted. This is one of the marvels of the age, and will be as revolurionary in various fields as it is wonderful.

Our Budget.

—October 13-20 is an important date.

—Cincinnati, Ohio, is an important place.

—The Jubilee Convention will be an important event.

—Important literature in this edition of the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST.

—The large and beautiful half-tone pictures of Music Hall and Central Christian Church, Cincinnati, O., were made expressly for this edition of the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST.

—We occasionally hear persons speaking of the Lord's day, which they persist in calling the "Sabbath" as a divine institution. As a figure of speech this may be allowable, meaning thereby that the sacred observance of this day is divinely required, but to call the day an institution in a sense in which no other day was instituted is certainly unnecessary and misleading. The observance of the day may be a factor in a divine institution such as the home, the state and the church, and should be, but it cannot of itself well be called an institution. It is a day generally held sacred to the resurrection of Christ from the dead and to the essential element in the intellectual and physical domain known as rest, and should be observed by all men, especially by Christians; but of itself it possesses no institutional qualities.

—We acknowledg the receipt of a copy of the 26th annual catalegue of Drury College, Springfield, Mo. Drury College is one of the leading educational institutions of the state. Although under the managemect of the Congregationalists, it is not a sectarian school. It seeks the molding of a broad Christian character rather than the defense of any distinctive denominational creed.

—On the closing Sunday of the Christian Alliance convention at Binghampton, New York, the sum of $10,500 was raised for missions. These people have shown the deepest interest in missions and the most liberal offerings therefor of any religious body in the United States. They know how to sacrifice when it comes to an offering for home and foreign missions.

—When one reflects upon the influence of a city over the smaller towns and the country at large it becomes apparent that they are the strategic points for mission work. And yet how little are we doing compared to what can and should be done in these great social and industrial centers. Our home board is assisting in the maintaining of an evangelist in Chicago, and now also in this city, but six evangelists ought to be at work all the time in both cities to say nothing, of the many other large cities in which as yet no local work is being done. The cities must be taken for Christ before we can take the state or nation. If the lawlessness, immorality, vice and social and municipal corruptions cannot be held under by Christian influence our cities cannot be saved; neither the state or the nation. And in this work the local church needs the co-operation of all the Churches of Christ through its Home Mission Board.

—A. J. Marshall, the evangelist for St. Louis, maintained by the co-operation of the American Christian Missionary Society and the St. Louis Board of City Missions, has been at work since he began (May 1st), in South St. Louis, or that part of the city familiarly known as Carondelet. We had a weak church there and it was deemed advisable to put that church on its feet and in living order first. This church is the only one of our churches in a district of more than 20,000, and is some three or four miles from the nearest one. Since Bro. Marshall began with this church the attendance has increased rapidly, several additions to the membership made and the essential activities of a living church inaugurated. At our last city mission board meeting Bro. Marshall reported that steps were being taken looking to the purchase of a home for the church. A house that could be readily converted into a convenient church building had been found at reasonable terms and an effort will be made to secure the property. So far the indications are that the board has found a useful man for city work in the person of A. J. Marshall.

—Whatever may be the degree of success in the matter of attendance at the Jubilee Convention, no small degree of the credit will be due to A. M. Harvuot, pastor of the Central Christian Church, Cincinnati, O. Since he was made chairman of the committee on general arrangements he has worked almost day and night to set things in order for the convention and to secure the largest possible attendance. He has the city of Cincinnati now thoroughly aroused to the magnitude and importance of the occasion and is is now reaching out after the preachers and churches to see that they are fully awakened to the situation.

—It sometimes happens that the work of a great man ceases at his death, if not sooner. Not so with the work of Geoge Mueller, England. The great system of orphanages established by Geo. Mueller not only continue, but are being continued on the same great principles on which they were founded. Under the will of a recently deceased barrister they are to receive a legacy of $100,000. The son-in-law of Geo. Mueller, Mr Wright, has conducted the affairs of the orphanages since Mr. Mueller's death and seems to be a worthy successor to their founder.

—"The 20th Century Minister," is the title of a vigorously written article by J. B. Jones, president of the Orphan School, Fulton, Mo., in the July edition of the Christian Quarterly, just out. In this article President Jones predicts a period of unprecedented moral and spiritual energy and breathes out threatenings and slaughter against the giant social and industrial evils of the present century that will attempt to survive in the next. Prohibition, he says, will be an integral part of the 20th century gospel: the preacher's trademark. "Let not Bishop Potter's voice [he says], however well backed by wealth and an emasculated Christianity, save this Satanic agency from being hurled headlong from its legalized pesition in our cities and its throne in society." This is strong language, but not stronger than will be heard from the 20th century preachers if President Jones' prognostications are even approximately true. There are to be no quarters shown to half-way apologists for moral evil, however good their intentions, in the next century.

—The receipts of the Foreign Missionary Society for the first twelve days of July were $6,906.64, a gain of $777.12 over that of last year. The receipts to date are $120,638.25. The sum of $29,361.75 is needed to reach the mark set for the year. This amount ought to be raised by Oct. 1st. Schools and churches that have not reported an offering should do so at once. Several new missionaries are to go out in September and October. Do not delay your offering.

—In our present edition we have devoted considerable space tc the Jubilee Convention, to be held in Music Hall, Cincinnati, beginning Oct. 12th. This convention now pomises to be the largest yet held in our history, not only in attendance and enthusiasm, but in results in the Home and Foreign Mission fields. The different articles in this paper will present various phases of the convention, almost any one of which will be worth the effort and cost of the attendance. But in order to raise the moral and spiritual efficiency of that convention to the highest power it will be necessary for every preacher, teacher and worker in the church to talk the matter up at every opportunity in the church, the Bible-school, the Endeavor Society, the home and on street. Let no opportunity pass to speak a word about it. Preach it from the pulpit; proclaim it from the housetop; publish it in the streets; tell it to strangers. A great convention will advertise our people, our mission, our plea and our educational institutions before the world as nothing else can, —The communion service at Music Hall on Sunday afternoon of the Jubilee Convention will not lack for numbers. It will certainly be the largest gathering of our Lord's disciples around one table in the history of the church. Let us pray that nothing else may be absent to make it a real communion. Let us come to the convention in the spirit of prayer, our hearts burning with desire for the world's salvation, that we may bow before him in this great communion humbly, emptying ourselves that we may be filled from above. But numbers will avail nothing unless we come "remembering him," and so give larger place to the Spirit of the Most High. If we come as we ought, and as we believe will, this hour we will be looked upon as the beginning of larger things for the Disciples of Christ.

—The Committee of Arrangements for the Jubilee Convention have arranged to open headquarters at once in the Central Christian Church on 9th Street. A long-distance telephone will be put in, a stenographer employed and letters will be filed and all work done up in a business way.

—Sacrifice much in the way of material comfort in order to attend the Jubilee Convention; postpone your vacation; deprive yourself of luxuries; devise new economies; begin now with savings; take on some extra work; do anything good to procure for yourself the great inspiration of this the greatest convention in our history.

—Let those who are sent to the Jubilee Convention be good conductors. One may attend a convention and carry nothing back from it, another, a good conductor, will get charged with its spirit, its life and power and when he goes home he will just bubble over with enthusiasm and keep talking of what he has seen and heard until all the church will feel that a large section of the convention has been brought home to them. Send a good conductor.

—Why not every preacher who lives in a town where a paper is published advertise the Jubilee Convention largely through this medium? Cuts of Cincinnati churches, Music Hall, Garfield Monument, and of many of our leading men can be had for from 25 cents to $1 from the chairman, A. M. Harvuot, and let these pictures be accompanied by notes about the Disciples and the great convention. The papers will be glad to get it everywhere and it will do wonders to advertise our people and enlarge the convention. Go and see your editor to-day. When it is printed send a copy to the convention headquarters that the Cincinnati committee may see your enterprise and be glad.

—In 1849 Alexander Campbell, referring to the proposed Missionary Convention in Cincinnati, wrote as follows: "To ask for a positive precept for everything in the details of duty, growing out of the various and numerous exigencies of the Christian Church and world, would be quite as irrational and unscriptural as to ask for an immutable wardrobe or a uniform standard of apparel for all persons and ages in the Christian Church. We must make a broad, a clear and an indellible distinction between the elements of faith, piety and morality, and matters of temporal expediency."

—D. S. Burnet was elected the vice-president of the first Missionary Convention and presided over its deliberations. In a preliminary organization of that meeting, L. L. Pinkerton, of Kentucky, presided. The presiding officers of the Jubilee Convention will be Pres. C. L. Loos, Pres. W. F. Richardson, Mrs. O. A. Burgess and J. E. Pounds.

—Eleven states were represented in the first convention. No doubt every state and territory will be represented in the Jubilee Convention.

—Cincinnati, "the Queen City of the West," and the Jubilee Convention city, extends along the Ohio River a distance of twelve miles and is about three miles wide. The location is fine and the suburbs are not surpassed for beauty. There is a population of about 1,000,000 people within a radius of ten miles from the center of the city, or Fountain Square.

—Let the churches begin at once to arrange for large delegations to attend the convention. Do not be satisfied with the preacher and one or two officers. Make up a large delegation of ten, fifteen, twenty-five or fifty people. Write at once to the Central Committee at Cincinnati and tell them that you want a certain hotel or boarding house for headquarters for your particular church.

—Judge Shepherd, of the Court of Appeals, Chicago, says that marriage brokerage is "void at law and in equity as being opposed to morality and public policy." Good. We are glad that our courts recognize the fact that there are some things too sacred for traffic. Mercenary match-makers are a menace to human happiness.

—On the night of July 10 a fearful tragedy was enacted in the First Christian Church in Dallas, Tex. During the invitation hymn, a man named John T. Carlisle, while under the influence of liquor, walked forward and shot Prof. William Lipscomb. The cause of the shooting is said to be because Prof. Lipscomb had prevented the re-election of Carlisle as chief janitor of the Dallas High School. Carlisle was arrested at once and imprisoned for trial. At the present writing Prof. Lipscomb is still living, but there are no hopes of his recovery. His death is expected at any hour. Prof. Lipscomb was principal of the Central High School, of Dallas, and was highly esteemed by the city as a Christian man and educator. The man who shot him is a cousin to John G. Carlisle, former Secretary of the Treasury. The tragedy is a lamentable one.

—The Biblical World for June contains an article setting forth the name and publishers of over three dozen different maps of Palestine suitable for the Sunday-school and the lecture room. The sizs of the maps, price and merits of each map are also given. The article is a valuable one for those contemplating the purchase of a map of the Holy Land.

—Fifty years ago the American Christian Missionary Society was organized in Cincinnati, for Home and Foreign Missions. Alexander Campbell was the first president and remained in that position until the day of his death. How time flies! What wondrous things have been wrought in fifty years! We have come to be a great people, a million strong, intelligent, rich, aggressive, with all the departments of modern missionary work, all our work growing and prosperous. The binding link among our people is the missionary cause. It was that which held the primitive church intact and made it the wondrous power it was for good. We have done more in the past decade to restore the apostolic missionary church to the world than we have done in twice that period before. We have come to understand that missions are not a phase of Christianity, but they are Christianity itself. The great Jubilee Convention will help to emphasize this great truth, and will show to the world that we are indeed a Bible people, a Christian people, a missionary people.

—The great Central Christian Church, Cincinnati, Ohio, on 9th St., opposite the City Building, near Central Avenue, will be the headquarters for our people during the Jubilee Convention. Let the delegates report there, when they will be assigned to their places of entertainment during the convention. The genial A. M. Harvuot, the pastor of the Central Church, will have a word of cheer, a smile and a benediction for every delegate, from wheresoever he or she may come.

—Do not make the mistake of concluding that the Jubilee Convention is simply a hurrah affair. There will be great rejoicing, but this will be one of the least important and least abiding features of the Jubilee Convention. It will be pre-eminently an educational affair. The eyes of all will be opened to the power of the truth, the unity of the Spirit and the grandeur of the plea as never before. It means a wider door of entrance into the world, larger usefulness for the Master, encouragement for the weak, blossoms for the wilderness, rains for the desert and freedom in Christ for the captives of religious prejudices. A moral and spiritual power will go out from that convention which no man can measure.

—The coming convention, to be held in Cincinnati, will mark an epoch in our history. The record of fifty years of missionary work will then stand before us for study, for reflection, for profit. The Jubilee Convention will practically mark the close of our constructive effort at organized missionary work. It has taken fifty years to demonstrate to the brotherhood at large that organized effort in preaching the gospel to those who have it not is consistent with "our plea;" that it was essentially involved in our cry, "Back to Christ." We were so infatuated with our doctrine and state of freedom from ecclesiastical creeds and councils that we could not see that co-operative missionary work was the mission of the church. But now that our eyes are opened we enter upon a new epoch in which our energies are not to be wasted in contentions about plans. Then again, it has taken fifty years to teach us the first principles of missionary work. We did not even know the kind of men and women needed for this field; did not know the true nature of their work; did not know the obstacles to be met; did not know how to educate and train our missionaries; did not know how to manage them; did not know how to locate them to the best advantage; did not know how to support them. But now in all these essentials we have learned by experience and are just at the door of efficiency in effectual mission work. The Jubilee Convention is, therefore, to mark a new epoch in our missionary history. We will put away our childish things and begin to think, talk, preach, give, pray and act as Christian men and Christian women. The importance of the Jubilee Convention cannot, therefore, be overstated. Its success, devolving as it does upon every Disciple of Christ, cannot be too emphatic nor too great.

—The inheritance tax against the Pullman and the Billings estates, amounting to about $200,000, has been sustained in the lower courts. If it shall be sustained by the supreme court of Illinois the inheritance tax wil become a fixture, and other states will follow suit. This reminds us that ex-President Harrison, in a Chicago speech some months ago, said that the disposition of the wealthy to withhold property from the assessors made the inheritance law a necessity.

—The killing of Miss Addie Harris, a teacher of this city, in a collision near Newman, Cal., July 10th, brings sadness to a large circle of friends in this city. Miss Harris was on a special train of nine coaches, loaded with teachers on their way to the National Educational Convention at Los Angeles. In the accident there were two killed: Miss Addie Harris, of this city, and Mrs. Lena Thomas, of Seneca Falls, N. Y. There were a number of others more or less injured, but no other fatalities reported. It seems that the accident was the result of carelessness and that of a criminal character. There certainly ought to be greater care exercised by the authorities in the running of all passenger trains, but of excursion trains in particular. They are exposed to greater dangers and too much care cannot be had to protect them from accidents of this character.

—Among the great conventions of importance for the year is that of the National Educational Association, just closing at Los Angeles, California. This Association is comprised of the leading educators of our national school system, and practically controls the method and spirit of our public schools. The addresses made in this convention go to show that the great body of teachers composing this Association are deeply imbued with the spirit of progress and alert to every interest of the pupil's intellectual and physical welfare. Of the lines of progress noted in Prof. Soldan's address before the Association we quote the following. Prof. Soldan is the superintendent of the public schools of this city:

> The same progress is noticeable in the development of higher education. The European standard of university appointments has not only been reached, but surpassed, both in regard to buildings and in regard to the facility for the highest kind of work. The work of teaching is conducted on a more permanent basis. Teaching has become a profession. It is no longer an avocation, but a vocation for the great mass of those engaged in it. It is less than it used to be a steppingstone for young men by which they fill out one or two years of their lives before entering the ministry, the law or the medical profession; many of the best young men and women take their college course so as to fit themselves for teaching. The curriculum of the colleges, too, takes cognizance of the profession and porvides carefully arranged courses for educational study, including the physiology of childhood and the philosophy of education.

—Many small churches feel that the brotherhood is weak and that the cause is not gaining, simply because it is not gaining with them or in their neighborhood. One of the best things that come to our small churches is to feel the strength of the brotherhood. The educational value of the great convention will be beyond counting. Ministers in our large towns can confer no better thing upon their neighboring churches than to visit them and so enthuse them with the jubilee sentiment that the church will send one or more members as delegates to the Jubilee Convention. No minister has done his full duty if he neglects to induce the churches near him to send representatives to this great gathering.

—Let every church send a delegate to the convention who will be authorized to represent and vote for that church in the business sessions. The following form will do for certificate:

CERTIFICATE.

This certifies that..... .....is appointed as delegate from the. ... . Church to represent us in the General Convention at Cincinnati, Ohio, October 13-20, 1899.

—If the preacher fails to announce the Jubilee Convention often and clearly, telling that it begins with a reception at the Central Church, Oct. 12th, and closes Thursday night, the 19th, then let the Christian Endeavor president or the Bible-school superintendent make up for his neglect.

—No committee ever made such an effort to have a large convention as the Cincinnati committee has made. Just after the splendid convention at Indianapolis, in 1897, a rally was held at the Central Church in which all the churches about the city were represented. At the close of this enthusiastic meeting A. M. Harvuot was unanimously elected chairman and to select his own committee, with instructions to go to Chattanooga and get the convention and then to care for it. The entire committee consists of 70 people, and is well fitted for its work.

—It looks now as if the Jubilee Convention would be as large as the Christian Endeavor Convention at Detroit. Will the Epworth League Convention at Indianapolis surpass it?

Brethren, it is possible to make this the largest denominational convention in the history of this country.

—As this issue of the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST gives special emphasis to the Jubilee Convention in Cincinnati, Oct. 12-20, it seems appropriate to present to our readers cuts of some of the prominent buildings and persons connected with our missionary enterprise. On our first page is a large new cut of the Music Hall where the sessions of the Jubilee Convention will be held. This hall is seated with 3,763 opera chairs, and with the stage easily holds 5,000 people. The Odeon Hall, in the same building, holds 1,500 people. Each hall has a very fine organ which will also be at the disposal of the convehtion. Electric cars pass these halls every half minute. Six blocks from the Music Hall stands the Central Christian Church, of which a picture will be seen in another part of this paper. This is one of our first fine and most costly structures and will be the headquarters of the Jubilee Convention. A. M. Harvuot, the chairman of the general committee of arrangements for the Jubilee Convention, is the pastor of the church that worships in this building. He is assisted in his work by Lottie S. Nichol and W. L. Fisher. Another of our prominent churches in Cincinnati represented in this paper is the Richmond Street Church. When you look at the picture of the Richmond Street Church think, not only of the C. W. B. M., but that splendid work is being done there now. Justin N. Green is the energetic pastor, and J. H. and Challen Fillmore, the music men, are leaders there. Mrs. J. H. Fillmore is the successful president of the 10th district C. W. B. M. of Ohio. The silver anniversary of the C. W. B. M. is to be held in this church. As to the persons whose faces appear on another page, the pen need hardly speak. Their names, their work and their influence in the establishment and perpetuity of organized missionary work by the Disciples of Christ are too well known for repetition here. First, there is the cut of A. Campbell, the first president of the American Christian Missionary Society. On his right is that of W. F. Richardson, the present president of the same society. Underneath the cut of A. Campbell is that of Isaac Errett, one of the first corresponding secretaries of the society. And on his right is the cut of the present Corresponding Secretary, Benj. L. Smith. In their midst is the cut of the present president of the Foreign Christian Missionary Society, Chas. L. Loos. The pictures, and the article on this page by Robert Moffet, of Ohio, are alone sufficient for an hour in meditation and prayer. In the article by Helen Moses mention is made of some of the women of the church who have been prominent in the cause of missions, and of these we present the cuts of two; that of Mrs. O. A. Burgess and Mrs. Dr. S. E. Pearre. But all that we can say or picture will be but the smallest foretaste of what the great convention itself will be to the eye and soul of the beholder. It is our wish, so far as possible, that the great pleasure of seeing and enjoying this great convention may be the happy privilege of every reader of the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST.

—The catalogue of the Bellevue Female College, Collierville, Tenn., for 1898 and 1899 and announcements for 1899 and 1900 is handsomely illustrated with many full-page halftone pictures of college rooms, pupils, classes, etc.

—The recent ruling of one of the courts of this city in relation to certain contracts with race-track gamblers and gambling ought to have a most healthful influence upon public morals. The court refused to recognize a contract between gamblers in an affair of gambling, and in its opinion in the case went so far as to class race-track gambling with the most seductive, debasing and ruinous forms of gambling known to the country. We are glad to see our courts declaring so strenuously in favor of good morals. A stiff moral backbone in every court in the land would soon rid our cities and country of much that is rotten and pestiferous in society.

—Cincinnati will not be without material attractions for its Jubilee Convention guests. One of her citizens says:

I would that some descriptive pen make known to the churches everywhere how richly God has clothed Cincinnati with beauty. Rome, seated on her seven hills, was no more firmly set than is the Queen City amid the lofty hills of Ohio and Kentucky. Zion of old cannot vie for beauty with this birthplace of our missionary work. No better time than October could be found to visit her. Her schools and colleges will be open, her marts of trade flourishing and her surrounding hilltops, that stand like sentinels to guard the various interests of a mighty city, will be reveling in their autumnal splendor.

—One of the most elegant as well as elaborate college catalogues reaching our table this year is that of Christian College, Columbia, Mo. It is beautifully illustrated, and from the printer's standpoint an ideal piece of work, from cover to finish. The whole-page illustrations add greatly to the artistic as well as the descriptive features of the book. The cut of the new dormitory as it will appear when completed is that of a magnificent building. The evidences of a new era of prosperity for Christian College sparkle upon almost every page of the catalogue. The faculty announced is exceptionally strong, the courses of study wide, practical, modern, and the location, surroundings and conveniences all that could be desired for a flourishing college. And for this new life, new equipment and new era of prosperity great praise is due to Mrs. W. T. Moore and Mrs. L. W. St. Clair, the present principals of Christian College.

—The table of contents for the July edition of the Christian Quarterly, present year, is an inviting one. The themes are pregnant with vital thought and things, and the writers are men of experience and of thought. The opening article is from the pen of D. R. Dungan, pastor Mt. Cabanne Church, of this city. His theme is "The Great Religious Teachers Compared with Jesus." J. B. Jones, president of the Orphan School, of Fulton, Mo., follows Dr. Dungan with a vigorous, suggestive, hopeful article on "The 20th Century Ministry." Next comes a very practical and timely article on "Modern Phases of Unbelief," by A. M. Chamberlain, of Alliance, Ohio. This article deals with the isms of the day. W. T. Hilton, of Beloit, Kansas, reviews the "Progress of Thought Among the Disciples of Christ;" a fine study in the evolution of religious thought. "The Chronology of the Bible," by F. M. Bruner, embodies the conclusions of many years of patient study and research of this faithful but now lamented man of God. The Quarterly thus inadvertently errs in locating the residence of this faithful servant of the Master, at Des Moines, Iowa. Bro. Bruner did not live to see this one of the latest productions from his pen in print. W. T. Moore, dean of Christian Bible College, Columbia, Mo., and editor of the Christian Quarterly, has an article on "Jesus the Great Teacher," written in his usual confident, comprehensive style. Chas. M. Sharpe, pastor Christian Church, Lawrence, Kan., although practically a new writer among us, shows by his treatment of "Modern Socialism and the Teachings of Jesus" that he is liberally endowed with the power of critcal insight and of a lucid and expressive use of language. The last, but by no means least, in point of interest, timeliness and value, is W. W. Wharton's article on "The Institutional Church." Bro. Wharton is the energetic pastor of the church at Nora Springs, Iowa. The other departments of this number of the Christian Quarterly were never more interesting and instructive. On the whole, it is a good, wholesome number and very full of knowledge.

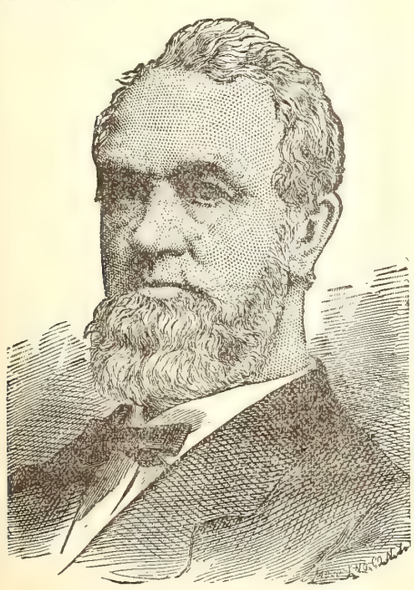
—The failure to recognize the truth wherever found is a crime no less heinous than the sacrifice of truth upon the altar of social fraternity.

—In the article on "Leaves from Mission Fields," in the last issue of the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST, following the words "darkest Africa," in the fifth line from the top of the second column, several words are left out. It should read: "Mr. Garst first thought of becoming a self-supporting missionary to darkest Africa. He had made investments in cattle in New Mexico, out of which he expected an ample income. Drouth, however," etc.

—The Foreign Christian Missonary Society has just received $900 on the Annuity plan. By the way, the Foreign Society has received over $56,000 on this plan, and by this means has been able to solve the problem of buildings on the heathen field. The society can much better afford to pay a percentage upon the annuity fund than it can pay the high rents on the heathen field.

—The secretaries of the American Christian Missionary Society, Benj. L. and C. C. Smith, say that the offering for the week ending July 15th is nearly three times that of the same period last year, being $1,902.44. This will be gratifying news to all of the friends of Home and Foregn Missions. A little extra exertion now, especially on the part of the churches that have not yet sent in their offering, would easily reach the $100,000 mark before the Jubilee Convention.

—Music Hall and Odeon Hall, Cincinnati, Ohio, mentioned elsewhere in this paper, are in the same building and each with its fine organ, at the service of the Jubilee Convention. The building cost nearly a half million dollars. The Central Christian Church is where most of our missionary societies were born. The C. W. B. M. will hold their sessions in this church. It is now headquarters for the committee on arrangements and will be the headquarters of the Jubilee Convention. A telephone and a stenographer will be at the command of the delegates.



What Led to the Organization of the American Christian Missionary Society.

I was but a lad of fourteen when the American Christian Missionary Society was organized, therefore I have no personal recollections.

A. CAMPBELL.

The ministers of those times have left on record their view of the situation. Isaac Errett, in his address before the annual convention of the Ohio society in 1873, said: "When the evils of scattered efforts came to be felt and acknowledged, attempts were sometimes made to overcome them by county co-operations and later by district organizations. Very good brethren saw much to fear in these movements, failing to discriminate between councils meeting to lord it over the faith of the churches, and conventions assembling to combine the means and energies of the churches in the spread of the gospel. However, the growing mischiefs of our independent and unorganized efforts compelled attention to general needs. Many important conquests were lost, or nearly so; many churches were dying; in immense districts we were without representation, and the most promising fields were inviting such labors as only our united strength could furnish."

ISAAC ERRETT.

Two years after the organization of the Ohio society (1854), in his appeal to the churches as corresponding secretary, he said: "Our strength is in our theme—the primitive gospel. Even in weak hands, seconded only by partial and occasional co-operation of the brotherhood, it triumphs in the face of organized opposition. What, then, would be its victories in magnitude and splendor were our whole force in the state combined in hearty co-operative effort! There is yet an immense work to be done. We appeal to you for aid in this work in view of the following considerations:

"1. We cannot consistently maintain our distinctive religious position without missionary effort.

"2. We can in this way exhibit the grand Christian unity for which we plead. Just to the extent of our neglect to unite our means and counsels in the work of the Lord do we impair the plea for true Christian union.

"3. The world will feel the power of the practical development of Christianity. The church in earnest is feared by sinners and dreaded by demons. Deeds—the deeds of true humanity—have in them matchless eloquence.

"4. It will do ourselves good in the increased income of the Spirit for the increased outlays of purse.

"5. It is the most benevolent work on earth, and is sure to succeed."

Speaking of these relations three years later, A. S. Hayden said: "In the assembly which projected this mission were men of veteran years. They had long lamented the absence among us of any system of co-operative effort. Churches loosely organized, a membership undisciplined and strangely independent, a ministry unstable and without subordination to one another, no general plan of action, what great reform can we expect or achieve? Shall we always be in our childhood? Are we never to arrive at manhood, order and scriptural system in the work of the Lord? Shall we always be tossed on waves of rivalry and swayed by works of jealously? Is not now the auspicious time to labor for union, communion, co-operation?"

These words had application to other states as well as Ohio, and the considerations which led up to the organization of state societies had already led up to the organization of the American Christian Missionary Society.

The sentiment of the brotherhood in favor of a general convention had been voiced in the Christian Age, the Christian Intelligencer and the Millennial Harbinger. Mr. Campbell, editor of the Millennial Harbinger, said: "I am of the opinion that a convention or general meeting of the churches of the Reformation, is a very great desideratum. Nay, I will say further that it is all-important to the cause of reformation. I am also of the opinion that Cincinnati is the proper place for holding it. But the questions are, How shall such convention be obtained? When shall it be held? And for what purposes? It should not be a convention of book-makers or of editors to concoct a great book concern, but a convention of messengers of churches selected and constituted such by the churches. It is not to be composed of a few self-appointed messegers, but a general convention. I know that neither wisdom nor piety are rated by numbers; still in the multitude of counselors there is more general safety and more confidence than in a few. The purposes of such a primary convention are already indicated by the general demand for a more effectual and scriptural organization—for a more general and efficient co-operation in the Bible cause, the missionary cause and the cause of education."

Mr. Campbell was at this time sixty-one years of age. Six years before he had conducted a masterly debate with Dr. N. L. Rice. There was not, at this time, as a few would like to think, any weakening of intellectual power. His advocacy of the importance of a general convention was after mature thought. He was not permitted to attend the convention on account of illness. W. K. Pendleton represented Bethany in the convention. In his report of it he said: "We met, not for the purpose of enacting ecclesastic laws, nor to interfere with the true and scriptural independence of the churches, but to consult about the best ways for giving efficiency to our power, and to devise such methods of co-operation in the great work of converting and sanctifying the world as our combined counsels, under the guidance of Providence, might suggest and approve."

W. F. RICHARDSON.

In his comments upon this report Mr. Campbell said: "Our expectations from the convention have more than been realized. We are much pleased with the result and regard it as a very happy pledge of good things to come. The unanimity, cordiality and generous concurrence of the brethren in all the important subjects before them was worthy of themselves and the great cause in which we are all enlisted. Bible distribution, evangelical labor—two translucent objects of Christian effort, most essential to the conversion of the world—deserves at our hands a very cordial and generous support."

Sometime during the next year he published in the Harbinger a pro est from the church in

BENJ. L. SMITH.

Connellsville, Pa. In this protest were these words: "We consider the Church of Christ . . . the only scriptural organization on earth for the conversion of sinners and the sanctification of believers."

To this Mr. Campbell replied as follows: "A church in Connellsville, Philadelphia, or Cincinnati is not "the Church of Christ." The Church of Christ is a very large and widely extended community and possesses a large field, even the inhabited earth. The church for which Christ died and for which he lives and intercedes is not the church at Connellsville, Rome, Ephesus, or Jerusalem, but is composed of all who have been baptized into him and continue to walk in him. The independence of any community in Christ's kingdom is not an independence of every other community in that kingdom, in whatever concerns the interest of that kingdom. This would, indeed, be a fatal error to the progress and prosperity of that kingdom. Every family in Pennsylvania is independent of every other family in the state, in all that enters into the idea of a private family, but in whatever pertains to the state, it is not independent of any other family, nor anyother family in the state independent of it. It belongs to the state and the state to it. So of the Church of Christ; it belongs to every church and every particular church to it."

R. MOFFETT.

Prominent Women at the Jubilee Convention.

I think, first of all, we will be glad to see our beloved president. Her absence from our midst last year was regretted by all, and the fact that serious illness kept her away added to our regret, deepening it into sorrow. That she has been spared to us and restored to comparative health will make her presence in our midst an occasion for joyful thanksgiving by every Christian woman in our ranks, as well as to each worker in the C. W. B. M.

Next, I think, we will want to see Mrs. Caroline Neville Pearre, who has been aptly called "the mother of our Christian Woman's Board of Missions." She is to give the principal address of the memorial meeting, which will be held in the Richmond Street Church, Friday afternoon, October 13th. Those who know Mrs. Pearre need not be told what is in store for them, for they well understand the gifts of her bright mind, the charm of her presence and message. To those of the younger women who have not met her we say, do not fail to meet and hear her at this time, for her address will be one of the delights of the convention.

You will want, too, to see Miss Almira J. Dickinson who, with Mrs. Pearre, was a pioneer in our woman's missionary work, the leader of the forces in Illinois and one of the strongest of all our strong, forceful women. Those who have known her through all the years of our organized life, with their freight of joy and sorrow, of prosperity and adversity, hold among the treasures of memory her strength and dignity in times of stress and trial, and her gentleness, her tenderness when hearts were bowed in sorrow or heads were lifted in joy.

Another there is for you to meet, who is bound to the work by tender ties—Miss Jennie Errett, daughter of Isaac Errett, and one of the strongest forces of the Standard Publishing Company. She was present at the beginning of our organized life. Her father had at that time, as always, many cares, but amid them all his thought was with the effort the women were making, so he charged his daughter to pay particular attention to all the details of their meetings, and it is of these scenes and days that Miss Errett will speak.

The sight of Mrs. Charlotte S. King, who will lead the five o'clock hour of prayer on Lord's day afternoon, Oct. 15, will be dear to the hearts of the hosts of younger C. W. B. M. workers, who have grown up into the auxiliaries through the mission bands. Mrs. King was their devoted leader through the earlier years of their organization, and is honored and loved by them, as well as by their mothers, whose help she was in training them for the service for Christ and his church.

There is one whose silvery voice, whose pure, spiritual face, has brightened many of our national conventions; whose brave thought and wise counsel have stirred to action hundreds of our younger women. The hope of seeing her will constrain many to attend the convention that they may once more clasp the hand and grow better, purer, in the presence of Persis L. Christian.

There are others—oh yes, to each one will come memories of the one woman who first touched her heart, awoke within her that sleeping angel, the missionary spirit, and taught her the blessed, the natural way of living—God's way, in which Christ is exalted and self-placed under his control. But we may not name these, for they are, thank God, so many we cannot. They belong to every state and to countries beyond the seas; they are serving the work in gentle, unselfish ways; they are diffusing the fragrance of a knowledge of Christ in all places, working patiently, tirelessly, that ignorance, selfishness, crime, want, care, sorrow and sin may be banished from this world, and that God's will may be known "on earth as it is in heaven." They will be in Cincinnati, many of them; you may clasp their hands and cheer their hearts by telling them of all you have undertaken for Christ and his church through the inspiration of their example.

HELEN E. MOSES.

Missouri Will Send 1,000 Delegates.

Possibly some of the brethren will smile at the above statement, but every indication points to a very large delegation from old Missouri. If careful management and earnest effort on the part of our committee are rewarded, you may look to us for at least two special trains from this state next fall.

Preparations for a thorough canvass of the state were made early in the year. On the recommendation of the Cincinnati jubilee committee the writer agreed to take up the work and organize the state so that every member of the church might be fully posted.

The first step taken was to appoint a committee representing the various churches in the city of St. Louis and to have the Ministers' Alliance approve of such appointment. The committee thus approved, met and formulated plans and increased its numbers by the appointment of one representative from each of the larger cities of the state. Every member of the committee was advised of the service desired at his hand, and the acceptance of the trust imposed requested. I am happy to say that every appointtee gladly accepted, and not only accepted, but agreed to devote his time and best energies to the end that the state should be largely represented at the great conventions.

The next step was to call this enlarged committee together for consultation, and at our last state Bible-school convention the entire committee, representing every section of the state, was called together for conference on methods of organization.

Committees on "hotel," "transportation" and on "publicity" were appointed. An arrangement was made to issue a bulletin to be distributed in the churches throughout the state, and also for the publication of items in our local papers, calling attention to the conventions and the plans provided for the comfort of the Missouri delegates.

You will hear from us from time to time as the work progresses, and we will all be with you in October.

W. H. M'CLAIN,
Chairman.

The Kentucky Side of Cincinnati.

Many of the delegates to the Jubilee Convention will find homes on the Kentucky side of the river. Probably it is not generally known that the cities on the south side of the Ohio River are much nearer Fountain Square, the business center of Cincinnati, than the resident portion of Cincinnati proper. On the Kentucky side we have one hundred thousand people within street car connection of Cincinnati, and none of them an hour's distance. Up the river opposite the upper portion of Cincinnati is Dayton, a city of about five thousand people, and joining that, Bellevue, another city of about the same population. Near the border of these two cities we have a church known as the Dayton-Bellevue Church, and though they are having a little difficulty at present it is to be hoped this will all be settled before the convention and many people will find homes in these pleasant cities.

The next city down the river is Newport, opposite the business portion of Cincinnati and connected with it by two fine bridges and several street car lines. Twenty minutes to half an hour will bring all delegates from Newport to Fountain Square. This city has a population of about thirty thousand and is a city of homes. Fortunate, indeed, will be the delegates assigned to this pleasant city. We have there two churches, the pastors of which are R. T. Mathews, of the Central Church, and C. S. Darsie of the First Church. These brethren and the people of Newport will do all in their power to accommodate many delegates.

Separated from Newport by the Licking River and connected with Cincinnati by two handsome bridges is Covington, a city of about fifty thousand inhabitants. This city is very convenient of access. Seven street car lines reach all portions of the city, and from seven to thirty minutes will bring delegates to all homes. There are two strong churches The First Church, Geo. A. Miller, pastor, and the Fourth Street Church, H. J. Seaman, pastor. It is expected that many hundred people will find homes in this city.

Down the river opposite the lower part of Cincinnati we have Ludlow, a city of about five thousand people. A direct line of street cars through Covington reaches Cincinnati. Here the well-known P. H. Duncan, the author of our Children's Day exercises, ministers to the church. Forty minutes will bring one to this city.

Near by this is the small town of Bromley, with a small church under the care of Dr. Wagner.

The Kentucky side of Cincinnati will be no unimportant part in the entertainment of the Jubilee Convention. Let none receiving assignment to any of these cities think because they go to Kentucky they are far away, for all these cities are easy of access and many will here find very pleasant homes. The Kentucky side hopes to welcome many of the delegates.

GEO. A. MILLER.

The Jubilee Convention.

Already the good influences of this great national gathering is being felt all along the line. The pulpits and the press have breathed such a missionary spirit within the last eight months that thousands are falling into the mission ranks that never dreamed of missions before.

This will be the largest and most influential gathering ever held by the Disciples of Christ. But because it is going to be the largest is a good reason why every effort should be put forth in all the states to carry large delegations.

Of course, much depends upon the pastors and presidents of Endeavor Societies. They should see to it that every one is supplied with the Jubilee Bulletins that are being sent out by the committee.

Let those who have decided to go send their names to the chairman of excursions, who will keep the body posted through our papers as to the progress being made.

Vigilance, eternal vigilance, and agitation will bring the greatest success.

Three Eminent Missionary Men.

Dr. Pierson was doubtless justified in calling his sketches of missionary work and workers, "The New Acts of the Apostles." The most remarkable characteristics of the present age is the passion for missions. The church as a whole is no longer a passive, lifeless thing, but is aggressive to a high degree. The real battle-fields of the church are not at present confined to theological discussions, but are to be found chiefly where the missionary worker is to the front, whether in our own or in foreign lands. The contest is not now over metaphysical distinctions, but it is a struggle for the salvation of souls. The Christian warfare has been transferred from the region of mere ideas to that of personality. The dawning purpose of the church of the present day is undoubtedly the salvation of a lost and ruined world. This presents the religion of Christ from a true point of view and makes the conversion of the world, not only a possibility, but a strong probability.

The Disciples of Christ have been wise in their generation with respect to missions. A number of prominent characters among them might be mentioned. At present only three can be referred to, but these represent three distinct forces in missionary work.

DAVID STAATS BURNET was, perhaps, more than any other man, the father of our missionary organization. Under the most discouraging conditions, by persistent and energetic labors, he succeeded in bringing together the missionary forces of the Disciples, when there was practically little or no co-operative system among their churches. In 1845 Mr. Burnet had a protracted and serious illness, and during this illness he promised his Heavenly Father, if his life should be spared, that he would urge upon his brethren the inauguration of the society system. This he did and practically became the founder of our earliest missionary co-operative work.

THOMAS MUNNELL represents another phase of missionary development. D. S. Burnet had demonstrated the importance of organized effort, but he gave very little attention beyond the fact that organization in some form is necessary. The true method of co-operation received very little consideration from him. But Munnell undertook to develope Burnet's idea of organization by the best practical methods. In some respects Munnell was far in advance of most of his brethren during the time of which I write. Indeed, there are not many of his brethren up to his standpoint even at the present time. Burnet's idea was to bring individuals into co-operation, and hence the first society movement was an organization of individuals; but Munnell sought, during his whole life, to bring the churches into organization, and consequently his idea of missionary work was the co-operative effort of the churches.

CENTRAL CHRISTIAN CHURCH, CINCINNATI, O.
HEADQUARTERS FOR THE JUBILEE CONVENTION, OCTOBER 12 – 20.

This was undoubtedly a long step forward, and while this ideal has not yet been realized, no one doubts that it is the thing we should all aim at in seeking to attain to the highest conception of co-operation.

TIMOTHY COOP represented another phase of our missionary developments.

During the days of Burnet and Munnell there was much discussion about plans, but Timothy Coop taught us all that no plans are worth much where there is no money. Coop's idea was that "wherever there's a will there's a way." While he heartily believed in the most effective possible organization, within scriptural limits, for co-operative work, still he did not believe that the most perfect organization would, of itself, do the work that is needed to bring the world to Christ. His notion was that men and money were the necessary conditions, from the human side, of success in all missionary activities. He believed that liberal giving was the best of all plans, and that consecrated men and women to work in missionary fields is after all the most effective missionary organization.

These three ideas give a comprehensive view of the rise and progress of missionory work among the Disciples; and the three men I have mentioned stand respectively for the particular phases of developement which I have ascribed to them. The first taught the importance of organization; the second taught the importance of how this organization should be affected, and the third showed that no organization, however perfect it might be, is worth any thing without means necessary to give it efficiency. One insisted upon the creation of an engine, another told how the engine must be constructed; but the third taught us all that the engine must have fuel in order to make steam, and that no engine is worth any thing without a motor power.

The Chief Value of the Jubilee Convention.

The whole value of the Jubilee Convention can be fully understood only as one attends it and enters into its many blessings. But the chief value of this mammoth gathering of Christians can be easily imagined by all who know what it chiefly represents.

It comes together, not to busy itself in any way with denominatianal tenets or ecclesiastical laws, but it meets for something more than intellectual profit or even spiritual devotion. It is concerned with work—hard work—the greatest work in the world—namely, evangelizing mankind. The missionary purpose is the supreme secret of this convention, and determines everything else that goes on in its meetings. But this missionary ideal is bound up fast with prayer and plea for are united church. The convention celebrates fifty years of organized missions; it celebrates nearly a hundred years of faith and work in behalf of the organic union of Christians, "that the world may believe."

It is no false judgment nor ungodly pride to expect that a meeting of ten thousand delegates, fired with the purpose of world-wide missions and pleading for the organic union of Christians, is bound to make a deep impression on all who witness it, and to enchain the attention of many who read of it. Such a large convention of Christians, with the supreme ideal of evangelizing the world while exhorting all Christians to unite organically for this end, will be something new under the sun. Without any sensation of heresy, apart from all debates over canons and rubrics, intent wholly on evangelism—its deepest motives and wisest methods—the Jubilee Convention will have its chief value in the unique opportunity to signalize worthily in its sessions the lofty purpose of world-wide missions and Christian union.

To this joyful end every member of this convention ought to contribute, and everything should be subservient. There will be other interests and varied pleasures connected with this Jubilee week. The social fellowship will be a delight. The presence of our pioneer men of God will be an inspiration. The greetings of old friends one with another, and the formation of new acquaintances, will bring each its own peculiar joy. Cincinnati itself may be enjoyed, now for what it offers of historic interest in our reformatory plea, then for what it represents of much good, despite its evils, as a typical American city. But the light and life of the Jubilee Convention lie in the spirit of world-wide missions and the spirit of Christian union. Let us come up by the thousands to recount our missionary annals and to magnify our historic plea. The meeting in Music Hall on the Lord's day, around the Lord's table, will be the heart of the Jubilee season. On this high day, as we commune with the risen, living, present Lord, let us show to the world the practical example of "the unity of the Spirit" in the fellowship of the "one body," and let us receive a new consecration to send the gospel to all the nations while we plead more mightily for the organic union of all Christians.

ROBT. T. MATHEWS.

Business Men Wanted.

It is sometimes said that we as a people stand for the union of Christians upon the scriptural basis and freedom to discover, interpret and apply the truth. I think we need to remember that however valuable these things may be in themselves we are not to contend for them as an end. The great idea for which any church worthy of the name stands is the evangelization of the world, and the idea as to the unity of Christians is desirable because its incorporation in the life of the church is a prerequisite to the world's conversion.

Now we want all our people to be in sympathy with this great idea for which the church stands, and I know of no more feasible way of bringing them into living touch with it quickly than by inducing a large number of them to attend our Jubilee Convention next October.

RICHMOND STREET CHURCH, CINCINNATI, OHIO.

It is of especial importance that our Christian business men attend this convention. The preacher may desire the conversion of the world, young men and women may offer themselves as missionaries, but the men of affairs must furnish the money necessary to support the work at home and abroad, lest its progress be greatly retarded. Secure the attendance of these men at our great missionary gatherings, and you will find them ready to hold up the hand of those who would proclaim the gospel of Christ. I have attended all of our general conventions save three within the last fifteen years, and my observation is that those who attend, even irregularly, catch the missionary spirit and support their respective pastors in their efforts to extend the divine kingdom. These men are made valuable to the church, not simply because of what they are led to contribute to missionary enterprises, but because of their greater efficiency as Christian workers in the local fields they represent, by virtue of their clearer vision of the world's need and the enthusiasm for humanity which they possess and are enabled to beget in others. Then our conventions need our Christian business men. Their presence is always most inspiring and their practical ideas most helpful. We want not only religion in business, but business in religion, and our business men owe it to our conventions to lend them their presence and help. Considering the small proportion of the Christian business men attending our conventions that are given to public speaking, they have been accorded a very generous recognition on our national programs and the value of their counsels in committee work has been highly appreciated.

On Saturday evening, October 14th, a conference of Christian business men, presided over by Gen. Drake, will be held at the Grand Hotel, this city. A good program has been provided, and we are making an effort to secure the attendance of 1,000 Christian business men. Brethren, lay aside your worldly cares and come to Cincinnati next October and share with us the joys and blessings of our great Jubilee Convention.

S. M. COOPER.

Our First Convention.

Our first General Convention was called by D. S. Burnet, who was the father of our co-operative missionary work. This call was concurred in by Alexander Campbell, Walter Scott and others.

The gathering met in the church at Eighth and Walnut Sts., Cincinnati, O., Oct. 24th, 1849.

The representative men of the brotherhood said: "We have won the victory for the right to live as a religious movement; now we must plan to live well by the permanent organization for lasting existence and strongest influence."

The chiefest men in our history were in attendance at that convention. Alexander Campbell, the peerless, was detained by illness, but sent W. K. Pendleton as his representative, and no other name than his was considered, as long as he lived, as president of the American Missionary Society.

David S. Burnet, the presiding officer of the first convention, was the leader of our leader in co-operative work.

It captures the imagination to think of that great gathering; what must it have been to be there! Walter Scott, John T. Johnson, John Smith, L. L. Pinkerton, Wm. Morton, H. T. Anderson and the Shacklefords, of Kentucky; Elijah Goodwin, Love H. Jameson, John B. New, Benj. Franklin and others from Indiana, and W. H. Hopson, S. S. Church and others of like character from Missouri.

Dr. Hopson stirred the convention by his statement: "Brethren, when I speak, ten thousand disciples of Missouri speak through me." We now number 160,000 Disciples in Missouri.

Among the younger men who were present, W. K. Pendleton, C. L. Loos, J. H. Lockwood, Charles Carlton, James Leslie linger until the present to tell us of the stronger men of those grand days.

These men embodied our plea; they understood it, if it was understood on earth, and they were loyal in every fibre of their natures to our great plea for the restoration of apostolic Christianity, and they planned for organized mission work under the direction of the American Christian Missionary Society.

We can say of that first convention that it was thoroughly representative of the brain and and piety of our movement, that it was a careful, conservative body, attempting to interfere in no way with the liberty of the congregations and assuming no function of legislation; all following conventions have observed these limitations.

The outcome of this great convention was the organization of the American Christian Missionary Society, the cherishing mother of all our missionary work among our people, the mother of the Christian Woman's Board of Missions, of the Foreign Christian Missionary Society, of the Board of Church Extension, the Board of Negro Education and Evangelization, the Board of Education and the Board of Ministerial Relief.

The story of the fifty years will be told in part at our great Jubilee Convention at Cincinnati, October next. That Jubilee Convention will be thoroughly representative of the brain, the piety and the life, the achievements and the hopes of the Disciples of Christ, now become a mighty host. Almost every representative man and woman among us will be present at that great gathering. Will you be there?

BENJ. L. SMITH, Cor. Sec.

Jubilee Convention Notes.

The best part of the enthusiasm of the Jubilee Convention will be that which comes as a result of the amount of work done the past year to advance the cause of Christ. The fact that the Home Society has now just doubled the amount of money that it had at this time last year, and that the Foreign Society is at least $15,000 ahead of what it was at this time last year and, so is likely to reach its lofty aim, and other missionary interests are moving along finely, augurs much for large enthusiasm.

Already it is being debated as to where our convention will assemble in 1900. Pittsburg has appointed a committee of five to awaken interest in their own city and invite it there, and it is thought by many that Kansas City will renew the strong invitation she presented at Indianapolis in 1897. There is a growing sentiment of some linking the Capital City and the closing century together. Very likely Cleveland, Buffalo, Denver and one or two other cities will invite it this time; but the city that gets it ought to be able to say what she can do. The contest for it will be a thing of interest.

It will be worth a trip to Cincinnati from any point in America to see the noble men and women you have heard about and read after for years, and besides you will be ably to hear many of them speak when inspired by a great audience, so that they will be at their very best. You will see and hear also some younger princes in Israel just rising to high places in the country; men from whose pen you will read in days to come and of whose glory you will be proud.

In years to come men will look back with joy and say, "I attended the great Jubilee Convention at Cincinnati." Fifty years hence men who conduct the funeral rites of the young preachers of to-day will count it a thing worthy to say even on such an occasion, "He was present at the great Jubilee in Cincinnati, in 1899." Not a preacher in the brotherhood can afford to be absent.

Friday of convention week, Oct. 20th, will be given to sidetrips and sightseeing in and about Cincinnati. Some will want to visit the home of the Carey Sisters at Mt. Healthy, 10 miles out, some the grave of Harrison, others the historic Carthage Church. Ft. Thomas, across the river, will attract others. Its sights are many and the day will be joyful.

The Pitsburg excursion committee writes, under date of July 10th, that they are organized to do large things. They expect the Pittsburg delegation to be not less than 250 and have ordered hotel accommodations for one hundred and fifty.

Bro. J. A. Lord, of the Christian Standard, who is also chairman of the pulpit supply committee for the Jubilee Convention, sent out on Tuesday, July 11, letters to 170 Cincinnati preachers, asking if they desire their pulpits filled by visiting preachers. Get ready, brethren.

Remember half fair on railroads for Cincinnati in October, in Central Traffic Association. If other associations do not grant low rates it must be secured by getting a large delegation, and then there is no trouble. If there seems to be trouble about this write at once to the committee, box 304 Cincinnati, O.

Living, for convention week, will range from $1 to $3 per day. Some good rooms can be had for 50 cents a night, and meals 10 cents up.

Twenty thousand copie of Bulletin No. 1 have been printed and will soon be gone. Every state secretary and every excursion manager should get a special circular with a message to his own state or district. I suggest you write us and we will get it out together, and divide the expense. Write at once. The cost is not much to you. The trouble is for you to send information and on time for Bulletin No. 2.

Prof. and Mrs. B. C. Hagerman propose bringing the entire Hamilton College to the Jubilee Convention for a day or two, and hopes to meet here hundreds who have attended Hamilton, in fair Lexington, in years gone. The chairman and secretary will both join the reception committee for a brief time when you come, ladies. This adds another to the list of college meetings held in Cincinnati that week. Who comes next? A. M. HARVOUT.

The $100.000 for Home Missions.

Everybody is no doubt surprised at the great gain made in the Jubilee receipts by the American Christian Missionary Society. It was a question whether it were wise to set the stakes of that society so high last October. To reach the $100,000 it required a gain of nearly $60.000, while to reach the goal set by the Foreign Society a gain of only $15,000 was required, and to reach the goal for the silver anniversary of the C. W. B. M., required only $22,000. While these gains are in themselves large they are small compared to the gain required by the Home Society and still smaller when compared to the per cent. of gain.

While the Jubilee is, in a sense, a celebration of all our missionary interests—and no doubt all have been benefited by the Jubilee uplift—and all our missionary societies will report great gain, yet all the time it has been understood that the Jubilee is of the American Christian Missionary Society; that it is this organization which will be fifty years old in October. This accounts for the unprecedented gain which that society has been enabled to make. There has been a steady gain from the time General Drake made his magnificent gift at Chattanooga up to the present time, so that the receipts are more than double those of last year for the same period, and the gain in June was $5,000. We can announce that up to the present writing in July the receipts are $1,-200 in advance of those for the whole month last year, and will certainly be much more than double those of last year for July. The reason of this unprecedented gain is not far to seek. It is the American Christian Missionary Society which is fifty years old in October, and it is her honor we celebrate.

At the rate of gain above indicated, which we now believe can be easily kept up on account of pledges already made, the society will, without any special call, reach $82,000, and there are some special gifts already received and not credited, which will swell the amount to $85,000. This will lack only $15,-000 of reaching the lofty goal erected at Chattanooga.

Now shall we be satisfied with this? We think there is one mighty—No! which will go up from the whole brotherhood, and especially from those who have done the most to achieve this splendid victory. All it requires is that the same ones who have done so much already shall do the one thing more required, and joyfully accede to the requests made of them. However, if this grand consummation is to be realized it will require that all take part, and take part quickly.

1. This is a good time for persons to give some money to the American Christian Missionary Society on the annuity plan.

2. This is the time for a multitude to take out life memberships and directorships and forward the first payment now.

3. This is the time to make a personal offering in honor of the victory of fifty years.

4. This is the time for Christian Endeavor Societies to have their names placed on the roll of honor to be hung in the convention hall by the payment of $5.00.

5. This is the time for churches not having contributed and Ladies' Aid Societies and Bands and other organizations to join in this Jubilee offering.

Let us all work that we may all rejoice together. Half the joy of the great convention will be lost if all other organizations reach their desired goal and this society fail—if it should be published to the world that this mighty people cannot celebrate its fifty yearsof unprecedented victory by raising $100,000 with which to preach the primitive gospel in Greater America. C. C. SMITH, Cor. Sec. B. N. E. E.

The CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST takes great pleasure in emphatically endorsing the final campaign for $100,000. We are so near we must not fail.—EDITOR.

How to Work Up a Large Delegation.

The chairman of the jubilee committee asks me to contribute to a symposium on "How to Work Up a Large Delegation." Unless all signs fail the work has already been done. The growth of our people to a million communicants, the remarkable success of our missionary enterprises, the fellowship and enthusiasm of past conventions insure a great convocation in Cincinnati next October to celbrate our Year of Jubilee.

The railroad companies have scented the popular interest in this convention, for instead of the indifferedce of former years the agents are beseiging the excursion managers with inducements to make their lines the official route.

The East, from North Carolina to Maine is arranging to rendezvous in Charlottesville, Va. A jubilee service in the Christian Church there, a ride to Monticello, the home of Jefferson, an inspection of the Bible Chair at the University of Virgina, the ride on special trains through the glorious scenery along the Chesapeake and Ohio Road, are some of the good things anticipated.

Of a dozen Disciples in a little town in Eastern Virginia four will attend the convention. This proportion of delegates may not be maintained in all the churches, but the attendance will be very large.

Brethren, the people are coming without having to be worked on. Excuse me from a work of supererogation. EDWARD B. BAGBY, English Topics.

UP TO DATE IN ENGLAND.

In this old country we who belong to the Radical party are regarded by the old Conservatives as being alarming revolutionists. For four years now the Conservative Government has been politically omnipotent, and it has sustained an attitude of omniscience and infallibility only to be comprehended by those born and bread in this island. Yet, strange to say, ever since the Home Rule Bill of Gladstone split the Liberal party and created the Unionist movemnt, the Conservates have been growing democratic in policy, in consequence of the influence of the Liberals who seceded to them solely as the result of the Irish trouble. The Conservatives have remained Tories to the fullest extent in economics, while they have been greatly liberalized in politics. Hence, a very curious state of things. The measures carried in Parliament are a bewildering mixture of old mediævalism and forward Radicalism. Indeed, everything is mixed up. When the Tories go out and the Liberals have their innings, the latter will have to expend several years in unraveling the absurd anomalies created under the rule of Lord Salisbury. The landlords and the clergy are being patted on the back, and so are the drink sellers. This is how votes are bought in this country. There is little direct bribery, but classes are propitiated by partial legislation. All this will bring sharp reckoning in due time. We have had another scare. This time it is all about South Africa and President Kruger. Our Colonial Secretary, who married the American heiress, Miss Endicott, is one of the most bellicose demonstrators in the ranks of the world's bureaucrats. He fought Gladstone and split with him. He is now supposed to be continually fighting Lord Salisbury inside the Cabinet. It was hoped that his beautiful American wife would have brought back Mr. Chamberlain to Liberalism. But he grows harder and more inflammatory in his utterances every year. He appears to hate with a pure and perfect hatred the old farmer and panther slayer who is the first man in the world's history who has been a Republican President for twenty years in succession. This week Chamberlain has delivered himself in Birmingham of a bitter and passionate speech. It shows that he nurses war in his soul against the Boers. But the Christian Churches have in this age become the real arbitrators as to peace and war, and the whole consensus of Christian feeling in this land is in favor of dealing patiently with the Boers of the Transvaal. It is certain that English people no more wish to fight the Boers than they wish to go to war with any Christian people on the face of the earth. The war against the Khalifa was a popular, because that unspeakable monster made the Soudan a hell on earth. A war with the Sultan would have been welcomed with frenzied enthusiasm at the time of the Armenian massacres, and multitudes in this nation would have been willing to risk their lives in such a conflict.

A WOMAN'S PARLIAMENT.

The annihilation of woman is accomplished! I do not of course mean to say that woman in the generic sense is improved off the face of the earth. It would be grievous to think of such a consummation as that, if only because the elimination of man must naturally be the sequence. Woman is irresponsible. There is much more of her at this moment, at any rate in Old England, than there is of the unfair sex. We poor "maschi," as the Italians call us men, are outnumbered, elbowed out of the labor market, eclipsed in our attributes, and ousted in competitive race by lovely woman. Her loveliness is soon to be our only consolation in view of the coming effacment of our hitherto paramount sex. If husband and wife are one, that one is to be the wife. Woman means business, and her chief immediate end in life is going to be the subjugation of the male by the Amazon in rationals. The poor men are, however, absurdely hesitating before making the inevitable unconditional surrender. We who are ministers of religion, of the unfortunate "male persuasion," have not yet vacated our pulpits to give a chance to the much more eloquent potential she-popes, who are preparing to don full canonicals. Indeed, I have resolved to continue my own pastorate a little longer, as it turns out that the ladies are going in for one thing at a time—oh, artful feminine diplomats!—and are inclined to let us poor parsons alone till they have disposed of their shameful and truculant usurpers who exclude woman from the political franchise. Now, this week there has been a skirmish which is rousing the blood of our advanced womanhood to fever pitch. It took place in the House of Lords, where the peers hotly debated the right of woman to become aldermen in the new corporations which are to be created by the new London municipal bill. The House of Commons has decreed that women may be elected to the aldermanic dignity. But the bill has gone up to the Lords, and a majority of the Lords sat on the ladies with such violence as to crush this aldermanic life entirely out of them. It was a very strange discussion. There were no fewer than sixty-two peeresses, including six duchesses in the galleries, of the House of Lords to watch this cruel annihilation of their sisters who desire aldermanic dignity. Now, the remarkable feature of the debate was that Lord Salisbury very ably and eloquently, in one of the most sensible speeches he has ever delivered, argued that as women sit on vestries, and the new city councils will only be parish vestries under a chosen name, with some larger powers, there would be no great innovation in admitting ladies to be aldermen. Many of them are "vestrymen" in different parts of the country, and they are very often much more efficient than the men. But the Prime Minister was for once defeated on his own happy hunting ground. The proposal was ignominiously rejected, and the slaughter of woman in a very noble specific function was complete. But she is to be resurrected. The House of Commons will receive the bill again from the Lords, and they are certain to revive the matter. Yes, woman is irrepressible! I am one of those who believe that the only hope for society is in the real and complete enfranchisement of woman. I earnestly pray for the day when women of every Christian land will have equal power with men in all the civil and political functions of society. We should soon see the drinking saloon abolished, and war would become a myth of exploded barbarism.

FRAGMENTS FROM OUR FIELDS.

The year is rolling on. The evangelistic campaign in our own churches has come to a pause. In summer such special work as Bro. Romig has been splendidly attempting and accomplishing could only be continued in tent services. Mrs. Romig and children have landed in England, but I have not yet had the pleasure of meeting them. Evangelist Romig is now for a season likely to preach for the Church of Christ at Southampton, to fill up the gap pending other arrangements. This is an excellent expedient, seeing that the non-arrival of Dr. Buxton was a source of some inconvenience and disappointment. If Bro. Romig and the friends at Southampton would fall in love with each other, and if this most attractive preacher should be located permanently in the beautiful southern town, with the consent of the American and English boards, such an addition to our force would be very welcome in our brotherhood. The Southampton church has expressed its determination to secure an American preacher if allowed to have one. This fact ought to be made known, for it should be accepted as another token of the appreciation of American evangelists by these English churches of ours. Never let it be thought that any efficient American preacher will fail to gain a first-rate hearing in England. They are always welcome. Once more we bave had at Hornsey the pleasure of listening to Bro. Remfrey Hunt, who in a few weeks returns to his field in China, with his wife and children. Mr. and Mrs. Hunt are longing to go. Remfrey Hunt is restless to be again amongst the Chinese and to be once more wrestling with the hoary old idolatry of the Far East. He is full of fire, go, vivacity and enthusiasm, and seems to me in his chafing for his proper mission to be like the psalmist's warhorse in the valley, pawing impatiently as he hears the sound of the battle afar off. But oh how tender is the pathos of the farewell to such beloved and precious brothers and sisters in the holy way! We cannot tell if we shall ever here meet again; and the names of some of the missionaries are already monumental, though it is but a short time since we saw and heard Mr. and Mrs. Hernden and Mr. Saw. Theirs are amongst the hundreds of sacrificial missionary tombs in the dark regions of Sinim!

GUNS BOOMING AT THE TOWER OF LONDON.

I happen to be writing this letter on a wonderful day. It is June 28, the 61st anniversary of the coronation of Queen Victoria at Westminster Abbey on June 28, 1838, a year and eight days after Her Majesty's accession to the throne. Guns are booming at the Tower of London. What an evergreen old lady is our Queen! A month ago she passed her 81st birthday anniversary, and yet she was yesterday reviewing the army at Aldershot in the heat and dust of midsummer, without the least sign of fatigue, but with indications of real enjoyment. There is no other such queen in the world. Though I am a republican in principle, like multitudes of Englishmen, I am intensely loyal to Queen Victoria. When she is gone there may be a dispute as to whether she should be styled Victoria the Great or Victoria the Good, I vote that she be called both. W. DURBAN.

New York Letter.

At the invitation of the Sunday-school of the Third Christian Church, Philadelphia, I had the pleasure of addressing them on Thursday evening, July the 6th, on the occasion of the celebration of their 21st birthday. Bro. Hugh Chain, Jr., of beloved memory, and others of the First Church, went out into West Philadelphia and inaugurated a Sunday-school with 20 members, which now has an enrollment of more than 500 members. This new work resulted in the organization of a church of 16 members, on November the 24th of the same year (1878), and now there are about 600 communicants in the Third Church. It has been a most prosperous work and the outlook of the congregation was never more promising than at the present time. Of the 16 charter members 21 years ago only three remain. Bro. Hugh Chain labored in this school 14 years, until God called him to, higher service. He leaves in the work there his family and many relatives and friends who treasure his memory and imitate his Christian example. When death released Bro. Chain Bro J. S. Briggs superintended the school for four years, when he was succeeded by Bro. George H. Grone, who is the present incumbent and is doing a most excellent work. He is a man of intelligent enthusiasm in Sunday-school work, keeping up with advanced methods and approved means along all Sunday-school lines. Mrs. D. C. France read a very interesting historical sketch of the work, G. P. Rutledge made an appropriate address, Mrs. Chas. Chain delightfully rendered two vocal selections, S. T. Willis spoke on "The Bible-school of the Present," and Bro. Grone gracefully presided over the exercises. It was altogether an inspiring and interesting service. May the Third Church Bible-school, with its host of consecrated workers, do even more in the future in leading the rising generation to Christ than in the past.

It was a pleasure to take tea with our old classmate, Pastor G. P. Rutledge, and live over again some of the happy experiences at Milligan College, and confer on the issues of our cause in the East. Bro. Rutledge evidently is highly appreciated by the flock he shepherds. They have given him this month as a vacation, which he will spend with his family at Wildwood by the sea. Several of his people told me he is doing a splendid work in the city of brotherly love. Among the good workmen who have preceded him, A. M. Chamberlain, J. H. Nesslage and W. C. Payne come to my memory just now. After hospitable entertainment in the home of Bro. Grone, Bro. Rutledge and I went to see Bro. J. S. Myers, bishop of the First Church, whom we found overflowing with good cheer at the prospects of the work in his church. He hopes to inaugurate a campaign of forward movements in the autumn, from which he expects large results. The Disciples of Philadalphia are organizing and expect to incorporate "the Philadelphia Church Extension Society," which will do city mission work, with a view toward planting and fostering new churches. This is the proper thing. It ought to have been done in all the cities of the East years ago. We hope to do something of the kind in New York in the early autumn. We are planning for it now.

According to local parish papers, the Searchlight, of Worcester, Mass., and Onward, of North Tonawanda, N. Y., pastors R. A. Nichols, of the former place, and B. Q. Denham, of the latter, are doing good work in building up the cause numerically and spiritually. Good reports and encouraging come from many other quarters of the field also. We hope to have an Eastern evangelist in the field in the fall; the matter is being pushed with all possible haste. But in order to get the needed appropriation for this work the American Christian Missionary Society must have larger and more general contributions to its treasury. Brethren, in this glorious Jubilee Year let us not forget the particular missionary society whose golden birthday we celebrate. Let us direct the preponderance of the enthusiasm toward our great and needy home field. In this year of rejoicing we should endeavor to release the home work from its fifty years of bondage to poverty, that the American society may send forth heralds into every state and city of our beloved land to proclaim liberty through Christ to all the captives of Satan. May we find no rest or satisfaction until we realize the $100,000 for Home Missions we have promised ourselves to raise during this year.

On Saturday, July the 8th, Prof. Ernest Herter's statue and fountain in honor of Henrich Heine, the Hebrew-German poet and sculptor, was presented to and accepted by the city of New York. The unveiling exercises were held around the statue and fountain at 161st St. and Mott Ave. The fountain has been refused a place in many German cities on the ground of its unchased suggestiveness and because of the disesteem of Mr. Heine in the minds of many of his social, political and religious enemies. But as New York is the dumping ground for much of the refuse of European nations our authorities finally gave this fountain a resting-place amidst the protests of some of the best art critics and pure minds of the city. Heine's career is an interesting one which, like Solomon's, is valuable for its faults and follies. S. T. WILLIS.

Texas Letter.

"The Lord's Supper," by G. A. Hoffmann, is a tract of 25 pages from the Register Pub. Co., Kansas City, Mo. It deals with the origin, the elements, the object, who should commune, the frequency of the communion, how to conduct it, and the question of self-examination preparatory to the communion. It deplores the fact that this ordinance is so often given an obscure place in the worship, and that so many people seem not to appreciate it. Such literature from such a man will always find a place among us, and we should hail it with pleasure.

On March 2, 1836, Texas declared her Independence. On July 4th a monument was unveiled in the old town of Washington-on-the Brazos, on the identical spot of the declaration. After 63 years only one person—Mrs. Martha Buffington, Anderson, Texas—can be found, who was actually present in the house when the immortal document was signed, and is therefore an eyewitness to a transaction which gave birth to a nation.

The order of railway conductors has two features in its organization worthy of all commendation. The first is that when a member is incapacitated from earning a living, but no contingency, such as the loss of a hand, foot, or vision occurs entitling him to collect his insurance, it is not permitted to lapse, but is carried free of cost to him by the order itself. The other is that no member shall have anything to do with intoxicating drinks in any way.

J. W. Lowber and wife will stand by the work in Austin during another summer. They feel that it needs them, and therefore they can not leave it. Such unflagging zeal wins success, but it wears out the worker. There ought to be some authority somewhere to order such people to rest. They should not be allowed to burn the candle at both ends at once. In the long run it is better both for the work and the worker. But there is so much to do, and so few to do it, that the temptation to light both ends is well-nigh irresistible.

James Small, our Des Moines evangelist, came down recently to help pastor Laye in a meeting at Temple. A tabernacle was built and everything was ready, and the meeting began with great promise. But about the time it began, the floods also began, and it had to close. Not only Temple, but all Texas regrets it; for the meeting at Bedford, Ind., with 240 additions, shows Bro. Small to be one of our foremost evangelists. On his way home Bro. Small preached a long-to-be-remembered sermon to our people of the Central Church.

B. F. Wilson and the Plano people are rejoicing greatly. For years they have needed a new house, centrally located, and they have been praying and laboring for it, and at last the reward has come. Homer T. Wilson, the eloquent brother of the pastor, preached the dedicatory sermon to a great audience, and raised in a few moments the $800 necessary to pay for the house. The other pastors dismissed their audiences and joined in the service. The house is beautiful and will seat 650 people. Bro. Wilson has done a wonderful work—built and paid for a $6,000 church in eight months, and the future is full of promise.

Add-Ran University will open as usual this fall. This glad announcement has at last been made. The whole debt of $30,000 was not raised; but a sufficient amount was secured to tide her over at least for the present. How this school needs some noble spirit like Drake to come to the rescue. We have here the men with the means to do this, but they have not done it. How long, O how long!

Geo. Van Pelt has been added to our list of state missionaries. He was in the employ of the board a short time last year, and his work was a success. This gives us five strong men giving their entire time to the work: Sanders, Bush, Leake, Dubbs and Van Pelt, and we expect to add others soon.

The terrible floods in Central and Southern Texas have been the worst known here. The Brazos and Colorado Rivers, with their tributaries, have swept over thousands of acres, destroying crops to the amount of $3,000,000, and railroad property worth $7,000,000, and drowning not less than 50 people. So great has been the suffering that Gov. Sayers asked for and received the aid of the general government. Secretary Alger placed 20,000 rations at his disposal, and all governmental vessels at Galveston were ordered at once to the flooded districts. Relief has also come rapidly and abundantly from every part of the state, and from all over the country. The sufferers in the main are negroes, but the whites, in their generous liberality seem not to think of color. This shows us what all such calamities do, that humanity, bad as it is, has a sympathetic heart. It shows, too, that all the people in the towns are not bad, for most of these gifts have come from them. It shows that the North can be touched by the sorrows of the South, for the gifts from up there have been very large. It shows that the millionaires and corporations have souls, for they have been among the largest givers. Many ludicrous and pathetic incidents occurred. One negro had a fine watermelon patch, and when the waters came in their fury, and others fled for life, he refused to fly, seying: "I'll neber leave dese here watermillions," and he didn't, but both went off in the flood together. Another had a sick wife, too sick to be moved, and he stayed by her bed, saying, "We've lived togedder, and if de Lord wills we'll die togedder." But they were saved. M. M. DAVIS.

Walking to Work

Is the only way in which the business woman, employed in store or office, can get open air exercise. Is it any wonder that she often grows pale and thin and develops a tendency to "weak lungs." Whenever there is pain in breathing, soreness of the chest, obstinate cough, bleeding from the lungs or any other symptoms of disease of the respiratory organs, begin the use of Doctor Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery and continue the use until cured. Ninety-eight in every hundred who have used "Golden Medical Discovery" for "lung trouble," have been perfectly and permanently cured.

"I was very sick indeed," writes Mrs. Mollie Jacobs, of Felton, Kent Co., Delaware, "and our family doctor said I had consumption. I thought I must die soon for I felt so awful bad. Had a bad cough, spit blood, and was very short of breath. I had pains in my chest and right lung, also had dyspepsia. Before I took your 'Golden Medical Discovery' and 'Pleasant Pellets' I was so weak I could not sweep a room, now I can do a small washing. I feel like a new person."

Dr. Pierce's Pellets cure heart-burn.

Chas. E. Garst.

It was in November, 1893, that I first met Mr. Garst. Since that time I have been associated with him in all the trying work of mission life. To picture him in all his full manhood would require a more cunning hand than mine. In mission meetings, when things would come up which seemed to be about to disturb the whole mission, one of Garst's dry jokes would bring things about satisfatorily to all. He had a familiar way of expressing himself with reference to those who could not understand what was very plain to him by saying: "I think we had better order some blue putty for that man." During the war with Spain I heard him say: "If I were America I would say to Spain, get out of the Atlantic and Pacific Oceans." He would often remark about the condition of the Spanish provinces: "I don't take much stock in a country where dried apples are a luxury." He wrote his family while they were visiting in China that, "being alone was something like oysters on the half-shell without the oysters." His jokes always had a point to them, as the following will testify: While on an evangelistic trip we were staying at the home of a friend where they had a servant who seemed always to be bowing and scraping, and as a result was always present at morning prayers. Mr. Garst said she reminded him of a pig's tail—always behind and turned up." His jokes were always surprises, and to say that they were original would be trite. He tells a very interesting story which illustrates quite fully the conditions of the priesthood. It was in the early days in Akita. Mr. Garst invited an old priest to take dinner with him. In the midst of what seemed to the half-starved priest a great feast, he asked for wine. Upon being told that the missionaries did no drink wine, he asked permission to smoke, as he found it quite impossible to get through with all there was to eat without either smoking or drinking. Permission having been granted, he puffed away on a "two fer" in the full dignity of his profession. At length the lady of the house asked him if he had a wife. He answered, "No. But I have three concubines." The feast ended by the priest saying, "The worms in my stomach will be surprised by this feast."

But that in which he towered above all was his zeal for humanity. He loved men. When he said, during his sick hours, concerning Japan, "This is my body, broken for you," it was indeed a true saying. He often spoke of "our country" in speaking to a Japanese audience. "Dojo dokan," "same heart, same feeling," was the expression he used when describing his feelings toward Japan. He loved Japan, and whatever he said or did was with the intention of making Japan better. "He loved Japan more than we," was the remark made by a member of Parliament not yet a Christian. He suffered for Japan. I have been with him when we would carry our baggage on our backs for miles, and on the trip which proved to be his last we walked fifteen miles in three hours in order to meet an engagement. "That place is too dirty for you to go to," was the advice given him by one of our most daring and faithful evangelists. "Are there people there who have not heard of Christ?" "Yes." "Then we must go." On foot, through rain and shine, he bore the banner of the cross. Nor tide nor wicked men could keep him from the suffering and the lost. His one theme was the resurrection. "We honor graves," I heard him say in addressing an audience of ancestor worshipers, "and the grave we honor most is an empty one, the one in which the Son of God spent three days and nights." He was brave and fearless. We were in a meeting near a famous Shinto temple to which the fishermen offer one fish for every boat which returns safely to shore. It was in the midst of a crowd of idol worshipers who had little sympathy with the foreigner. Of the boats which came and out from that little village there was no less than a thousand. Mr. Garst did not hesitate to condemn the practice of offering fish to the lazy priests who could offer nothing in return save to deepen the darkness in which the people were struggling. He looked and was every whit a soldier as he stood there and faced that crowd and plead with them in Christ's name to be reconciled to God. His face lit up with a heavenly smile as he spoke of the resurrection and of the joyous life eternal beyond the grave for those who would obey Christ.

First Principles.

Jude, the servant of Jesus Christ and brother of James, exhorts the sanctified, to whom he writes his epistle to "earnestly contend for the faith which was once delivered to the saints."

From many sermons I heard in my boyhood I gathered the error that these "principles" were the faith, repentance, confession, baptism and name held by the church of the first century, but later, when I read the Bible more closely and became acquainted with the literature of the Christian Church, I learned there were other very necessary and vital principles.

Wm. Carey made known to the world no new truth when he declared that India must have the gospel, but instead discovered an old truth which is revolutionizing the world in proportion as it is practiced. It is the gospel of love begun by the Father (Jno. 3:16 and Rom. 5:8), laid upon us as a pleasing duty by the Son that, like the beautiful myth of the birds, we may by this, at first a seeming burden, not only rise above the miasmata of sin which infect the lower sordid strata of the atmosphere of this earth-life, and be able to maintain our flight in the higher, purer atmosphere, but also to bear with us other infected ones to the Physician who healed our souls; and the joy cometh in the morning! both the morning of the knowledge of redemption and the greater, more blessed morning of reward when the Savior shall say, "It is enough; come up higher."

The gospel of service, which is the gospel of love, was a first principle. The Son of Man came as a servant and made known to the world the most beneficient truth—that he is greatest who serves (Luke 22:16).

We are told in the sixth chapter of the Acts of the Apostles that when the number of disciples were multiplied, a murmur arose because of the neglect of the less favored among them; so to-day, when the Disciples of Christ are multiplied, a murmur arises because of the neglect of the less favored classes.

Our widows are neglected in the daily administration, our orphans are crying to us for protection and our sick and aged are asking for homes and shelter. Shall we turn a deaf ear to their entreaties, or shall we, like the church we are striving to restore, choose from our number men full of the Holy Spirit and set them over this work? We will do the latter.

The Disciples of Christ, as all other bodies, have among them unworthy members, who are sordid or selfish, but it cannot be said of those whose influence mold the thought of the people; with such men to see a duty is to perform it.

Primitive Christianity cannot be restored with the gospel of service left out, nor is it the thought of this restorative movement to undertake so improbable a task. Already we have in Louisville, Ky., a Widows' and Orphans' Home, which assists, not only the people of that state, but those, too, of adjoining states. In 1886 the Benevolent Association of the Christian Church was organized in St. Louis, not for St. Louis or Missouri alone, but for the Christian Church of the United States of America. In 1889 the association organized the Christian Orphans' Home in St. Louis for all the nation except Kentucky and such adjacent territory as wish to contribute to the Home at Louisville.

These two institutions, without endowment, with property worth $50,000, mark either our ability or our zeal for the primitive gospel of caring for the widows and orphans.

But the work grows. At our general convention this fall, on the day of broken conferences, there will be a session to consider the interests of our benevolences, presided over by that prince of men, Bro. B. B. Tyler. Several of our leading bretheren and some of the chief women are being secured as speakers. At that time it is hoped a more general understanding of the work may be brought about, and that if the present arrangements are not the best others may be inaugurated which will serve the cause more efficiently.

However, in the meantime the cry comes, "Help those women." In the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST of June 29 appears an article from Sisters Hansbrough and Mason, the former the corresponding secretary of the B. A. C. C., the later the president of the Christian Orphans' Home at St. Louis, asking for help in the present emergency. If you have not read the article, turn to it and read it carefully. You will learn that owing to the severe sickness in the Home last spring it was decided to make some very needed repairs in the old building. It is to be replumbed, repainted, kalsomined, etc. Also, the street and alley are to be paved this summer; the whole cost being about $2,000.

The following is their plan to raise the money by voluntary offerings:

They ask 5 persons in Missouri to give each $50; 10 to give $25; 20 to give $10.

In Illinois they ask 4 persons to give $50 each; 8 to give $25; 16 to give $10.

They ask 4 persons in Iowa to give each $25; 8 to give $10; 20 to give $5.

They ask 8 persons in Kansas each to give $10; 20 to give $5.

From each of the other states they ask that 4 persons give each $25; 8 to give $10; 20 to give $5.

The following is the pledge; please fill out, sign and send to Mrs. J. K. Hansbrough, 5018 Cabanne Ave., St. Louis:

I..... of.....promise to give to the Benevolent Association of the Christian Church the sum of....., to be used to pay for the repairs now being made on the National Christian Orphans' Home, located at St. Louis, Mo., the same to be paid on or before.... ... .

Chicago Letter.

On my return from Charlottesville, Virginia, I spent one day in Cincinnati, enjoying the fellowship of our mission secretaries and other friends who are deeply interested in the Jubilee Convention. Bro. Harvuot, who is faithfully and manfully working to secure ten thousand delegates and a splendid corps of coworkers, were pleased with the reports I gave them of the deep interest in the Jubilee Convention I found on the Atlantic Seaboard. In the office of the secretaries of the American Christian Missionary Society I found B. L. Smith and C. C. Smith rejoicing over the evidences of increasing appreciation of the work of our home board. I have since learned that the receipts for the month of June this year doubled the receipts of last year. A gain of five thousand dollars or one hundred per cent. is a matter of congratulation. Our secretaries deserve credit for urging our brethren to such a large advance on the financial side of our missionary work. In the office of the Foreign Christian Missionary Society I found all activity. The receipts for the year have already amounted to over one hundred and thirteen thousand dollars and give bright promise of reaching one hundred and fifty thousand dollars for the missionary year. During the month of June the Foreign Society received twenty-eight thousand dollars from the Sunday-schools alone. Almost as much as the home board received from our entire brotherhood for six months. May this striking fact stir up our preachers and business men all over the land to greater activity for Home Missions. I trust this article may reach the eyes of some one whose heart is so full of the love of Christ that he or she will be prompted to send a handsome contribution—ten, twenty or one hundred dollars to each—of our societies in Cincinnati.

One day in Cincinnati is sufficient to convince any one who understands the spirit of our brotherhood that the Jubilee Convention in October, 13-20, will be one of the most striking events in the religious history of America. Bulletin No. 1 says: "Fifty years ago the American Christian Missionary Society was organized for the Home and Foreign Missions. Alexander Campbell was the first president. What wondrous things have been wrought in fifty years. We are now over a million strong in every department of missionary work organized." The American Christian Missionary Society and the various boards of the mother organization, the Foreign Christian Missionary Society and the Christian Woman's Board of Missions are indeed well organized; but over half of our great brotherhood remains to be so infused with the Spirit of Christ as to enable them to take a practical interest in missions. Our great Jubilee Convention in the providence of God will be a great educator in missionary efforts. A rate of one fare for the round trip has been secured in the territory of the Central Passenger Association. Reader, speak to your friends about the convention. Tell them of the Silver Jubilee of the Christian Woman's Board of Missions. Tell them of the business men's meeting, which will be in charge of S. M. Cooper at the Grand Hotel, Saturday, October 14th. Tell them of the great union communion service at the Music Hall, the 15th of October, where over ten thousand Christians will "sit together in heavenly places in Christ Jesus," worshiping our divine Lord and Master and showing forth his atoning death upon the Lord's day, which commemorates his resurrection.

"It will be sweet to be there, Christ's glory to share."

From Cincinnati I proceeded to Indianapolis by way of the Big Four, which ought to be the official route from Indianapolis, as the Grand Hotel and the Central Music Hall are near the Big Four Station in Cincinnati. I attended the board meeting of the Christian Woman's Board of Missions, where I found our noble women planning great things for the cause of Christ. All departments of the C. W. B. M. work are being systematically advanced as never before in the history of the board. The prsident, Mrs. O. A. Burgess, is enjoying a visit in company with her sister, Miss Mary Legerwood, with Mrs. Hugh McDiarmid, Hiram, Ohio. Mrs. Helen E. Moses, editor of the Missionary Tidings, and Miss Lois A. White, the faithful secretary of the C. W. B. M., report larger gifts to the work of the board than ever before in its history. Miss Mattie Pounds, who has been taking a needed rest, will soon return to continue her vigorous campaign for the advancement of the children's work. I was pleased to learn that the English Bible Chair Fund, under the vigorous leadership of Sister Helen E. Moses, has nearly doubled since the last National Convention. Reader, will you not help this noble woman in her earnest, prayerful efforts to secure twenty-five thousand dollars for this fund? No work is more genuinely missionary than that of having the Bible taught to educated young men and young women in our state universities. Send a life membership for yourself or for some faithful worker in the auxiliary to Sister Moses. "Ninety thousand dollars and ninety thousand members in '99" is the rally cry for the Silver Jubilee Year of the Christian Woman's Board of Missions.

The twenty-ninth convocation of the University of Chicago was held in the Graduate Quadrangle July 1st. The Founders' Day address was delivered by President James B. Angell of the University of Michigan. His subject, "The Old College and the New University," was intensely interesting to all who are studying the problem of education. Never were the methods and aims of collegiate and university training so thoroughly discussed as at present. It was pleasing to hear the president of our greatest Northern state university refer to the University of Virginia as having taken the most advanced ground of any university in America in the first half of our century. I quote only a few of his sentences. Speaking of the University of Virginia he said: "The only important exception to the common form of organization and work in the United States was the University of Virginia, which was opened in 1825. It bears the impress of a mind familiar with Continental universities. It anticipated, to a considerable degree, the methods of the universities of to-day. From some cause the experiment in Virginia, though it proved reasonably satisfactory to the citizens of that state, was for a long time nowhere imitated." On the fourth of July F. W. Gunsaulus delivered a great address on "The Elements of American Citizenship." On the afternoon of the same day Prof. A. H. Strong, of Rochester, N. Y., doubtless the leading theologian among our Baptist brethren, delivered a "strong" address on "The Development of Theology During the Last Fifty Years." After discussing the immanence of God and the person of Christ, he took what seems to me to be a reactionary position, that the righteousness of God, and not the love of God, was fundamental in the divine character.

The large number of important lecture courses offered by great specialists during the summer quarter of the University of Chicago has brought a number of our best preachers as well as many excellent students to Chicago. The following is an imperfect list from memory: Jabez Hall, the cultured Christian gentleman and dean of Butler Bible College; H. A. Northcutt, the well-known evangelist, so pure in his life and so earnest in his preaching; W. H. Hanna, who has just returned from England; W. C. Payne, a graduate of Bethany and Yale University, recent pastor of the church in New York City; C. B. Coleman, one of our most promising young men who took his undergraduate work in Yale and is ready to take his postgraduate degree at the University of Chicago; F. N. Calvin, of Milwaukee; O. P. Shrout and Mrs. O. P. Shrout; H. L. Atkinson, A. B., and A. M., Hiram; J. H. Goldner, Hiram; T. A. West, Drake; B. L. Kershner, Bethany; E. W. Allen, Hiram; P. J. Rice, Hiram; J. E. Lynn, graduate of Hiram and pastor of the Springfield Illinois church; W. D. VanVoorhis, Butler; A. L. Ward, Butler; C. H. Winders, Canton and pastor of the Christian Church at Columbia, Mo.; C. R. Neel, Drake; George Chandler, E. A. Cantrell, L. E. Bates, John McKee, Butler and Yale; C. G. Brelos, Bethany; H. W. Hoover, Bethany and University of Chicago; Perry T. Marten. There are others at this writing I cannot recall. President Harper says the University has the largest attendance of any previous summer quarter. There are now fifteen hundred regularly registered students in the University. One of the chief attractions for the summer are the lectures by George Adam Smith, who is acknowledged to be the best biblical scholar of his age in Old Testament literature. He is deeply spiritual and conservative. C. A. YOUNG.

In Memory of Frank D. Pettit.

The life and work of F. D. Pettit, who recently died at Alcott, Col., are worthy of a more extended notice than has yet appeared in any of our papers. Though scarcely more than entered upon his work, as far as years are concerned, his work was of that character which will live. His work was done mostly in Kansas, Iowa and Missouri. In Kansas he was state Sunday-school evangelist for sometime. During four years of school life in Drake University he preached for several Iowa churches with more than usual success, holding several successful meetings, one resulting in over fifty additions. After completing the regular course at Drake and taking a year of graduate work, he located with the Christian Church at Chillicothe, Mo. During his three years' pastorate there he spent his summer vacations pursuing courses in the Universiiy of Chicago, with a view to better preparing himself for his life work. His work at Chillicothe was of the first rank, and after three years of service the church was loath to release him, and did so only because ill health would not permit him to continue. Rest and health were first sought in New Mexico and afterwards in Colorado, but without avail, and after a year of suffering he was relieved by death. It is needless to attempt to enumerate those who mourn his loss, for they are as numerous as his acquaintances.

Besides the direct work of the ministry, Mr. Pettit took a studious interest in subjects of a general character. He was a careful student of social and political questions. He was an ardent Prohibitionist and an active worker in every temperance and social movement. He won first honors in the Iowa state Prohibition contest in 1893, and won a high place as Iowa's representative in the Interstate. He was of a scientific turn of mind, and devoted considerable time to the study of geology and astronomy.

In the ministry of Bro. Pettit there was the combination of two elements which, to my mind, meet the needs of the time among the Disciples of Christ, viz., a blending of the evangelistic and the educational. Exhortation, simply, may "convert," but genuine Bible teaching is needed in order to establish in the truth. Bro. Pettit was a man who had large ingatherings, both at regular and special services, and yet preached sermons of an educational and intellectual value.

Besides being a worthy and successful minister, and an earnest and painstaking student, F. D. Pettit was, above all, a man and a Christian gentleman. To say that he was a model husband and father, a tried and true friend and an earnest and true follower of the Christ, is to simply repeat an often-used and much-abused phrase; he was all of these, and to say it seems but a feeble expression of the truth. His pure life and kindly deeds will live. LESLIE W. MORGAN.

Notes and News.

The mortgaged debt on the church at Joplin, Mo., was lifted July 2nd amidst great rejoicing.

W. F. TURNER.

The church at Fredericksburg, Chas. Shelburne, pastor, hope to begin the reconstruction of their house of worship in the near future.

The Kentucky state convention will be held in Shelbyville, Aug. 7-10. Delegates should send in their names to the writer, Shelbyville, Ky. HUGH MCLELLAN.

The third Kansas district will hold its annual convention at Coffeyville, Aug. 15-17. Let every congregation in the district be represented and let us have the best convention in our history. R. E. ROSENSTEIN, Sec.

The Turner (Ore.) state convention, just closed, was the largest in our history. The proceedings were harmonious and enthusiastic. The work of J. B. Lister as state evangelist was highly praised and Bro. Lister has been continued in the same place. The Bateman debt was paid during the yeaa. "1,900 converts for 1900," was the cry raised. The proceedings of the convention will be published in pamphlet form.

Church Debts Paid.

The West Jefferson Street Church of Christ, Ft. Wayne, Ind., has recently paid off about $1,500 of its debt and expects to be able to reduce it some more soon. There have been 14 additions to the church within the past two months. The minister, P. J. Rice, has been granted a two months' leave of absence, which he will spend in Chicago at the university.

A Word to the Sunday-schools.

Many Sunday-schools have not sent their Children's Day offering for heathen missions. There has been a gain the receipts of $5,000 from the Children's Day offering, but there is no gain in the number of contributing Sunday-schools. We ask the preachers, superintendents and others to take an offering in the Sunday-schools at once.

A large number of new workers will be sent out in September and October, if the receipts will justify such a step. Let us enroll hundreds of new schools at once. The needs are very great. It will be a blessing for your school to have fellowship in this great cause.

Illinois C. W. B. M.—Attention!

Our annual convention of the Christian Woman's Board of Missions will be held at Eureka in a short time. The reception at Lyda's Wood will be on Monday evening, July 24. Sisters, try to come in time for the reception, for the time will be short this year and you cannot afford to miss one meeting. A feast of good things may be expected. Mrs. Helen Moses will give the evening address Jeu Hawk, of Portland, Ore., will be with us Tuesday afternoon, also A. N. Shirley, one of our Jamaica boys, will be there to address us. Sisters, be there in time for the reports. None interested in the work should miss this important part of the program. We hope to have one of the best conventions ever held.

Come and hear what Illinois has done the past year and you will return to your homes filled with the spirit of missions, also better prepared to carry on this much-loved work in your own auxiliaries the coming year.

Encampment Entertainment.

At the 15th Illinois Encampment at Eureka, July 24-30, lodging will be furnished free. Meals can be had at Lida's Wood, Evans Hall, Cripps House and Mrs. McVay's at 25 and 20 cents each. Write A. B. Clark, Eureka, Ill., for lodging.

The annual convention of the Church of Christ in Montana will be held in Butte the last days of August. I would be pleased to hear from any of the brethren either in or out of the state who propose attending the same, and also to extend a cordial invitation to every one who can to come and test the hospitality of "the greatest mining camp on earth." So far as I can learn, the work is prospering in all parts of the state. I believe the near future will see many new congregations established. The principal need here is consecrated preachers who will endure all things for the Master. Their work would be richly blessed in time. Our plea is not very well known in this country. It is time that it should be.

EDWARD OLIVER TILBURN,
Pastor Church of Christ of Butte.

Do Likewise.

Dr. A. W. Gross, of Lawson, Mo., noticed that this was the Jubilee Year of the American Christian Missionary Society, it having been organized in 1849.

It happened that the Doctor was born in the same good year, and he thought it wise to make a jubilee offering of $50, one dollar for each year. He told his pastor, E. J. Gantz, of his purpose, and now he writes: "I enclose my offering of $50. I thought of paying $25 this year and $25 next, but I am enabled to pay the whole amount this year, which is more jubilee like."

I commend this example. We have thousands of brethren and sisters born in 1849, the year of the birth of the American Christian Missionary Society—let them celebrate the jubilee of their lives by helping the jubilee of our Home Mission work.

Mississippi.

I closed a tent meeting last night at Water Valley, Miss., with 50 additions, 23 Baptists and seven Methodists being among the number. Water Valley is on the I. C. Railroad, and is a city of 6,000 or 7,000 people. Our cause was scarcely known here, we having but three members, and but two of them living in the city. Nearly all the additions are heads of families, old settlers, and own their homes. Neither one of our original three members owned their homes or were permanent settlers.

Many of these additions came out of fine brick churches, worth many thousands, and for truth's sake took their stand together without house or home. A congregation was officered out of the working material from the Baptist Church and with our one original male member. The church and Sunday-school will meet next Lord's day in the city hall, and there have its first service. A subscription list is well on the way with $500 or $600 already subscribed toward building a church. J. S. Wilks and M. F. Jumper are the elders, with five deacons to assist them. The meeting went on seven weeks and one day. The writer did the preaching and public praying and led the music. There is no stronger fortified city in the world than Water Valley, and this meeting shows that any city can be broken into if properly attacked.

"The exaltation of Christ" was the burden throughout the Water Valley meeting. The sinfulness of sin and sectism was the target on which every gun was trained for several weeks.

California Convention.

For a number of years past the religious body known as the Disciples of Christ or Christians has held its annual conventions at Long Beach.

The date of the gathering this year will be August 10th to 20th, inclusive, and this year's convention promises to outstrip all others in point of attendance and high order of the program to be presented to the public. Among the different interests that will be given thorough consideration are those of the ministerial association, two days; woman's missionary work, two days; Southern California missions, two days; Y. P. S. C. E., one day, and Bible-school, one day.

The institute work will be in charge of men of large ability and eminent fitness.

They are Rev. W. E. Crabtree, graduate of Kentucky University, now of San Diego; Prof. F. M. Dowling, formerly of Bethany College; Rev. A. C. Smither, senior pastor of Los Angeles, and Rev. J. W. Ingram, of Pasadena.

The various schools will be missions, Christian unity, comprehensive Bible study and prayer.

But perhaps no part of this announcement will be received with more genuine delight, especially by those who attended the convention last year, than that queen of song and most charming Christian lady who so won all hearts, Mrs. Princess Long, will again have charge of the convention music and appear in solos at each session.

A beautiful thirty-page souvenir program is being published, giving all necessary information, which can be secured by addressing with stamp, the secretary, H. ELLIOTT WARD.

Pasadena, Cal.

Jubilee Convention Homes.

It is the purpose of the assignment committee of the Jubilee Convention that every delegate shall be pleasantly and comfortably entertained during the convention. Brother John S. Lawrence, as chairman of the hotel committee, is busy arranging for delegations and individuals who expect to make their headquarters at the various hotels. Next week will be inaugurated a very thorough and systematic canvass of all the Christian homes of Cincinnati, Covington and Newport. Lodging and breakfast only will be guaranteed in these homes. The committee expect to provide the other two meals in the Annex to Music Hall, in which the great convention will be held. Lodging and breakfast can be secured in private homes for 75 cents. If delegates desire to take all of their meals in the homes in which entertainment is furnished, arrangements must be made with the hostess and not through the committee. It will be impossible for the committee to be responsible for any assignments before the convention, but we shall be glad to know the kind of accommodations desired and shall take pleasure in furnishing the name and address of parties who can furnish the desired entertainment, and delegates can make their own arrangements by correspondence.

We would advise all delegates to send their names to the assignment committee, Box 304, Cincinnati, O., stating the character of accommodations desired, and we will at once send the names and addresses of parties who can furnish such entertainment. The homes most convenient will be given to those whose names are first received.

Send us your names; we are ready for you.

Some Things.

Christianity has scored another victory in the call for the conference at the Hague.

Our hearts leap for joy with the reports concerning the offerings for missions in our Jubilee Year. We are a missionary people.

The editorial in CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST concerning the unifying of our missionary societies is sound sense.

Mr. McKinley is losing his opportunity for a second term. You can fool all of the Christian people (or nearly all) sometimes, but they come to their senses after a time. The free people of America will not be ruled by the hand of the rum power when they see the hand so plainly.

The First Church at Marion, Ind., celebrated its 22nd anniversary, July 2, with an all-day service. It was a great day for the church. Neither church nor preacher has asked for or offered to give the other a vacation.

The world is growing better. See this: Roses instead of wine were used in the christening of the five-masted schooner, John B. Prescott, which was recently launched at Bear's shipyard, Camden, Maine.

See this also: "Chief of Police Ripley, of Chicago, has issued orders instructing commanding officers to enforce the rule against policemen smoking while in uniform, whether on or off duty." Public sentiment is also enforcing the order that men shall not smoke while wearing the Christian uniform.

That Sunday paper enterprise in London was a straw showing which way the wind blows. The Britishers are more righteous than we.

Should a preacher preach against the publishing of the Sunday newspaper and the running of Sunday excursions? If he rebukes the sinners who run such enterprises, what should we do to the members of the church who patronize them? E. L. FRAZIER.

State Mission Notes.

The Missionary Magazine for July has just gone out. It contains the minutes of the recent Bible-school Convention at Plattsburg. This will be interesting reading for those who were there, as the outlines of the proceedings will suggest what was done. The reports of the corresponding secretary and tresasurer are given in full. It was utterly impossible for the secretary to give his attention to the matter and the other secretary had fled to parts unknown, so the work was done as best it could be under these conditions. Our candid judgment is that these minutes ought to be very much fuller; they give but a very poor idea as to what was done at the convention. We ought to be close to the time when we should have a stenographic report of the proceedings and have them printed in full.

In the last part of the Magazine will be found a list of churches which have either already contributed or have promised to contribute to state mission work before Oct. 1, 1899. The list is being enlarged each day and present indications are that there will be a very large increase over last year in the number of contributing churches. This is as it should be, only more so. There ought to be not less than 500 churches in Missouri that would give to the state missions this year. In fact, we ought not to be satisfied until there should only be two classes of churches in the state—the helpers and the helped. There ought not to be a single on the fence church. I have never seen the church yet which if properly approached would not give something. It might be small, but they would give something for state mission work.

H. S. Saxby, of Kearney, is one of the good friends of Missouri. Recently, on occasion of the visit of the secretary, cost and pledges were taken for state work. He now sends in the full amount of the pledges and $2 25 more which he raised from those who were not there that night. We not only thank Bro. Saxby for this, but it gives us the occasion to say that our grateful thanks are ready for any other preacher who will "go and do likewise." We are now in the last quarter and all apportionments; all personal pledges, annual memberships and life memberships are now due. It will relieve your board of a great strain if you will send in at once the amounts due, and also enable them to take up some very much needed new work. The fields are white to the harvest and we must gather in the grain. Will you help? Make it a personal matter. Will you not aid in the work?

Since writing the above three more appeals for help from worthy and needy places have come in. In fact, they are of such a character that if they are not helped at once they will die. Our treasury is empty; we cannot help them till you send in your funds. If they die, at whose door will their death be laid?

Will we say with one of old, "Am I my brother's keeper?" We dare not, the voice of our brother's blood shall cry out against us from the ground. What reply shall we make? I write strongly, but then I feel strongly. The burden of all these things rest on my heart and I must cry out sometimes. Let every church at once do its best. Yours in His name,

T. A. ABBOTT.

Minnesota.

The state convention will convene at Rochester, Wednesday, Aug. 16th, at 2 P. M. The afternoon will be devoted to greetings, and organization. The convention will hold over Lord's day, closing on Monday after an evening andparting service. Men of ability from other states will be present and will make the convention enjoyable by their speeches and helpful influence. Some new faces will appear, and among those promised is W. F. Cowden, representing the A. C. M. S. He will be welcome to our state. Ample preparation for entertainment is being made by the church at Rochester on terms that will be announced later.

We are compelled to call attention of the churches and individuals that are in arrears on pledges to the "State Missionary Society," that "now is the accepted time" to pay up. These offerings must be sent at once, so we can close our books for this fiscal year with debts paid. We are looking for the fulfillment of your promises at once. Don't disappoint us.

Statistical blanks are now being mailed to the churches and auxiliaries, and we trust there will be no delay on the part of officials in making these statistical reports, and sending in returns on the same. If you desire your congregation to be represented in the convention report, these blanks sent you must be returned without much delay. This part of the "King's business demands haste." Any items of interest connected with your church work, not called for in the blanks, should be supplied in your own way. We want facts and information.

The Worthington meeting, conducted by Atwood and Sweetman, resulted in a temporary organization, soon we trust, to be made permanent. The weather and opposing forces made against rapid growth. The evangelists worked hard, and when everything is considered, the effort may be pronounced a grand victory victory for the cause of Christ in Worthington.

The writer attended the meeting over the last Lord's day and assisted in several ways to contribute to the growth and perpetuity of the church at the above-named place. In all there are about thirty members. This will surely receive commendation from the brethren in the state. It is expected that Atwood and Sweetman will commence in another field soon. They are temporarily at Dundee for a few days, giving encouragement in that new field.

Carey E. Morgan is on his way to represent the foreign board in Ontario, and A. D. Hanson will perform a like service at Miller, in S. Dakota, the 21st inst.

The Minnesota Christian Educational Board met in Minneapolis the 13th and elected officers and directors. The society is out of debt and about one thousand ($1,000) of money on hand. More could be written. Give attention to the above this time and more will follow. Yours faithfully,

E. F. GADD, Cor. Sec.

PERSONAL MENTION.

F. A. Longdon is in a meeting at Fillman, Fla.

The editor of this paper spent a few days of last week in Chicago.

Claude E. Hill, formerly of Wellsville, Mo., began work in Pleasant Hill, Mo., his new field, July 9th.

J. B. White, of Wakefield, Neb., preached the memorial sermon for the soldiers and citizens of that place.

G. E. Shanklin, of Stanberry, Mo., would engage for a meeting soon. Any church desiring one, address as above.

A. R. Spicer announces that he can furnish tents for all comers to the Eureka Encampment at reasonable rates. Write to him at Moweaqua, Ill.

R. E. Lloyd, of Kansas City, Mo., wishes correspondence from churches wanting a protracted meeting or pastoral work. Could assist some weak church in this way.

J. C. Reynolds, writing from Boydsville, Mo., states that his general health has greatly improved. He is still doing some work for the Lord and for his friends.

J. S. Hughes, now at Macatawa Park, Mich., author of "The Mystery of the Golden Cloth," has ready for the press another book. Its title is "The Place of John in the Christian Economy."

Bruce Brown, pastor West Side Christian Church, Chicago, Ill., has an interesting sermon in the Evangel for June on the "Preeminence of Christ." The Evangel is published in Buffalo, N. Y.

C. E. Millard, a singing evangelist now in Oklahoma, would like to engage work for August. He is very highly spoken of as a soloist by ex-Governor F. M. Drake and others. His present address is Kildare, Okla. Ter.

D. R. Dungan, pastor Mt. Cabanne Christian Church, this city, will occupy the Christian Orphans' Home hour at the Illinois Encampment at Eureka, July 28th, at 4 P. M. Dr. Dungan is just the man at this time for this important phase of the Master's work.

D. Krebiel, of Williamsville, N. Y., writes that Dr. J. E. Powell has served the Church of Christ at that place very acceptably the past year, and the congregation has extended him a unanimous call for an indefinite time. He and his faithful wife have been untiring in their efforts to promote the interests of the cause in that place and to develop deeper spirituality in the church.

Mrs. Clara H. Hazelrigg, having concluded her ministry with the church at Plainville, Kan., has returned to her old home in Topeka, 1515 West 6th St. There were about 50 additions to the Plainville church during her year's work there. Sister Hazelrigg will devote her time to evangelistic work, and is now in a meeting at Waterville, Kan.

Dr. W. T. Moore, dean of the Christian Bible College, Columbia, Mo., who came to this city on last Saturday in the interest of the Bible College, preached at the First Christian Church at Sunday morning service and at Mt. Cabanne Christian Church in the evening. Dr. Moore is to visit a number of the leading cities and churches in the state to awaken a deeper interest in this college.

The new professor of natural science in Bethany College, John Munro, is now the preacher for the church at Portage la Prairie, Manitoba. Mr. Munro is an honor graduate of Toronto University, and a specialist in natural science. He was for three years fellow in chemistry in that noted institution. Bethany College is to be congratulated on securing his services.

"Rev." Harlan P. Peck was cordially received into the fellowship of the Christian Church by the ministers and delegates assembled at the annual camp meeting at Milton, Ore., June 11, 1899. It is said that he is a man of fine education and unblemished Christian character, a graduate from two of the best theological schools of the Presbyterian Church. He has acceptably filled the Presbyterian pulpit in this city, in Lincoln, Neb., and in Santa Barbara, Cal. The brethren who received him therefore cheerfully commend him to the Christian brotherhood as a worthy minister of the Christian Church.

The following note from John G. Slayter, pastor of the church at Steubenville, O., is noteworthy: "Prof. Chas. Louis Loos, of Lexington, Ky., Bro. W. S. Priest, of Atchison, Kan., and Dr. I. A. Thayer, of Newcastle, Pa., have recently visited our city and preached for us. Bro. Loos has known this congregation longer than any living man. Bro. Priest made the confession here and from this church entered the ministry. The church here is prosperous. Our audiences are large. Additions to the church frequent. Our Bible-school is by far the largest in the city."

T. E. Cramblet, pastor East End Christian Church, Pa., is organizing a company to make a tour of Egypt, the Holy Land and other points about the Mediterranean Sea and in the Orient. The large, fast, new steamer, New England, has been secured for the cruise, which will be under the personal supervision of Frank C. Clark, of New York, and his brother, Herbert E. Clark, Vice-Consul of the United States at Jerusalem. Every arrangement has been made for comfort, convenience, economy and an all-round profitable tour of 60 days beginning in February, 1900. Brother Cramblet will be pleased to give further information to any one desiring such a tour.

Mr. L. Browning, who was the former manager of the advertising department of the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST, but who gave up the position at the outbreak of the war with Spain for a position in the army and was soon after sent to Porto Rico, is back on a leave of absence for thirty days. Mr. Browning came back to see his sick mother, who died two days after he reached her bedside. He thinks the country and climate in Porto Rico most delightful, but of course deplores its social and industrial state. The people generally have not yet been touched with the spirit of progress, but the change to better things will come.

At the Annual Bible Institute of Central Christian College, Albany, Mo., Aug. 1-3, J. B. Briney, of Moberly, Mo., will deliver a series of five lectures on these themes: (1) Science and the Bible; (2) The Bible and Evolution; (3) Christianity Its Own Vindication; (4) The Signs of the Times; (5) The Office and Work of the Holy Spirit. At the same institute J. W. Ellis, of Plattsburg, Mo., will deliver three lectures on these themes: (1) Song of Songs and Shulamith; (2) The Meshalim, or Proverbs of Solomon; (3) Jesus in Modern Thought. In addition the following named preachers will deliver addresses on themes of their own choosing, of which later announcement is promised: Daniel Stewart, of Nortonville, Kan.; A. R. Hunt, of Tarkio, Mo., T. H. Capp, of Plattsburg, Mo.; Horace Siberal, of Pickering, Mo.; S. J. White, of Cameron, Mo.; E. N. Phillips, of Ottawa, Kan.; C. F. Stevens, of Trenton, Mo.; F. J. Stinson, of Bethany, Mo.

NEBRASKA.

Waterloo, July 10.—Three baptisms in a three days' meeting at Black Ridge Schoolhouse near Ironton, by the writer; one addition by letter here.—A. O. SWARTWOOD.

Wakefield, July 12.—Our offering for Children's Day, $18.25, and a fine and well-rendered program. Lord's day morning, the 9th, we had one addition by confession. The Ladies' Aid served dinner the 4th and cleared $115. We are doing well spiritually and financially.—J. B. WHITE.

IOWA.

Woodbine July 10.—Nine baptisms and one by letter in a two weeks' meeting at this place. Alice M. Smith, singer, J. E. Pickett, evangelist.—C. L. PICKETT, pastor.

Avery, July 10.—I baptized three persons at Bladensburg, July 8, at my regular appointment, all heads of families. We raised more than our apportionment for Children's Day, all of which is an evidence of some growth.—B. W. PETTIT.

Vinton, July July 11.—Good interest and large audiences continue; 50 to date. We have enjoyed visits from a number of our Iowa preachers. Bro. J. S. Garns is leader of song, and he is very fine. I go next to Iowa Falls.—D. D. BOYLE.

The Beauty of the Lord.

Go, study Nature's picture-book,
In flowery field and mossy nook,
And find the wealth of beauty's dower
Is of the Lord in grass and flower.

Go, watch the waters brightly gleam
In meadow brook or mountain stream;
The watery sheen in beauty shown
Has source beneath the Great White Throne.

Go, search the dome of heaven's hight
Where beauty's dress is tinted light;
Both clouds and stars with one accord
Proclaim their beauty of the Lord.

Go, stand afar on holy ground
Where righteousness end truth are found;
Let beauty fill the soul with awe,
His beauty who gave Sinia's law.

Or, rather, sit at His dear feet
Whose love and mercy justice meet;
Thine eyes shall see all beauty then
As Son of God and King of men.

Marriage Not a Failure.

Dear Householders: Please lend me your ears. You all know, of course, that some individuals of a restless disposition have been inquiring into the existing conditions of matrimonial stocks and bonds. They have put forward the nude query, utterly devoid of any rhetorical garniture: "Is marriage a failure?"

Now, I have no desire to become personal, but I do wish to be allowed a hearing.

Presumably, this question was asked (and answered negatively) by some diagonally-inclined old bachelor, who looked more like an emaciated exclamation mark than anything else; or by some cross-grained old maid whose physical architecture bore a striking resemblance to a conglutination of right angels.

Why, of course, it was a dead failure for either of these, and simply because they refused to accept its golden opportunities.

They didn't wish to get acquainted with Cupid because he was always represented in a state of comfortable nudity.

Why, if such persons had their choice they would demand that infants be born in dress suits and top hats!

Did you ever hear that Cupid had retired from business? No, certainly not. He has never for a moment deserted his post, but the fickle little archer sometimes steeps his arrows in a strong solution of cupidity.

Oh, but he is a wise little rascal, and knows exactly to whom to aim these especially prepared weapons!

But these people who marry for worldly goods seldom get that which is most to be desired, and then they complain about being cheated out of their share of happiness—why, the rank hypocrites they didn't negotiate for happiness!

They wouldn't have taken love and happiness at three cents a bushel, but they bent their knees at the shrine of Plutus and paid a high price for financial considerations. Now they go about and croak and complain until even a respectable cornstalk would cover its ears in disgust.

But such a condition of affairs is not the rule, therefore let us rejoice in the exception.

It requires no disordered imaginative power to conjure up pleasant pictures of numberless homes, where the overwhelming success of the matrimonial estate is demonstrated by every word and look and deed.

Some of these homes may be entered and investigated, revealing only the fairest types of conjugal reciprocity and happiness; there we find a delightful union of souls, not men and women merely tied together by the rites of man, but the very souls knit and interwoven by the laws of God's great tribunal of equality!

Then there are other congenial soul-heavens of a more conservative type, where exclusiveness jealously guards the treasure within; the greedy eyes of the world may not scan these sacred precincts, for the inmates will not throw open the gates of their garden of romance that the vulgar rabble may enter in. No; this is the holy of holies, where the fragrant offering of requited love is laid upon the altar of home, and where the fairest blossoms of mutual argeement blow in life's great garden!

Here we find a man who has consideration for the woman he calls wife; she is not merely his housekeeper, but really the most important part of his life.

Do you suppose that there is any power on earth that could induce him to ill-treat that confiding little woman who looks up to him as if he were half a god? Or do you suppose that he would ever regret having found such a jewel? God forbid!

She has made his home happy, and what grander, nobler thing could she do? Verily, her aspiration for heaven is not more exalted than her desire to make home happy!

She is not merely a demestic automaton, neither does the so-called ape in human nature dominate her higher motives; she is a standard by which a queen may measure her greatness — a living moral from which a child may deduce simplicity!

Her alliance to nature is such that in wedding a man she does not expect to find either an angel or a demon; she was cognizant of the fact that he was simply a human being like herself, and she has brought herself into perfect touch with his finer sensibilities.

Such a union is the most eloquent song that man may sing to God, and thousands of noble men and women are singing that song to-day; compared to it the minor sigh of discontent and domestic infidelity is but the fleeting breath of a summer breeze.

The beautiful highway of life has been paved with mutual love and fortitude, and the pleasant byways are hedged about by flowers of contentment and happiness. Such homes are made by men with the help of God, and they strongly demonstrate the success of marriage.

But to some people home is only a lodging house and restaurant, with a laundry attached. It is the family battleground also, and upon it the two parties mostly concerned come forth to do battle with each other—these encounters are not necessarily of the pugilistic sort, for the human tongue often proves itself the more deadly weapon.

The woman in this instance may have been born sour; she may have accumulated acidity as she grew up, or she may have acquired it from her husband; however that may be, the fact remains that her face generally looks like it had been molded in a vinegar factory, and her tongue is sharp enough to split hatchets.

She keeps her head bandaged to look impressive, but she doesn't succeed, and her clothes always look as if they would rather fit some one else.

Every day she has a long and violent declamation prepared for the edification of her husband, and this she prefers to recite during meals; in fact, that is the only time she can catch him, unless she lays awake at night.

When the husband comes in he makes his august presence known by slinging the cat out of the window, kicking half the ribs out of the dog, and muttering a sort ofHindoo grace over everything in general. He fortifies his manly voice and yells out: "Am I going to get any dinner to-day, or do you think it would be healthier to wait till to-morrow? Bring on your old swill and let me get back to work."

Right then the female party of the said part proceeds to impart some startling information, which is received without applause; by this time even the silence and the shadows have crept off into obscurity.

Do you wonder that marriage is a failure in such instances? Why, it is seven or eight failures, and each one in a healthy condition, too!

They have willfully violated every sacred vow made to God and man; they have trodden upon the fairest blossoms in love's paradise, and they are daily teaching their children to grow up into infidels.

But let us be thankful that such homes and so-called unions are in the minority; and let us be thankful that the moral living of righteous men and women has proven beyond dispute that marriage is not a failure.—Chas. Hanford, Jr., in the Sunny South.

The Clio Circle Gift.

The Orphans' Home in St. Louis is supported by the Christian Church and there are a great many rooms in it that have been furnished in honor of various people. The Clio Circle of this city, ever active in good works, determined to do something in this line and also decided that the gift should be named in honor of Miss Mayme Henry, one of their number, and serve as a wedding surprise for her. Accordingly, Miss Henry, now Mrs. Curtis, yesterday received the following graceful note:

"As a mark of our love and appreciation of your noble work in the church and in the Clio Circle, we have decided to place a bed in the Orphans' Home in St. Louis, deeming that the most fitting memorial in our power to erect to the years you have so willingly devoted to every benevolent enterprise. Remember that

'Nothing is lost; every deed done in a day Somewhere will spring into being anew. Only time passes away.'

"Remember, also, that in years to come these little orphan children will bless the name of one who has been instrumental in ministering to their comfort.

"With sincerest wishes for your future happiness, we are very truly,

"THE CLIO CIRCLE."

The Golden Time.

When is the golden time? you ask—the golden time of love,
The time when earth is green beneath, and skies are blue above;
The time for sturdy health and strength, the time for happy play—
When is the golden hour? you ask—I answer
you, "To-day."

To-day, that from the Maker's hand slips on the great world-sea,
As staunch as ever ship that launched to sail
eternally;
To-day, that wafts to you and me a breath of Eden's prime,
That greets us, glad, and large, and free—it is the golden time.

For yesterday hath veiled her face, and gone as far away
As sands that swept the pyramids in Egypt's ancient day.
No man shall look on Yesterday, or tryst with her again;
Forever gone her toils, her prayers, her conflicts and her pain.

To-morrow is not ours to hold, may never come to bless
Or blight our lives with weal or ill, with gladness or distress.
No man shall clasp To-morrow's hand, nor catch her on the way;
For when we reach To-morrow's land, she'l be by then To-day.

You ask me for the golden time; I bid you
"seize the hour,"
And fill it full of earnest work, while yet you have the power.
To-day the golden time for joy beneath the household eaves;
To-day the royal time for work, for "bringing in the sheaves."

To-day, the golden time for peace, for right-
ing olden feuds;
For sending forth from every heart whatever sin intrudes.
To-day, the time to consecrate your life to God above;
To-day, the time to banish hate, the golden time for love.

The Power of Niagara.

"The power of Niagara," says Prof. R. B. Owens, in Cassier's Magazine, "has been estimated at about 7,000,000 horsepower—greater, probably, than the physical force the whole human race is capable of continuously exerting. At present about 350,000 horsepower is to be developed on the American and Canadian sides, or about five per cent. of the total power available—not enough to perceptibly diminish the flow over the falls. However, should the whole be utilized, leaving the rocky river bed dry and bare, we would but be substituting a wonderful cataract of etheric energy for the splendid flow of gravitational matter so justly famed. Which spectacle would present greater beauty would depend upon the individual. To those who trace in imagination the course of a beam of sunlight, as it buries itself in the ocean, rises in cloud, and falls again in grateful shower over grainfield and vineyard, filling brook and swelling river, and finally tumbling through mighty turbines and silently streaming from the polished sliprings of stately dynamos, bursting again into wholesome sunlight, to brighten the homes of hundreds, substitution would but be the completion of a full cycle of usefulness and beauty."—Literary Digest.

A Bible Society Parrot.

Bible Society Gleanings tells a story of a remarkable parrot which for many years did good service as a collector for the treasury of the Bible Society, and was succeeded by others that proved equally efficient. This bird was brought from Africa as long ago as 1848, and for many years occupied a cage in the hall of the rectory of the Rev, Carr J. Glynn, of Witchampton. She was an accomplished talker, and was accustomed to describe herself and her friends with extreme frankness: "Polly came from Africa with Captain Littlehales." "Tom gets tipsy," alluding to a serving man, who did occasionaly indulge. Now and then she grew a little mixed, and would announce in a confidential way that "Captain Littlehales gets tipsy!" or in a tone of solemn warning, "Captain Littlehales, love not the world!" The rector had taken some pains in teaching his bird to repeat this latter text properly. Polly at first left out the negative, crying "Love the world," until she was drilled into saying the words very slowly and with a particular stress upon the "not," thus: "Love—not—the—world." But Polly's chief accomplishment was to tap loudly on her cage and shout, "Walk in, sir; pop some money in the Bible-box." Naturally, no visitor to the rectory could resist this invitation, and Polly frequently used to greet their donations with a "Hip! hip! hurrah!" The Bible-box, which was made of iron because wood would be speedily pecked to pieces, became a regular source of income to the Witchampton Auxiliary. A note in Mr. Glynn's handwriting records that Polly's collecting began in 1867, and in fourteen years had obtained £46 12s. 8d. Polly lived to a good old age, and collected faithfully to the last. She had two successors, both of them green parrots and less fluent, but each in turn learned to bow profoundly to a stranger, and to scream at the top of its voice, "Put in the box! Put in the box!" These three successived parrots collected for a term of twenty-eight years, and realized altogether between £60 and £70 for the society. Even when the last bird died, its stuffed form remained (until moths ruined it) on its familiar perch, and the cage still bore fruit. After Mr. Carr Glynn's death in 1896, the empty cage was sent as a trophy to the Bible House. Perhaps this history of its occupants may still induce visitors to "pop something into the Bible-box." And Mr. Glynn's example may even inspire those of our friends who possess a teachable young parrot, which they may train in like manner into a feathered auxiliary of a really valuable kind.—Bible Society Record.

Clever Catches.

A young lady was once talking with a very young and very smart man, who was inclined to air his knowledge of the langues a little beyond what she felt that modesty required. She therefore said to him, with an air of deference to his superior attainments:

"You are a Latin scholar. I wish you would tell me how to pronounce the word 'so-met-i-mes.'"

"The youth, with a kindly air of patronage, replied: "I have not met the word in my Latin reading, but I should have no hesitation in saying that it should be pronounced 'so-met-i-mes'" (giving it in our syllables, the accent on the second).

"Thank you for telling me," replied the girl, demurely. "I have always heard it pronounced 'sometimes,' but if you say the other way that must be right."

This is similar to the perhaps familiar catch of "bac-kac-he" which will often surprise the uninitiated by proving it to be only "bachache." It also reminds one of a question printed some years since, as to the way of spelling "need"—to need bread. the average person will reply, "k-n-e-a-d, of course," but the answer will be, "That is the way to knead dough, but not to need bread."

A young lady recently misled a family in a most heartless way. She remarked, "I had a letter to-day, and how do you imagine the little preposition 'to' was spelled?"

"Too," suggested mamma.

"Two," suggested papa.

"Tew," "Teu," "Tu," ventured various voices.

Lily, who was much engaged in her French lessons just then, suggested "tout," and Tom, in derision, improved upon that with "tueue," declaring that must be right to rhyme with queue."

"All wrong," exclaimed the young lady, when the alphabet and ingenuity were well exhausted.

Just then Teddy, who had been soberly absorbed in his bread and honey, and who was in his first term at school, and wrestling with the problem of words with two letters, raised his head, and, with an air of decision and importance, gravely spelled, "T-o, to."

"Yes," cried the young lady, with a peal of laughter."

"Why," exclaimed the others, in dismayed chorus, "that is the right way to spell it!"

"Exactly," she replied; "and that is the way my correspondent spelled it. You do not suppose I correspond with persons who cannot even spell the word 'to' correctly do you?"—The Presbyterian Journal.

Labor rids us of three great evils; irksomeness, vice and poverty.

The Minister's Sunday Morning.

This is my opportunity!
I stand, O God, 'twix these and thee;
Grant me thy light that I may know
How best the seeds of truth to so.

The weary man, the little child,
The vigorous youth, the mother mild,
Lift up their eyes and wait for me;
What shall I say to them for thee?

Theirs is the struggle and the strife,
Mine are the peaceful paths of life,
They are of deeds, I am of thought,
How shall I teach them as I ought?

We are close brothers, all we men
Sin, and are sorry, sin again,
And climb, and slip and yet aspire;
Thou, only thou, canst bear us higher.

Lord, I will talk to them of thee,
Let mine eyes thy salvation see,
And with the tokens of thy love
Uplift their hearts and mine above.

Give me, O gracious Master, power
To read the signs and seize the hour,
Nor let these people empty go
Because I may so little know.

Lord, unto the I lift my eyes,
Inspire me, make me brave and wise,
And give me faith that I may see
How wide and large thy precepts be.

Then thine own message let me take
To these thy people for love's sake;
I use my opportunity
When longing hearts are glad in thee.

O God, inspire me, make me strong,
I will not do thy people wrong
To hide whate'er thou givest me
Nor put myself 'twixt them and thee.

Give me thy message now; not mine
The words they need, but only thine;
O Lord, these people wait for thee,
Thine is this opportunity.

The Paris Exposition.

In an excellent article in the Chautauquan, for July, on the Paris Exposition, by Thos. B. Preston, the following are stated as some of the unique, wonderful and interesting things which will greet the visitor:

The pressure for space is something awful. This is especially the case with regard to the sideshows. There are 828 different schemes suggested, some of which almost seem to have originated in a lunatic asylum; such as that of a village floating in the air on a platform to be supported by balloons; an artificial rainbow, electrically lighted, to cover the entire site of the exposition, and a gigantic seesaw, the fulcrum of which should be as high as the towers of Notre Dame, capable of raising hundreds of people at a time. But some of the projects adopted are really very interesting as well as daring. There is M. Elisee Reclus' monster globe, eighty-nine feet in diameter, on which every detail of the earth's surface will be worked out in relief, encased in a large building fitted with spiral walks, permitting sightseers to examine every part. On the interior the upper part will contain geological maps of the Northern Hemisphere, while the lower will be reserved for a panorama of the Evolution of Man. All the profits of this show are to be devoted by M. Reclus to scientific work and the aid of geographical discovery; for the globe is intended to be permanent and the surface will be remodeled in parts from time to time as new discoveries are made or more accurate details are received.

Then there is the Big Wheel of Paris, three times as large as the Ferris affair, which is already turning on its monster steel axis, near one corner of the exposition, just outside the grounds.

There will be a "Mareorama" by which the spectator may take an ocean voyage from Marseilles to Constantinople, the scenery on land being shown by a moving panorama, the rolling of a ship imitated by eccentric wheels under the spectators' platform, while sea breezes manufactured out of air impregnated with iodine will blow upon their faces. M. Deloncle will have a telescope that will bring the moon within twenty-five miles. There will be an Alpine mountain and a California mine, a Morocco village and a tri-lingual daily newspaper. In fact, should one devote his whole time from April 15 to November 5, the closing day, to visiting the exposition, he would find the moments fully occupied and even then would not see everything.

The Queen's Kitchen at Windsor.

Fifty people are employed in the royal kitchens. When you first open the curious and very ancient doorway you are nearly blinded by the beauty and brilliancy of the copper pots and pans and batterie de cuisine, which entirely encircles the kitchen. At each end are enormous roasting ranges, shallow, but fierce with jacks and spits complete. I have no words to convey to you the vast extent of the great dripping-pan—I say pan, not pans, as only the one great range in the west end is in ordinary use. The meat screen is enormous, dating from the time of Henry VIII., oak, lined with metal, and with the Tudor badge, the portcullis and arms of the reign, as ornamentations.

There is no smell of cooking. The roof is vast, and moreover—all honor to the chef—there is no noise. The work goes by magic. Why one cook darts at a spit at a certain moment and takes off one joint and leaves two on the spit is a mystery so far as I am concerned.

Each dish or set of dishes have their own exact place on the serving-table. The Queen's serving table is a dream of magic. The rim is brass, the whole table hollow steel, the legs hollow. Steam keeps it very hot. An immaculate cloth covers it. The dishes rest here till each server arrives to take the course. There is actually no waste in this kitchen. A curious old custom arranges for that, by what are called the "Queen's Pieces." Certain tickets are given to the very poor, and they have the privilege of presenting themselves every morning at the castle kitchen door for the portions of food which certainly are wasted at many other establishments.—Watchman.

Just One Thing.

Life is like a crazy quilt. There are many patches, but one quilt. We may count scores of things that we do, dozens of emotions that we experience in a day, but we shall make a mistake if we look at them severally instead of their effect on character.

They are like the brick, the stone, the wood, the lime, the sand the glass, the paint, ready for the building. To the passer-by the sand-pile is disfiguring rubbish, but the plateglass is a work of art. But the architect sees them all as already built into the building, and they are all beautiful to him.

Thus differently do things look to us, and to God. To us joy is sweet, and sorrow is bitter. The happy life is beautiful, but the sad life is repellent. Singing and prayer are religion, but suffering and hardship and disappointment are inflictions. Work is secular, but worship is holy. But God sees them all as one—built into a life that either glories or dishonors him.

Nothing that we call religion, nothing that we boast of as success, nothing that we laugh over as enjoyment really signifies much to us except as it helps to make the kind of character that imitates Christ and glorifies him.

To be God's children—like him, so that the world will see the family likeness—that is above any one virtue or grace; and any single trait of character, however good, that so overshadows the rest as to obscure that image, is a blemish rather than a charm.

With The Children.

CONDUCTED BY

J. BRECKENRIDGE ELLIS, PLATTSBURG, MO.

If nothing happens, a new story will begin in this department next week; a story about two boys and a girl who lived in the time of the Judges of Israel. It will be in six chapters, and it will be principally a story of adventure. The story which ended last week was in twenty-two chapters, and I was very glad that so many of you liked it. The new story will be entitled, "The Son of Gideon." It will tell about an exciting run for life in the moonlight; how Esther, Caleb and Jotham lived in a cave while their enemies were searching the country for them; how a very wicked king, Abimelech, pursued Jotham among the rocks, and how a millstone put an end to the story. The story is based upon the ninth chapter of the Book of Judges, and those of you who are fortunate to have a Bible about the house might read it up; however, you will understand the story well enough without doing this.

You children have been showing a disposition lately to let me do all the writing for this department. Now, this isn't fair. You write that you would rather have the continued story all the time. But do you think that it's all fun turning out continued stories? I'll write for you if you write for me. So let's have some stories of narrow escapes, pets, vacations, or just letters or whatever you feel like writing about. When you send your report, send a letter with it; and if it isn't time for sending reports send a letter anyway.

Della Rosencrans, Farmer City, Ill.: "When I was small, my father, mother, sister and I were going to town; papa was driving two colts. We lived in the country, and were taking a basket of eggs to market. The horses saw a load of straw. They got scared and ran off. The wagon broke and we all fell into a ditch. I fell in the basket and had plenty of eggs. My sister ran a hedgethorn below her eye; the others were bruised badly."

Stella Strawn: "I have read about the Advanced Society and would like to join. I think the continued story splendid. Here is a quotation I have learned:

'Duty is a diamond gem
Resting on a pearly stem.'

I am 13. My father is a preacher. We moved to Moberly, Mo., a few weeks ago."

Jessie B. Shafer, Nilwood, Ill.: "My best vacation day was March 9. It was my birthday and I had a party. It was a lovely day. The crowd of girls came about 10 o'clock in the morning and went home at five. We live in the hollow of nine hills. We went upon the hills and gathered flowers and brought them to the larger girls to put on the table. At 12 we went to dinner, and the girls put a wreath of flowers on my head. After dinner we played a great many games and we had a lovely time. They gave me many presents. I will send you pictures of me and Eunice" (her sister). Eunice is smaller. Both of these sisters (whose pictures I prize very much) have been upon our Honor List.

Blanche Harshfield, Doniphan, Neb.: "I have never told about our pets. We have chickens, turkeys, ducks, kittens and two little Shetland ponies; but the best is our baby-sister, a year old the 2nd of July. I wish some of the girls of the Advanced Society would write to me. My sister Virga and I have kept the rules 12 weeks; we are going to try it another quarter. Our exercises, Children's Day, were splendid."

Mabel Worcester, Colorado Springs: "When I was seven I had a very narrow escape. I was playing by a high stone wall and ran into the house for something. I had scarcely gotten inside when we heard a crash. My aunt went to see what it was and found that the wall had fallen just where I had been playing a minute before. Had I remained there a minute longer I would certainly have been crushed to death, because the rocks were very large. . . . I have lots of fun every vacation. Last August I went out on the plains to my aunt's ranch. They bound the oats by hand and my cousin and I tried to help. I am afraid that our hundles didn't stay very well. My badge is red ribbon with Advanced Society stitched on it in blue and white."

Maurine Bragg, Shelbina, Mo.: "I have enjoyed the society very much, and like to read the story and also the letters. I am reading 'Lost Memory' in Our Young Folks, and am so pleased with it. You said in the paper that I was a little boy, and please, I am a girl. Ha! ha! I send my name for the Honor List."

E. Maude Kimler, Davis, Mo.: "I am sorry to write this, but hope I will not have to write the same thing again. Saturday night would have put me on the Honor List, but I went visiting and forgot to read my verse—the only time I had forgotten in three months. Hope to be on the Honor List the next three months. I do enjoy reading and do hate to forget, and will try again." Lucy Garvis, Columbia, Mo.: "I will try to keep the five resolutions of the Advanced Society. I am 11. Please write stories of adventure."

Bertha Beesley, Moslelle, Mo.: "Not long since a house caught on fire and two young men went up to tear away the roof so water could be thrown on the burning parts. In tearing away the roof one of the young men burnt his hands. He stepped backward and fell into the loft. He was in danger of losing his life from the flames, and from being thrown to the ground by the falling of the loft floor. He got out, but he had a narrow escape."

Nora Cunningham, Sedan, Kan.: "When brother was seven he used to drive the cattle. One cold evening he drove the cattle to the creek to water. His pony was thirsty and instead of driving the cattle she hurried to get herself a drink. Brother tried to hold her but could not, and the next moment he slipped over her head and rolled over and over into the deepest part of the creek. He thought he would never get out. He happened to grasp some brush and he pulled himself up and shouted for papa, who was farther down the creek. Papa came and took him home. He said it was a wonder brother ever got out."

New Honor List: (Don't forget, grown-up people and undergrown people as well, that the following have not missed once in 12 whole weeks to read a verse of the Bible every day, learn a quotation every week, read 30 lines of poetry and five pages of history every week, and keep a record in a notebook; and all of them have done more than required. If this seems an easy thing, let's see you do it. The good of it? Why, they are getting used to history and poetry and great thoughts, so that they feel at home and comfortable with them. And while you are reading this Honor List, don't forget that there are scores of other members who have failed to keep the five easy, simple resolutious): Jeannette Chambers, Richwood, Ky.; Nannie D. THE MYSTIC LETTERS.*

In the collection of pictures of the past given us in the Book of Daniel, one scene exhibits the sudden overturning of proud self-confidence in the person of Nebuchadnezzar, king of Babylon. As narrated in chapter four, the king had a dream which troubled him. Fortunately, the monarch could recall the vision in the morning, and the wise men were not reduced to the necessity of finding it out, as he had demanded they should do in chapter two. But this was of little assistance, inasmuch as none of them could disclose its meaning. One would suppose that a king so given to dreaming would tire of his wooden a set of interpreters. But of course Daniel appears at the right moment and explains all. The mighty tree which the king had seen, which was fair and tall, a refuge for birds and beasts and a sustainer of men, was doomed to destruction by a heavenly watchman. Swiftly the figure is dropped and the king is sentenced to degradation from his royal place, and to a singular change of nature, a reversion to animal type, till the lesson of the divine rulership should be learned. This sentence, we are told by the writer, was executed, and seven "times," perhaps years or shorter periods, elapsed before he was restored. The fact that no such experience is narrated of Nebuchadrezzar in any account of his reign should not weigh against the purpose of the writer. There may have been in the Maccabean age a tradition to this effect. At any rate, no figure served better than the proud king of Babylon as a type of that irresponsible arrogance so characteristic of Antiochus Epiphanes, the bete noir of the author of our book, who desired to show the impotence of any king, even the proudest, to contend with God. Whether or not Nebuchadrezzar was ever the victim of this strange lycanthropy, certainly the story of > . . . "his pride and fall

> His penitence and rest,"

has been cherished in all ages as a symbol of that overwhelming of earthly kings by the King of heaven, which takes place, not only in the sudden changes of fortune which overtake thrones, but as well in the slow and yet irrevocable overthrow of plans and policies which clash with righteousness.

It is this recital which pointed the moral of the great banquet scene which forms our lesson. The stern lesson of the great king had not been learned by Belshazzar, and his fall was the result. It has been necessary to remark more than once that the historical names and references in the Book of Daniel must be regarded from the point of view of its writer if the student is to be saved from embarrassment in the interpretation. Many attempts have been made to harmonize the statements of the book with the well-known facts of history; but entire success is possible only to those who are more concerned to accomplish the harmony than to abide by the facts. The fact that the author displays a surprising knowledge of Babylonian affairs on the one hand, and that in several particulars he comes wide of historic accuracy on the other, must be taken as equally characteristic, and both must weigh in forming a judgment of the date at which he lived, and the purpose he had in view. It need hardly be said that the latter, the encouragement of his countrymen in their struggle with the Syrian tyrant of his day, was not vitiated in any sense by minor inaccuracies in the recital of events long past. Such reflections must guide our estimate of this great writer when we discover that Babylonian history knows no king of the name Belshazzar. Its best king of the Babylonian dynasty was Nabonidus, or Nabunaid, in no way related to Nebuchadrezzar. This Nabunaid had a son Belshazzar who, however, never reigned, and who therefore could neither be called king nor a son of Nebuchadrezzar. Many profitless conjectures have been made in the attempt to fill these gaps, but their bold repetition does not reconstruct history, and it is far more fair and honest to accept the statements of the author as his understanding of the facts, without attempting to impose upon him the task of elaborate exactness. He cared for the past only as he could use it for the present, and the smaller actors, the kings and rulers, were vastly subordinate to the great ones, God and his people.

This Belshazzar, regardless of his father's experience, garnished a revel with the fair and costly vessels of the dismantled temple at Jerusalem. The palace was a blaze of beauty, and every heart beat high with pleasure, when suddenly a dreadful portrait appeared. A hand traced certain mystic letters in blazing lines along the wall.

> "With wand of ebony and sable stole,
> Chaldea's wisest scan the spectral scroll—
> Strong in the lessons of a lying art,
> Each comes to gaze, but gazes to depart."

The queen mother at last suggested that in the former reign a certain Daniel had been the trusted interpreter of the king. He was called and offered high rewards if he would read the writing. He put from him the gifts, but turned his eyes upon the king and told him the story of his father's life. Then he read the letters. They were ordinary words of Aramaic, signifying weights well known. But they suggested much more important meanings. Herein lay the skill of the seer. Mina was not only a weight or number. Its message was doubled, and read, "God hath numbered and finished." Tekel was the shekel, another weight; its significance could only be, "Thou hast been weighed;" a peres was a half-mina, and its suggestion of division was to be placed beside the symbolism of its sound as reminding one of those Persians who were to be the instruments of its division. Daniel received his rewards, but the king whose life could alone give them validity did not survive the hour.

> "That night they slew him on his father's throne,
> The deed unnoted, and the hand unknown,
> Crownless and scepterless Belshazzar lay,
> A robe of purple round a form of clay."

TOPIC FOR JULY 27.

THAT GOOD PART.

(Luke 10:38-42.)

Hoffmann's picture represents a young woman in Oriental robes, long and loose and flowing, with fillets of metal binding in her full hair, seated on a low stool, hands clasped upon one knee, while her dark eyes are looking intently into the face of a gentle, kindly, strong man, at whose feet she is sitting. Another young woman in the background, with a platter heaped with fruit, stands beside a laden table and glances rather impatiently toward the couple in the foreground. There is no mistaking the character and the meaning. It is Martha, cumbered with much serving, and Mary, who chose the good part.

There are the two ways, a life full of care, anxiety, burdens—a life striving and worrying; and a life calm, serene, meditative, seated at the Master's feet. It was not that Martha is to be blamed for having household cares and looking after them; but that she should have been troubled over them, and felt the load and allowed that load to separate her from the Master. He would have preferred that Martha take less anxiety for him, and had come to sit beside her sister. He would have been better pleased if she had been less solicitious about feeding him with the meat that perisheth, and had given him the chance to feed on that meat which he had to eat that they knew not of—to do his father's will. Ah, how many of us load ourselves down with burdens, even when Jesus is in the house, in the room, at our very elbows, to take anxiety from us, if we allow him.

At the Detroit convention one of the keywards was "Surrender." Giving up all to him, all care, all anxiety, all sorrow, all remorse and absolutely refusing to be worried and fretted and downcast, in short, choosing the good part of sitting at his feet, looking to him, learning his will, and undertaking to do it—this is the surrender talked of. Some of us were strongly moved there, as never before to live near the Lord. Some of us, all soiled with sin, some of us who had chosen, time and again, the worse part, who had called for Barabbas, that miserable thief and muderer, hideous and ugly, and had set him at liberty to run riot and make ruin, and had crucified the Lord afresh and put him to open shame, and then had been deeply remorseful, almost with the remorse of Judas—some such as this found the light and the peace which comes from sitting at his feet, and resolved evermore to open our hearts to him and abide with him. O, it was a precious meeting to many poor, hungry, sin-sick souls, that meeting at Detroit! We came out of it humble, but peaceful; seeing that we were chiefs of sinners, but "saved by grace."

How often things get mixed, if we trust our unaided hands to them! How often in a sudden unguarded moment we say or do the evil thing that we would give the world to have undone; how often with steady persistence in evil we wind ourselves in a mesh inextricable! "O, what a mess I have made of it," we say, and wring our hands impotently. Well for us then if we can learn to say, as many learned at Detroit, in those quiet hours—especially such a quiet hour as that for men on Sunday afternoon at the Armory—to say: "Master, I cannot untangle this difficulty. I cannot stir. I cannot overcome the obstacles all about me, many of which I, myself, have made by foolishness, or wickedness; I cannot, of my own strength, do this serving; so I will choose the good part, I will let thee solve these things for me. I will submit myself, quietly, passively, humbly, peacefully, under thine eye; I will do my best, as every time for action comes. I will do what thou wouldst like to have me do, and go where thou wouldst like to have me go; I will bow beneath any yoke thou sendest; I will accept any stripes that fall upon me for my sins, and feel that I deserve them. I will give my work and all my way to thee to shape, and never any more will I consider myself as anything but thine; once and for all do I chose the good part."

Many at Detroit, who thought they were Christians, who knew Jesus, they thought, as Mary doubtless had supposed she knew her Friend, really found him there and learned truly to know him, came close to him and dedicated their lives afresh, and this time forever to him; henceforth to walk "In His Steps," as near as they can; never more to make the gift over to him again, but given once and for all; never to be content without the conscious presence of him in the heart, and perhaps, like Spurgeon, who if for half an hour he missed the conscious presence of his Lord, would retire to his knees to ask, "What is it, O my Lord, that has come between us. Help me to find out, and do then take it away!"

Never at any Endeavor convention has such a large portion of the Endeavorers attended so faithfully the sessions. Never, perhaps, have so many been so spiritually stirred, and such deep resolves been taken. Sheldon's presence and his book's influence had much to do with it. And Meyer's books and the presence of his disciple, Chapman, had much to do with it. The book, "The Christian's Secret of a Happy Life," had much effect. And most of all, the presence of the Savior and his Spirit had much to do with it. Many sat at his feet like Mary. Many chose the good part. Endeavorers, you who read this, have you made this choice? I wish I could write so as to get you to. You would know such peace as you have never known. Read, then, "The Secret of a Happy Life," by Anna Whitall Smith, a little book to be bought at any store, published by Revell, of Chicago, and perhaps that may lead to your giving up to Christ and choosing the good part.

THE C. E. READING COURSES.

[There are three courses: The Bible, Missions and the Disciples. The three handbooks for the first year are: "A Guide to Bible Study," "Handbook of Missions" and "Concerning the Disciples." The three handbooks for the second year are: "Life and Teachings of Jesus," "Missionary Fields and Forces of the Disciples" and "Sketches of our Pioneers." Three handbooks and the Bethany C. E. Bulletin, quarterly, sent to any address for one dollar. All orders should be addressed to the Bethany C. E. Company, 798 Republic St., Cleveland, O. Each course has a director: H. L. Willett is director of Bible study; W. J. Lhamon is director of studies in Missions; F. D. Power is director of studies Concerning the Disciples. This column is set apart to the use of these directors.]

The Study of Missions.

By W. J. Lhamon, Director.

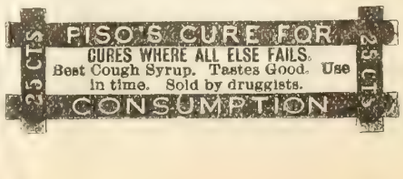
We are told of a picure that represents both a Roman triumph and the persecution of Christians. A conqueror is returning to the city of Rome; he passes under the triumphal arch followed by his soldiers and captives and wagons laden with spoils and men and wild beasts destined for the arena. Beneath, as if buried in the catacombs and secreted from persecution, Christians are timidly worshiping. Yet, this persecuted Christianity came forth in due time from the caves and the catacombs to conquer these conquerors. Their influence has for long centuries been spent and forgotten, except as a matter of history, while that of Christianity increases with multiplying years. No doubt, onlookers of that day shouted themselves hoarse over the triumph and kindred scenes, while a prophet would have looked below for the forces that were to make and mold future history. The real thing to be applauded was this persecuted Christliness. In this respect history is repeating itself. The great movements of to-day are not the political or the martial ones, but the missionary ones. Christliness means more than war or commerce to the benighted nations. The little army of miisionaries now scattered over the world is vastly more significant of the world's future than all the vast standing armies. It is they, really, who are carrying the leaven and the light to the nations. To this little army the words of the Master may be applied as of old to his twelve, "Ye are the light of the world."



That Christians should be ignorant of this greatest movement of modern times is lamentable and is well-nigh unpardonable. That there should be Christian schools and colleges still devoting years to the study of pagan classics to the exclusion of modern missions is a strange and perverse anachronism. The time is at hand when what is called a liberal education must include a considerable knowledge of this great movement.

The missionary department of the Bethany C. E. Reading Courses seeks to give its brief compass a comparatively thorough course in missions. The first yearbook, written by A. McLean—a name that is a guarantee of its great worth—deals with the subject in a general way and wealth of material. One does not exaggerate in saying that the mastery of that book is an accomplishment. The second yearbook is written by the director of the department of missions and seeks to cover in a thorough way the subject of our own missionary fields and forces. All our societies and fields are treated with as much fullness as the space permits. In addition to this the closing chapters of the book are devoted to the great religions of the East—Mohammedanism, Buddhism, Brahminism and Confucianism. The commendations of returned missionaries upon the presentation of these religions has been a source of much gratification to the author.

Our third yearbook will be entitled, "Heroes of the Mission Field," and will present the life and work of each of a number of the greatest and most devoted missionaries. There is a great charm about the names of Zizendorf, and Brainerd, and Martyn, and Carey, and Judson, and Moffat, and Livingstone, and Marsden, and Pattison and Geddie and others, to whom we shall be able to devote some pages each. And whatever may be the merit of the book from a literary view-point, we are confident that the immense merit of these names and such treatment as we can give them will make it a very attractive and interesting work. The director of the department has the work in hand, and our readers will be glad to know the work is well under way and that the book will be out, as we trust, by the first of September. There will be preliminary chapters on the meaning and the magnitude of missions and much statistical information will be given regarding the great missionary fields, such as India and China and Africa and Japan and the islands, together with the present status of the work.

We are keeping constantly in view the multum in parvo, and we seek the utmost of knowledge and inspiration in the smallest possible limit of space and time. It is for this reason that we are preparing our own handbooks. We could have commended to our readers many a profitable book at prices ranging from a dollar to a dollar and a half, but nothing of the sort we are preparing at so small a figure as that charged for the Bethany books.

We rejoice to know that our efforts are seconded by our missionary societies, and we look to coming years for the fruitage of our somewhat laborious sowing. But whatever the work and its results, we join in the opportunity to make never so slight an offering to the furtherance of our dear Savior's kingdom in all the earth.

ALLEN.

Sister S. A. Allen fell asleep in Jesus on the 4th day of the present month at her home near Baldwyn, Miss., aged 83 years. She was a noble Christian woman, ripe in years and rich in good works. She had been an exemplary member of the Christian Church at this place for about 30 years. Her sterling qualities and excellent traits of character were seen and acknowledged by all. She was the mother of James H. Allen, of St. Louis, Mo., and also of Congressman J. M. Allen, of Tupelo, Miss., who were both with her when the Master called to her to come up higher.

G. W. ARCHER.

Baldwyn, Miss., July 9, 1899.

HAZZARD.

Henrietta M. Remley was born near North Vernon, Ind., June 6, 1832. Departed this life at Odin, Ill., July 7, 1899. She was married to Dr. K. P. Hazzard March 14, 1850. From early life she was a faithful Christian. Sister Hazzard was a faithful, affectionate wife, an attentive, loving mother and a staunch supporter of all the interests of Christ's kingdom. She leaves to her stricken husband and three sons the rich heritage of a godly example and the comforting assurance that she has gone to a sweet rest in Jesus.

JAS. E. ROSEBOROUGH.

HILL.

Osmer C. Hill was born in Orange, Cuyahoga County, O., Dec. 31, 1839, and died in Hiawatha, Kansas, June 30, 1899, in his sixtieth year. He was a self-educated man. He left Hiram College in September, 1861, to join Garfield's regiment, and served over three years in the war. He was two years a teacher in Oberlin College and eight years at Hiram. He graduated from Williams, Mass., in 1876. He taught twelve years in Oregon, Mo., and Hiawatha, Kansas. He was the author of a course of readers. He was 30 years a minister in the Christian Church. He was one of the best known men in Kansas, especially in educational circles.

A. W. DAVIS.

HUFFMAN.

On the 23rd day of May, 1899, Mrs. Jane Huffman departed this life at the age 73 years, 10 months and 26 days. Her maiden name was Fulton. She was born in Indiana. Forty years ago she was converted under the preaching of Moses E. Lard, and baptized by her husband, Jonathan Huffman, who passed to his reward some years ago. Shelived and died a Christian. At her request a funeral discourse was preached by the writer. She was a reader of the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST for many years. Her death occurred near Rosendale, Mo.

W. A. CHAPMAN.

McILVAINE.

Mrs. S. H. McIlvaine, of this city, died June 22, 1899. Her ailment was not agreed upon by the doctors. Her decline during the last few weeks was very rapid. She was a devoted Christian, a charter member of this church, and a great worker for the Master. She was born in this city Aug. 24, 1853 and was married to Bro. McIlvaine in 1883. She leaves three daughters, the oldest being 15. She suffered greatly, but died in the triumphs of the faith.

H. D. WILLIAMS.

Kalamazoo, Mich.

She Snubbed a Lord.

The New York "swagger" set received a breezy sensation recently when one of the choicest young heiresses on the Avenue married an American, who earns his own living; while on the same date went sailing homeward a distinguished little princeling whose yard-long title rumor said had been placed entirely at her disposal. "Bless me" exclaimed her self-made father facetiously, "If this sort of thing keeps on we'll all be Americanized!"

"THEY PELT HER UNMERCIFULLY."

There is something about the air of this country which inclines our women to act independently. A girl may try to wrap up her womanly instincts beneath a cloak of fashionable vanity, but the little love gods find out the weak spots in her armor and pelt her unmercifully. If she is a true American the chances are after all that nine times in ten she will marry the man she cares for. The vast majority of our young women seek no greater blessing than to be well-loved wives of strong-hearted men; and mothers of healthy, happy children.

The natural burdens of wifehood and motherhood have been amazingly lightened in the last thirty years. Advanced science has found a way to overcome the physical weakness of women and make them strong and capable of performing their wifely and motherly duties.

THE MODERN WOMAN'S OPPORTUNITY.

At the present day there is no need for any woman in this country to be weighed down and overburdened with physical weakness or disease. A woman suffering from any delicate ailment peculiar to her sex, no matter what the circumstances may be, may obtain such eminent professional advice and assistance as a queen could hardly command a generation ago. She can have all the advantages of that splendid American Institution, the World's Dispensary Medical Association of Buffalo, N. Y., with its staff of nearly twenty eminent specialists in the different branches of medical practice. At their head as chief consulting physician is Dr. R. V. Pierce, one of the most widely experienced physicians living. Any woman consulting him by mail and giving a careful statement of her case will receive sound professional advice and suggestion for home-treatment free of charge.

It is impossible to estimate the immense amount of suffering that weak and ailing women have been saved by Dr. Pierce's suggestions for home-treatment and the use of his matchless prescriptions. His "Favorite Prescription" has done more to promote the health and strength of women of our land than all other remedies combined. It is recognized throughout the world as the one greatest supportive tonic and special strengthener that has ever been devised for women.

It gives healing and power and endurance to the delicate special organism of women; imparts natural vitality and vigor to their entire nerve structure. It banishes abnormal and irregular conditions; stops unnatural drains; creates healthful capacity and stamina.

It prepares women for motherhood, carries them safely and comfortably through the ordeal; takes away all its dangers and nearly all its pain; promotes abundant, natural nourishment for the child and, through the favorable influence upon the mother increases the little one's natural strength and hardihood.

Mrs. Betsey M. White, of Stoneycreek, Warren Co., N. Y., in a letter to Dr. Pierce says: "Your 'Favorite Prescription' has done wonders in our house. My son's wife had been for years a great sufferer; all broken down and very weak and nervous. She was troubled with all the pains and aches one so slender could endure. She took everything she heard of, hoping to get help, but in vain; so she tried Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription and it did wonders for her. The doctors said she could not live to have another child as she came near dying so many times. This spring she had a nine-baby weighing eleven pounds; she got through before we could get any one there. I was afraid she would not live. We cried for joy when we saw how nicely she got along. May God bless you for the good you have done."

Sunday School Periodicals.

THE SUNDAY-SCHOOL PUBLICATIONS issued by the CHRISTIAN PUBLISHING COMPANY of St Louis, are in use in a little over Two Thirds of the Sunday-schools connected with the Christian Church in America, as shown by the statistics in the last Annual Year Book, among which are most of the prosperous and progressive ones. There is no good reason why a large proportion of the other fractional One Third should not also be thus furnished, as we have abundant facilities for supplying all. The list of Publications is complete in every particular, and supply every want. It consists in part of the following:

Three Weeklies

1. Our Young Folks, a large 16-page Illustrated Weekly, nearly four times as large as the ordinary Sunday-school paper, for Sunday-school Teachers, Advanced Pupils, Christian Endeavorers, and in fact for all Working Members of the Christian Church, with a well-sustained department also for the Home Circle, adapted to the wants of the whole family. Single copy, 75 cents per year; in clubs of 20 or more, 50 cents—12 1-2 cents per quarter.
2. The Sunday-School Evangelist for the Boys and Girls of the Intermediate Department, with bright Pictures, Lessons and Entertaining Stories. In clubs of not less than ten copies to one address, 30 cents per year—8 cents per quarter.
3. The Little Ones, for the Little Folks, with Beautiful Colored Pictures in every number. In clubs of not less than 5 copies, 25 cents a copy per year—6 1-4 cents per quarter.

Four Lesson Quarterlies

1. The Bible Student for Teachers and Advanced Classes: Ten copies, per quarter, in clubs to one address, 70 cts.; 25 $1.60; 50, $3.00; 100, $5.50.

What We Plead For

The Christian-Evangelist pleads for:

The Christianity of the New Testament, taught by Christ and his Apostles, versus the theology of the creeds taught by fallible men—the world's great need.

The divine confession of faith on which Christ built his church, versus human confessions of faith on which men have split the church.

The unity of Christ's disciples, for which he so fervently prayed, versus the divisions in Christ's body, which his apostles strongly condemned.

The abandonment of sectarian names and practices, based on human authority, for the common family name and the common faith, based on divine authority, versus the abandonment of scriptural names and usages for partisan ends.

The hearty co-operation of Christians in efforts of world-wide beneficence and evangelization, versus petty jealousies and strifes in the struggle for denominational pre-eminence.

The fidelity to truth which secures the approval of God, versus conformity to custom to gain the favor of men.

The protection of the home and the destruction of the saloon, versus the protection of the saloon and the destruction of the home.

For the right against the wrong;
For the weak against the strong;
For the poor who've waited long
For the brighter age to be.
For the truth, 'gainst superstition,
For the faith, against tradition,
For the hope, whose glad fruition
Our waiting eyes shall see.

Vol. xxxvi. St. Louis, Mo., Thursday, July 27, 1899. No. 30

CURRENT EVENTS.

A number of the newspaper correspondents at Manila has joined in a protest to this government against the course of General Otis in exercising so severe a censorship over their reports. They claim that he has kept back information to which the American public is entitled, and that he has not permitted the people of this country to understand the true situation of affairs in the Philippine Islands. This is not the first time in the history of this country, in times of war, when newspaper correspondents have complained of their treatment at the hands of the generals in the field. The well-known tendency of newspaper correspondents to manufacture news, when there is none, and to so manipulate the news that they do send as to make it suit the papers they represent, is very likely to bring them into conflict with the military view of things. The President does not seem to have been seriously disturbed by this protest. The reports of the situation which General Otis has cabled is confirmed, not only by other generals in the field, but by the Philippine commission, which is thoroughly conversant with the situation. The President naturally thinks that these military officers and these civil commissioners have a better insight into the real situation in the Philippines than the newspaper correspondents. Newspaper correspondents, no doubt, perform an important function, but as conductors of military campaigns they have never proved very successful.

For several months the papers have been full of the rumors relating to the resignation from the Cabinet of General Alger, Secretary of War. It has been repeatedly announced that his relations with the President and with the other members of the Cabinet were strained, and later it has been hinted that his senatorial aspirations made it necessary for him to resign his place as Secretary of War. The resignation, so long predicted, has at last occurred, and has been accepted by the President. The Secretary has been the butt of a great deal of adverse criticism from the newspapers, and no doubt this fact has had its effect in hastening his resignation with a view to relieving the administration from any blame which might attach to his department. On the 19th inst. he sent his resignation to the President asking that it take effect "at such time in the near future as you may decide the affairs of this department will permit." He wishes the President "continued health and the highest measure of success in carrying out the great work entrusted to him." The President accepts the resignation to take effect August 1, 1899, adding, "In thus severing the official relation which has continued for more than two years, I desire to thank you for the faithful service you have rendered the country at a most exacting period, and to wish you a long and happy life." It is not probable that any Secretary of War could have discharged the duties of that office during the Spanish-American conflict, under existing conditions, without receiving adverse criticism. The position was a most difficult one, in view of the unprepared condition of the country, and there seems to be little doubt but that the retiring Secretary has endeavored, to the best of his ability, to discharge his arduous duties for the best interest of the government and of the people. He will probably issue a statement later in defense of his administration of his office against public criticism. Hon. Elihu Root, of New York, has been chosen to succeed Secretary Alger. In this choice the President seems to have been actuated by Mr. Root's reputation as a lawyer, and the entire Cabinet seems to be pleased with the choice.

The funeral services of the late Queen Dowager, of the Hawaiian Islands, Kapiolani, whose death occurred recently in Honolulu, is said to have possessed some distinctively Hawaiian features and to have been quite an affair of state. A description of it in the daily press says: "It was a state affair. In the procession were several hundred native women afoot. The troops included the National Guard of Hawaii and a battalion of the 6th Artillery, United States Army. The catafalque was drawn by 400 Native Sons, wearing capes of the royal colors. There were bearers of the royal decorations and more than 100 men carried the Kahli, a cylinder of feathers at the end of a pole, as an emblem of native rule. There were a number of men at the head of the column carrying the torch of kukui nuts and ti leaves, the symbol of the Kalakaua dynasty. There was an interesting showing of royal feather cloaks. The casket was placed in the center of the royal mausoleum, replacing that of the late Princess Kaiulani."

As the time approaches for the trial of Dreyfus, the plot in connection with his case seems to thicken. A French newspaper, the Matin, of the 18th, contained a confession by Comte Esterhazy who has already figured prominently in this celebrated case. In this confession Esterhazy accuses General Depoisdeffre of having ordered and conducted the fabrication of the borderreau. He goes into details concerning this document, and says that the men who were in the secret as to the borderreau selected the experts who testified concerning the handwriting, as the War Office directed. The surprising part of Esterhazy's confession is his statement that Dreyfus is guilty, and that the agents in Berlin who discovered his treachery are men who could not be compromised. Ordinarily, the statements of such a man as Esterhazy, who by his own confession has taken so dishonorable a part in this affair, would have little influence on the public mind, but his narrative hangs together in a remarkable way, and seems to explain a good many facts which were not understood before. It has therefore created a considerable sensation, and something of a reaction against Dreyfus. The world outside of France, however, will be slow to believe that all this forgery and falsification were resorted too to condemn a man who was really guilty of treason to his country, and will continue to believe in the innocence of Dreyfus until something more convincing than a story from one of the conspirators is presented against him.

The Democratic National Committee held a meeting in Chicago last week. Among other things it created the office of vice-chairman and elected Wm. J. Stone, of Missouri, to that position. As the chairman, Senator Jas. K. Jones, is in ill health and absent from the the country, it is believed that ex-Gov. Stone will practically have control of the committee for the time being, and it is probable that the campaign of 1900 will be directed by him. It is well known that there has been a local faction in the party in Chicago, known as the followers of Mr. Harrison and Mr. Altgeld respectively. Mr. Bryan was present and addressed the meeting, in which he made a plea for harmony among those who supported the Chicago platform in 1896. Among the places which applied for the national convention of the party were Milwaukee and Kansas City. A press committee of five was appointed. In an interview after the meeting Mr. Bryan expressed himself as satisfied with the outcome of the proceedings. The Ohio Bimetallic League presented an offer of co-operation with the committee in the coming campaign, and was thanked for the same and notified that it would be called on when its services were needed.

On Monday, July 17, Japan was admitted into the fellowship of the civilized nations of the world. On that date the new Japanese treaties, which were negotiated in 1894, took effect. The first treaty made with Japan was made by Commodore Perry in 1855. In this and the other treaties made subsequently with other nations, Japan agreed to open a few ports to foreign trade and residence. Foreigners living in these ports could own property or engage in business, but outside of these ports no foreign trade was permitted. Foreigners living in these ports were exempt from Japanese jurisdiction, as each foreign government maintained its own consular courts for the trial of its subjects. This arrangement, of course, was not satisfactory to a nation which has made the progress which Japan has made recently, as every civilized nation claims jurisdiction, by its own courts, over all the people living within its jurisdiction. In 1895, after repeated efforts on the part of Japan, treaties were made between that country and the other governments, which gave Japan the rights of other civilized nations. These treaties went into effect on the 17th of this month. Its own courts now have jurisdiction over foreigners as well as native subjects, and its interior is opened up to traffic as in any civilized nation. Japan has taken its place along with the most advanced class of the great civilized powers, and there is little doubt but that it will be able to maintain this place with dignity and credit.

Robt. G. Ingersoll died at his summer home, Dobbs' Ferry, New York, at 12:30, July 21st, presumably of apoplexy. The end came suddenly. Robert G. Ingersoll was a man of national reputation as a lawyer, a politician and an agnostic. As a lecturer he was entertaining and popular and has said some beautiful things in elegant language, but his lectures were chiefly tirades against the Christian religion and have but little merit as literary, philosophic or theological productions. He usually had a good hearing, but all that he has said seems to have had no effect upon the great body of religious people in the United States. He probably has helped to keep a few young men from the church, to their detriment, but he quite failed to deliver any staggering blows to the church or to throw any serious obstacles in the way of its progress in the land. He has not even left a book to be classified with the great and living books of the century. What he has written may continue to be read, as heretofore, simply as pastime literature. His brilliancy as an orator, however, will be generally conceded, even by those whose faith he sought to destroy. And while his denunciation of Christianity and the God of the Bible were bitter, often blasphemous, there was a vein of uncertainty in his mind about his positions that occasionally manifested itself, as at the grave of his brother and other instances, when he seemed to feel the power of an unseen world upon him, and his better judgment and nature asserted itself. This is especially indicated in the change that came over his mind in relation to death and dying. It is stated that he had often said he wished to die slowly, and in full consciousness, that he might tell those about him how it felt. Recently, however, he experienced a change of desire, and said he hoped he would die painlessly and without warning. This fact, if true, opens a wide door for reflection and study, and while the true reason for the change may never be known there will remain the suspicion in many minds that it lies in the direction of the possibility of the truth of what he had so publicly denied. May it not, after all, have been one of the results of that fear which, like hope, "is the product of no religious creed" and would not down? But he has gone from earth, and that, too, in a way that indicates that the kind and loving God whom he blasphemed in his lectures, after all, heard and answered the prayer of this professionally prayerless man, and permitted him an unwarned, instantaneous, painless death. In a slow, conscious death he could have told no more than others, whose sincerity could not even be suspicioned, have told. It was well and wise, therefore, that the curtain fell upon his part in the drama of life as it did. O, the depth of the mercy of God!

Interest in the commerce of China is increased materially by the recent developments in regard to transportation and privileges of foreigners. A recent publication of the Treasury Bureau of Statistics shows that over 3,000 miles of railway are now projected in China, over 3,000 miles of telegraph in operation, and that by recent action of the Chinese Government the waterways of China, its most important means of internal traffic at present, have been opened to foreign commerce and foreign vessels. A recent edict announces that foreign vessels may navigate the streams of all provinces of China in which treaty ports are located, and as treaty ports are now distributed practically over the entire empire, this means that foreign vessels may navigate the streams of substantially all parts of that great country and carry with them the citizens of other countries and their products. The natural waterways of China aggregate, it is estimated, fully 10,000 miles in length and this, combined with the proposed railway systems when completed will offer to other parts of the world commercial opportunities of great importance, whether reached by rail from the commercial centers of Europe or by water from our Pacific or Atlantic Seaboards.

Apostle Brigham Young, eldest son of the former head of the Mormon Church, in an interview on the subject of polygamy in Utah, and the case of Mr. Roberts, the polygamous congressman-elect from that state, delivered himself as follows:

> I have little doubt he will also be proceeded against, and, as in the case of Mr. Cannon, we have no disposition to avoid the issue. We might as well determine now as any time where we stand, and if we have got to go to prison, so let it be. We can be imprisoned, but no power short of death can force me or others in the same situation to break the most solemn covenant that man can make. I, for instance, covenanted to be a faithful husband to my wives and true father to my children. Would I not be false to every obligation of honor and true morality to now cast them off? I have had more than one member of Congress tell me that if I broke the covenant thus made and cast off these children and wives who gave me all they had in the world I would be nothing less than a scoundrel. We all feel that we cannot break these obligations, come what may, and I certainly shall be true to my covenants. I consider them more sacred and binding than any law that can be passed.

The "solemn covenant" to which this apostle of Mormonism refers—that of caring for his former wives and their families—is not what the United States objects to, as he very well knows. There is a difference between that and living with a plurality of women as wives, in violation of the laws of the United States as well the law of God.

CONSCIENCE AND IMPERFECTION.

How is a man to maintain a good conscience in an imperfect world, where sin has left its trace on everything which man has wrought? Shall he refuse to be associated with any church because of its imperfections in life and doctrine? Shall he refuse his co-operation with any political party because all our parties are more or less swayed by passion and prejudice, unworthy motives? Shall he keep himself aloof from the social life of the times because of customs and axioms which he can not endorse? Shall he refuse to participate in any industrial enterprise because he believes the law of selfishness prevails more than the Golden Rule in the modern industrial world? Must he play the hermit, or lead a monastic life, separating himself from the activities of the world in order that he may maintain a good conscience?

Most of our readers would perhaps say that such a course is impracticable and unwise. If Christians are the salt of the world they must come in contact with it. But must a man then sacrifice his conscience in order to pursue a practicable, sensible course, and be a living factor in helping to shape the course of things? This is the problem which Professor Herron discusses in one of his recent lectures as printed in his little book entitled "Between Cæsar and Jesus." He holds, rightly, as we think, that one cannot run away from his fellowmen in a selfish desire to escape the social and political evils of his time. But he holds that in remaining with them he must sacrifice his conscience for the good of others. His language is as follows: "The sacrifice of conscience in service is the redemptive force that is to save society. To this social sacrifice of conscience Jesus is no exception; he is rather the most concrete example. Jesus used the Jewish synagogues, traveled the Roman roads, paid tribute to Cæsar, and straitened himself by the common straits. Meanwhile, he put a life and an idea into the world that consumed the throne of the Cæsars, and that will yet level all our plutocracies; a life and an idea that will break every bond and free every man from the rule of man."

Prof. Herron cannot mean that Jesus sacrificed his conscience in pursuing the course that he did in the sense that he went contrary to his conscience, or that he in any way defiled his conscience. We do not understand how Jesus sacrificed his conscience in any sense, or that we are called on to sacrifice our conscience as a "redemptive force" to "save society." On the contrary, we believe that Jesus was prompted by his conscience to do the things he did and that every man who attempts honestly to follow him must necessarily act conscientiously. Rrather, we should say, that conscience, not sacrificed, but obeyed, is "the redemptive force that is to save society." We must indeed sacrifice our ease, our time, our energy, and often subordinate our personal preferences and tastes for the good of others, but we do not believe that any man is called upon to sacrifice his conscience, even in a good cause. Nor can we believe that Professor Herron means that he should do so, although his language is capable of such interpretation. The great trouble seems to be that so many men can live in luxury and in extravagance, heedless of the sufferings and sorrows of their fellowmen, with apparently no conscience in the matter.

But we have referred to this subject and have made this quotation from Professor Herron, because the principle involved is one susceptible of wide application. This is an unfinished world in which we live, and therefore an imperfect world. Our religious, political and social institutions are all imperfect. The human beings who are in them and who have to do with their management are imperfect beings. God has to use imperfect agencies in carrying forward his work in the world. To grow disheartened, therefore, because we see imperfections in those about us, in our church, our party, our nation, and seek to escape contact with these imperfections by flying to some other church, or party, or nation, is folly. If there were a perfect church, made up of sinless human beings, our duty would, perhaps, not be with such a church, but with those who are imperfect, if we have any capacity to help men and women to better lives. A preacher, let us say, has a congregation that is narrow, illiberal, worldly-minded, given to tattling, with resulting strife and faction. What is his duty? Is it to seek some other church, whose membership is more liberal, more cultivated, more Christian, more harmonious? Many a preacher so reasons. Who, then, is to care for the church that is ill-trained, uneducated, covetous and given to strife? Must it be abandoned? Must not some man pour out his life as a sacrifice for the redemption of such a church? It seems to us there is only one justification for a man leaving such a church for a better one, and that is his inability to cope with the situation and to make the church what it ought to be.

The tendency to hunt for easy places, to associate with cultivated people, to avoid poverty, ignorance, wretchedness, is not Christlike. He sought those most who needed Him most. He came to seek and to save the lost. We need a Christian conscience that will lead us to seek companionship with the lowly, with the needy, and even with the outcasts of socieiy, if by any means we may lift them up to higher thoughts and to better living. We know of nothing that is more needed in the church to-day than the willingness of men of education and culture, and all the power it has given them, to devote their lives to those most in need of it. Such a disposition would provide pastoral care and oversight to many poor, weak, struggling churches which are "as sheep without a shepherd." What we need in the church and in the state is a conscience that instead of running away from imperfections will seek to remedy them; that instead of seeking easy places will seek the place where it can be of most service, however hard and difficult it may be. This principle should exert a controlling influence on the young in the selection of their callings in life. Every Christian young man or woman should ask himself or herself the question, In what calling can I best serve humanity? Or, where is my service most needed? This willingness to offer ourselves to the service of humanity, in whatever way or in whatever place we can accomplish the most good, is the "redemptive force that is to save society," and this involves, not the sacrifice of conscience, but the cultivation of a more Christian conscience and greater loyalty to it.

THE GOSPEL FOR TO-DAY.

The fundamental fact in man's moral experience is the fact that he is before God a helpless sinner.

It is not necessary to read texts of Scripture to prove that men are sinners. That we are such is an integral part of our daily and personal experience. Pagans know that they are sinners. Those who have never heard of the Bible confess in a variety of ways that they are morally wrong. The religions of the world are founded on this fact. All the nations and tribes of earth have religion of some kind, because they are all conscious of this all-persuasive, fundamental fact. In Christian lands the men who turn from Christ and spurn his gracious offer of salvation confess by their conduct that there is something radically wrong with them.

The helplessness of man in this matter must be evident to all. The pagan and heathen religions are intended to restore man to fellowship with God. This they fail to do. These religions do not save their devotees from their sins. They remain in ignorance, bound by the chains of superstition and continue to live in iniquity. This fact is undeniable.

The fundamental need of man is moral cleansing and soul-rest. This the gospel of the Son of God gives to man in his spiritual degradation and helplessness. The corrupt heart of man is made clean by "the faith," i. e., by the gospel of God's grace. The Son of Man said: "Come unto me and I will give you rest." "Take my yoke upon you," he said, "and learn of me; . . . and ye shall find rest unto your souls." Millions in all ages, since this invitation was given and in all lands, have by a personal experience found that these words are true. They have submitted to the authority of the Master and have found soul-rest. The gospel for to-day is the gospel of the Son of God.

The one inquiry of universal interest in the present age, as of all times, is this: How can man come into harmonious relations with the author of his being? The gospel that Jesus commanded his disciples to preach to the whole creation, and this gospel alone, replies authoritatively to this question. It tells man in the depth of his misery in what way he can come into fellowship with God. The gospel answer is definite. Examples are given in our sacred writings of men coming into communion with the author of their being. As we look into these ancient records and study the influence of God's gospel we see foul men made clean; we see degraded men lifted up; we see ignorant men enlightened; we see enslaved men made free; we see cruel men made gentle and kind; we see children of the Wicked One changed into sons and daughters of the Most High God. The transformations of character wrought now by the gospel are as wonderful as any of the changes of which we read in the New Testament. The way by which men must return to God is by submission to his will as revealed in Jesus Christ our Lord.

All social problems, the present-day questions which most vex us, those which seem to be most difficult of solution, may all be expressed in a single sentence: How can men live together in peace and fraternity? This question is answered by the gospel of Christ. There is no other message that contains a reply to this inquiry. As men come under the influence of this gracious message and drink into its spirit they live together in peace. They are taught by this gospel to bear one another's burdens. Love is the regnant word in the gospel of Christ. Fraternity is inculcated. Men are taught that they have one Father—that they are, therefore, brothers—and that they should live together in a spirit of fraternity. The gospel is the power of God to save society from friction, from antagonisms, from anarchy, from unrest. The one condition is that we shall yield ourselves in willing obedience to him who is its Alpha and Omega. This, then, is the gospel for to-day.

All men must die. What of the future? Is there a future? Does death end all? This is the crowning inquiry. Men who think, desire above all other things to know something about their destiny. To know one's destiny is more important than to possess a knowledge of one's origin.

There is only one gospel that speaks to men concerning the to-morrow of death in tones that are clear, strong, authoritative—it is the gospel of Jesus Christ. Life and immortality have been brought to men through the resurrection of God's Son. The gospel of the resurrection with all that it means and implies is the gospel of to-day. It and it alone satisfies the desires of men concerning the future. It is a gospel of good hope. Wherefore preach it, in season out of season.

Hour of Prayer.

HOUSES OF WORSHIP.

(Uniform Midweek Prayer-meeting Topic, Aug. 2.)

(Luke 7:1-10; Ex. 35:21-29.)

(Concert of Prayer for Missions.)

CENTRAL TRUTH: Houses of worship have been essential to the best interests of God's people under all dispensations, and faith and piety have found expression in the erection of such houses.

What religious influences were brought to bear on the heart of the Roman centurion at Capernaum to cause him to make so generous a contribution to church extension, we know not. Evidently, however, he had been led to believe in the true God, and to fear His name. The Jews in his town stood for the true God, and worshiped Him. He would give an expression of his faith in the God whom they worshiped by building them a synagogue at his own expense. It is not strange that when his servant became dangerously ill, he bethought him of Jesus, of whom he had heard, and that he requested the elders of the synagogue to go to Jesus and request Him to come and save his servant. The elders did so, and their plea for the centurion was based on the ground of his beneficence toward them, saying, "He is worthy that thou shouldst do this for him; for he loveth our nation, and he himself built us our synagogue."

The same faith that led him to build the synagogue, and to request the elders to intercede with the Master in his behalf, caused him also to utter the words which drew out so strong a commendation from the Savior, in which he told the Master that he was not worthy that He should come under his roof, and that it was not necessary, as He had only to speak the word and it would be done. The word was spoken, the servant was healed, and the pious centurion found that his investment in church extension had brought him greater returns than he had dreamed of. But who can estimate the compensation which he received in the satisfaction which he must have felt through all his after life in the thought that he himself had erected a house of worship for the true and living God, and when later his servant had been healed by the Son of God, a new feeling of gratitude and of thankfulness must have moved his heart to other pious and loving deeds.

Nothing is more indicative of the faith and piety of the ancient Israelites than the willingness with which they made their offerings for the erection of the tabernacle—the place of worship among them as they were journeying in the wilderness. It is pleasing and instructive to read how "they came, every one whose heart stirred him up, and every one whom his spirit made willing, and brought Jehovah's offering"—notice it was Jehovah's offering—"for the work of the tent of meeting." "Both men and women," we are told, "as many as were willing-hearted, brought brooches and earrings and signet rings and armlets, all jewels of gold," and laid them upon the altar of this holy enterprise. They brought the offerings which they were able to offer, the product of their own skill, and contributed the same to the erection of this ancient house of God. The free, generous outpouring of these gifts on the part of the Israelites ought to be a rebuke to many in our day for the lack of that faith and liberality which characterized this ancient people of God.

The pious heart to-day loves the house of God, and pious hearts to-day, as of old, find expression for their devotion to God and their gratitude to Him in erecting, or in assisting to erect, church buildings to be dedicated to the service of God. Our church extension work is an important department of our mission work. The church builder follows the evangelist, and gathers up and secures and renders permanent the results of his labors. This is work, too, in which all the membership should engage—every man and every woman whose heart and whose spirit stirs him up so to do. These offerings should be given willingly, prompted by loving and grateful hearts.

The time is approaching when the churches will be called upon to lift their annual collection for this purpose. Let due preparation be made for it, and let it be regarded as an expression of faith and religious devotion. These church buildings where we meet for the worship of God are centers from which go out healing and life-giving streams for the moral health of the community and of the world. Around them are associated some of the most sacred memories of our lives. A church building in bad repair, unpainted, uncared for, is a reproach to any people, indicating not so much poverty in material resources as poverty of spirit, for loving and devoted hearts and hands will find some one to beautify and keep in order the house of God.

PRAYER.

O Thou who dwellest not in temples made with hands, but who dost take up thine abode in humble, contrite hearts, we thank Thee for Thy church, and for the congregations of devout believers who meet here and there all over the world where the gospel of thy grace has gone, to worship Thee. We thank Thee for the pious hearts and consecrated hands which have erected houses of worship to Thy honor and glory. We ask Thy blessing upon this department of our missionary work. Enlarge our hearts, O God, to the end that we may enlarge our gifts for Thy cause, and help us to be faithful in attending to the things that relate here to our houses of worship, until we shall be gathered into that city where there is no temple, and where we shall worship Thee with open vision forever, through Jesus Christ, our Lord. Amen!

OR

MACATAWA MUSINGS.

The midsummer days here at the Park seem to be passing all too rapidly. Long as they are they seem to be too short for all that we have to crowd into them. So, at least, it seems from the point of view of an editor. When will there ever be time enough to do all that we had planned and hoped to accomplish? Not, perhaps, until we have passed into that country of which it is said, "There is no night there," and "whose inhabitants never grow sick." We have had more rain than usual at the Park this summer, but at this writing the weather is all that could be desired. The population of the place still continues to increase with each coming vessel or train, and will continue to do so until August at least. The number of Disciples here is already quite large, and we hear of a number of others who are coming. Any of our members coming here will be apt to find a number of people that they have known either personally or by reputation. This is one of the delightful features of this place. It takes something in addition to natural attractions to make an ideal summer resort.

There are already several of our ministers here, and as some of them were to leave the latter part of this week it was decided to have a little picnic up on Black Lake, after our custom here, before any of them should depart. Yesterday afternoon a party consisting of the preachers present and their families, and numbering thirty-six, chartered the little steamer, "Lizzie Walsh," and steamed up the lake to Point Superior, a wooded peninsula that juts out into the lake, where we disembarked and spent the afternoon in the grove together in most delightful fellowship. A. M. Atkinson, W. F. Richardson, who is only spending a fortnight here this summer, J. W. Allen, J. J. Haley, J. Z. Tyler, J. S. Hughes, F. G. Tyrrell—and their families as far as they were present—together with the household at Edgewood-on-the-Lake, and a few other Disciples who were invited guests, made up the picnic. The little folkes were in evidence and enjoyed themselves to the utmost. The banquet spread under the oak trees left nothing to be desired. The site chosen for this picnic was the same as that used a year ago, where the plan for the first Congress of the Disciples of Christ was born. The weather was propitious and the ride back at seven o'clock, when the "Lizzie Walsh" called for us, down the beautiful little lake, whose placid waters were incarnadined with the rays of the setting sun, was something to live in memory. Songs, patriotic and religious, were sung and our little vessel reached the dock at Macatawa amid the strains of "Throw out the Life-line."

In a number of private letters which I have received the inquiry is made concerning the fishing. We have never known it better than the present year. Large numbers of black bass, white bass, croppie, or speckled bass, as they are called here, together with the lake perch and an occasional muskellunge, are being caught at the present time. As we value our veracity very highly, we rarely indulge in fish stories, but having a number witnesses we are emboldened to mention the following facts: To capture a muskellunge here is regarded as the acme of piscatorial ambition. In the ten summers in which the writer has been more or less fishing in these waters he had never caught a muskellunge. One afternoon this week, while fishing up in Black Lake, we—away with the editorial "we" in a case of this kind—I had the good fortune to hook a muskellunge and, what is far more difficult, to land him in the boat. He weighed on the scales a little over seven pounds, being thirty-two inches long. This was not a large muskellunge, but it was a large one to be caught with hook and line. This would have been glory enough for one day, but in addition to that we caught several large black bass, the largest of which weighed three pounds, making altogether the finest catch of the season, not in numbers, but in quality and size. I am authorized by Bros. Richardson, Tyler and Allen to say that they are willing to testify that they saw these fish and corroborate what is said as to their weight, but as to how they were caught, the deponents saith not, for they were not present. The remainder of the story will have to rest on the unsupported testimony of the writer and his assistant, who stood on the fish in the boat while we severed the spinal cord with a knife at the back of the head. Lest this story should draw hither all the disciples of Izaak Walton, it is only fair to state that this is the only muskellunge that we have heard of being caught the present season.

The sermon at the Auditorium last Sunday was preached by a Hebrew Christian, an ex-rabbi—Rev. Mr. Freuder. Mr. Freuder was a Jewish rabbi until about eight years ago, when he made up his mind to read the New Testament. He had not read far until he became alarmed and laid it aside, but being irresistibly drawn to it again he took it up and continued reading, laying it aside more than once lest he would have to forsake the religion of his fathers. Finally, however, he completed the book and confessed Jesus of Nazareth as the Messiah, uniting with the Congregational Church. He entered the Chicago Theological Seminary, took their full course and graduated as a Bachelor of Divinity and was ordained to the Christian ministry. He appears to be a sincere Christian, and is partly supported by the Congregational Church in his work among the Jews. His address on "The Hebrews of To-day," was greatly enjoyed by the congregation, and by special request he delivered an address on the following day in the Auditorium on the Jewish Talmud, which was also both interesting and instructive. The Sunday-school is doing well this year under the superintendency of Bro. Sorrick, of the Grand Rapids Church, an old hand at the business. The beach service in the evening was conducted by W. F. Richardson, of Kansas City, who made Moral Heroism the theme of the evening as illustrated by the Sunday-school lesson of the same day on the Three Hebrew Children. He and a number of others made stirring addresses on the topic before a shower dispersed the large congregation, which always attends these vesper services on the lakeshore.

As we have settled on Macatawa Park for a summer residence, and as we bring with us here our editorial work, we have found it necessary to provide better facilities for work in the form of a new editorial sanctum apart from the main cottage, after the manner of the Sage of Bethany. This semi-octagonal structure, 10x12, stands on the crest of the hill, south of our cottage, from which it is separated by only a few feet, and is surmounted by a flagstaff from which floats the Stars and Stripes. The corner windows, southwest and northwest, command a fine view of Lake Michigan. This addition is now receiving its last coat of paint, and will be ready for occupancy in a few days. We shall have a formal opening and a number of brethren on the grounds will be present to tell us how to run a religious paper. It is to be dedicated to religious journalism, and there will be "no admittance except on business."

We have had with us for a few weeks as a guest at "Edgewood-on-the-Lake," Miss Metta Dowling, of the Christian Publishing Co., associate editor, with her father, W. W. Dowling, of our Sunday-school series. She is greatly enjoying Macatawa Park, and we are greatly enjoying her company. She has taken to fishing like the rest of us, and already knows the difference between a black bass and a perch, and can bait her own hook and take off her own fish—a rare feminine accomplishment. She has much improved in health during her sojourn here, and we hope she will form the Macatawa habit and often resort hither.

Questions and Answers.

In notes on the Detroit (C. E.) Convention the Chicago Record reports that "Prof. R. G. Moulton, of the University of Chicago, caused something of a sensation by declaring the story of Joseph was only a pretty story, a piece of beautiful literature, and not a biblical story in any sense." Can you inform us (1), By what law of "higher criticism" a conclusion like this is reached? (2) If one such commonly accepted and reverently believed fact in Bible history is thus set aside as fiction, what ground is there for holding to any of the "biblical stories?"

W. P. Keeler.

Chicago, July 17, 1899.

We did not hear Prof. Moulton's lectures at Detroit, but we call in question the accuracy of the report of his lecture, as given above. It is not to be supposed that Prof. Moulton would say that the story of Joseph was "not a biblical story, in any sense." If he has made such a statement, it is for him to point out by what law of higher criticism or of lower criticism he has reached the conclusion. Let our querist ascertain, first, if Prof. Moulton ever made any such remark. The reports of the secular press, especially when they relate to biblical topics, are not to be relied upon as accurate.

Is there any difference in the true import of such New Testament phrases as, "Filled with the Holy Spirit," "Baptized with the Holy Spirit," "Overshadowed by the Holy Spirit," etc.? And do not all these expressions simply indicate that these persons spoken of were under the influence of the Holy Spirit?

The latter of the three phrases quoted above is used, we believe, only once in the New Testament, and refers to the miraculous conception of Jesus. The other two phrases "filled with the Holy Spirit" and "baptized in the Holy Spirit" seem to us to refer to the same spiritual fact, viz., the complete submergence of the human spirit in the divine, so that the former is under the control and guidance of the latter. It is held by some that the phrase "baptized in the Holy Spirit" is a technical one that describes the peculiar manifestation of the Holy Spirit at Jerusalem, on Pentecost, and at Cæsarea, in the household of Cornelius. There does not, however, seem to us to be sufficient proof that such is the case. We are not able to make any distinction between being "filled with the Holy Spirit" and being "baptized with the Holy Spirit." And yet it is perhaps true that neither of these phrases can be properly applied to any large per cent. of the church membership to-day, so far are we living beneath the privileges which we might enjoy.

Is it true that the Roman Catholic Church changed the mode of baptism from immersion to effusion; that this change was first permitted in cases of the sick, and afterwards was accepted as valid because adapted to the church in extremely cold climates? If so, where is it recorded in history?

Louis D. Biddell.

Springfield, Tenn.

It is hardly proper to say that the Roman Catholic Church, as we now understand that phrase, made this change. Sprinkling or pouring was allowed, in cases of sickness, at a time prior to the rise of what we call the Roman Catholic Church. It was limited to clinics, however, and was regarded as a bar to official position. Later in the history of the church, perhaps at the council of Ravenna, in the thirteenth century, or perhaps early in the fourteenth, this change was made legal. These facts may be found in any authentic church history.

Is there any foundation for the idea that any man is so constituted that his spiritual or better nature can reach such a state of fixedness in evil that God cannot or will not overcome such evil by the use of moral incentives?

W. H. T.

There seems to be a good foundation for the idea that God has made man the arbiter of his own destiny; that He endowed him with volition, that is, the power to choose between good and evil, and that He does not override man's freewill. There seems to be foundation, too, for the idea that some persons choose evil so often and so persistently that their moral nature becomes perverted, and that their sin hath no forgiveness neither in this world nor in the world to come, because they cannot be brought to repentance. It would have been better for Judas, says Christ, "if he had never been born." This could hardly be except that Judas had become so hardened in evil that his moral nature was impervious to moral incentives.

As the "disciple" simply means a learner, is it an appropriate name for the followers of Christ? Is it no ttrue that the first disciples were not Christians while they were mere disciples? C.

The word "disciple," etymologically considered, means a learner, as stated above, but as applied in the New Testament to those who followed Christ, it means more than that. It came to mean those who accepted Christ as their Lord and Master and submitted themselves to the life which He taught and exemplified. The great commission means more than to make learners of all nations. It means instruction and persuasion, resulting in the acknowledgment of Christ and commitment to Him as Savior and Lord. The disciples were Christians before they were called such. It was their character that suggested the name. Nor did they cease to be disciples when they were "called Christians." Both terms were used after this event, to designate Christ's followers, and they may now be so used.

Current Religious Thought

The New York Observer recently contained an editorial on "What is the Church?" in which the following important distinctions are made:

There is not a word in the whole New Testament about the High Church or the Low Church, or about the Protestant Church or the Roman Catholic Church. These names are the result of religious controversy. But the church which Christ loved, and for which he laid down his life, is far higher and far broader, and far more protestant, and far more catholic than some sects are willing to admit. It is the whole body of which Christ is the Head. It includes all of every name, who love the Lord Jesus Christ in sincerity.

This church has high and just claims upon all mankind. There have been periods in the history of the Christian Church when its claims were unduly exalted. At such times the church was made more conspicuous than Christ. The cry then was: "Cling to the church," which meant, of course, cling to the organization which was called the church. Dissent from priestly claims was not tolerated. Thus the blind led the blind, and the blind leaders rewarded their blind followers by furnishing them with passports to heaven.

That page of church history is both painful and instructive, but, nevertheless, attempts have been made to repeat it. Even now, there are intolerant and blind leaders who insist that rubrics, and thurifers, and oricutation, and a gaudy ceremonialism, and their possessions of miraculous power, are not only necessary adjuncts of true worship, but also that they are the sine qua non of the true church. During the dark and middle ages, when the Bible was chained and when, to the most of the clergy, as well as to the masses of the people, it was an unknown book, there was some excuse for such notions. But in this enlightened age, in this last year of the nineteenth century, such unscriptural and irrational teaching admits of no apology. Christ loved the church, but he does not express any love for rites and ceremonies. Indeed his severe condemnation of the rites and ceremonies that were so conspicuous in his day is more than suggestive. As for the apostles they would call such ecclesiastical appendages nothing but "beggarly elements."

Reformation of the Nineteenth Century

NINE DECADES OF HISTORY

THE TURBULENT PERIOD—XI.

Recapitulatory Survey.

W. T. MOORE.

LAW OF DEVELOPMENT.

All normal development is marked by certain well-defined successive steps. There is "first the blade, then the ear; after that the full corn in the ear." This is the course of all nature, whether in matter or mind, in politics or religion.

Our movement has already passed at least two of these periods. The "blade" period embraced the whole time from the beginning of the movement, in 1809, to the breaking out of the Civil War in 1861. As has already been estimated, the war changed nearly everything. It was a great iconoclastic invasion for the American people. It was especially so for the Disciples of Christ. They had been intensely aggressive in their evangelistic and proselyting efforts, though their methods had in them very little of regularity and their organization no compactness or consistency. Our movement seemed to have little or no direction for the first fifty years. Our success seems to have depended upon the potency of the principles we advocated rather than in any wisdom of management or co-operation. It was a huge locomotive, under full steam, let loose upon the track, without engineer or conductor. It was a great power, but it was largely a power without direction, or any competent generalship to guide it to definite and permanent results.

The first year of the sixth decade of the present century was the beginning of the new era for the Disciples of Christ. Extraordinary ends require extraordinary means. The change for which our movement was ready, and which was absolutely essential in order to its full development, required a great social, political and religious upheaval, like that which was produced by the Civil War. The war was, therefore, a sort of forerunner, proclaiming the new and better days for the movement.

These new days were not fully inaugurated until after the death of Mr. Campbell, but the first half of the decade under consideration was full of the seeds of things for later growth. These were the days of sowing for the missionary and literary harvest of the present time. Or, to keep up the figure with which we began this chapter, these were the days of corn formation, while now we have the full corn in the ear.

In looking back over these prolific five years, it is impossible to measure their influence upon subsequent events. It is safe, however, to say that they distinctly mark a turning-point in the history of the Disciples. When the war spirit had somewhat died away, we were no longer belligerent as in ante-bellum times. We had ceased to be insular in our conception of duty, while we immediately began to have cosmopolitan ideas. Out of this broader and more comprehensive spirit the Foreign Missionary Society was born, ten years later.

THE EFFECT OF MR. CAMPBELL'S DEATH.

It is worthy of remark that the death of Mr. Campbell had exactly the opposite effect of what had been predicted by the enemies of the movement. These were constantly saying that the movement was held together mainly by Mr. Campbell's strong personalty and that when he was held together mainly by Mr. Campbell's strong personality, and that when he was gone, rival leaders would arise and the churches would rapidly degenerate into contending factions, and thus the whole movement would soon fall to pieces.

But these critics all proved to be false prophets. Nothing that they predicted has happened. Much of a very different kind began to be manifested almost immediately after the sage of Bethany went to his rest. Indeed, the preparation for this change had been going on through the five years prior to his death. As soon as Mr. Campbell's health gave way, it was recognized everywhere that the movement had no earthly leader. It was impossible for any one to take Mr. Campbell's place. Indeed, there was none able to do it; but even if there had been, no one would have followed the new leader. As a matter of fact the movement never had a leader after 1866. Some have supposed that Isaac Errett did, in a certain sense, become the leader of the movement, under the new conditions. But this is not true. The new conditions made a leader unnecessary. It was precisely this fact that wrought disappointment to the false prophets who had predicted so much evil for the movement when Mr. Campbell was to be no longer a part of it.

It is interesting to notice what this state of things was and how it was brought about. There has been perhaps nothing more important in the history of the Disciples than the conjunction of forces which operated at this particular point. A brief statement will be sufficient to explain everything.

It must not be forgotten that the eyes of the Disciples were already turned toward a more compact organization and a wider field of operations. This all came with the close of the war. Up to the beginning of the war, they had looked mainly to Mr. Campbell for all the leadership which they desired. But their experience demonstrated that even under his leadership, they were not as strong as they ought to be for the great work of saving the world.

But when at last they lost their leader, they began at once to realize that what they needed was not a new leadership, but a more definite co-operation and a more consecrated life. Hence, instead of dividing, as the false prophets had predicted, they were practically driven closer together by the death of Mr. Campbell. They sought in organization and comprehensive work to find compensation for the loss of the great man upon whom they had so long relied for direction.

However, it ought to be stated with considerable emphasis, that Mr. Campbell himself had always repudiated any distinct leadership for himself of the movement; and this view, in theory at least, was strongly held by most of the Disciples. Consequently, on this account, if for no other reason, it was easy for our people generally to accept the new situation, especially in view of the fact that organization, and more comprehensive educational, literary, and missionary enterprises were what was needed rather than the leadership of men.

It is perfectly true that a number of men contributed to the new order of things, and did much to emphasize its importance; and it would perhaps be difficult to determine exactly which one of these men did most to help on the new movement. Isaac Errett, as editor of the Christian Standard, had a distinct advantage over others, and no one admires the work he did more than myself; and yet it would be difficult to trace any of the new enterprises, which followed the year 1961, back to Isaac Errett's initiative. Like as when a planet has been discovered, or some great scientific problem has been solved, the candid historian will find that a number of men were almost equally responsible for the new order of things among the Disciples of Christ; at least they all had their telescopes pointed in the same direction, or were all working at the same problem; nevertheless, these men were themselves, in their thought of progress, largely the creation of the war period. So that, after all, the final result came from a conjunction of planets rather than from any single cause or single man. This, I am persuaded, will be the verdict of history, when the facts are impartially examined.

THE LAW OF RIGHTEOUSNESS.

JAS. O. CARSON.

In his address before the High Court on Mars' Hill, the Apostle Paul discoursed of the great themes of "sin, of righteousness and of judgment," the same themes he discussed with so much power and effect before the Roman Governor, and the same which Jesus said the Holy Spirit would discuss before the world. These are subjects of transcendent moment to man, involving as they do his present relation to God and to his fellowman, as also his eternal destiny for happiness or misery in the world to come, as it will be the office of the Judge who will preside over the court of final adjudication of the lives of men, to examine into and determine by which of these elements or powers the life of each man who ever lived upon the earth has been controlled, and upon this decision fix his eternal destiny in the world to come.

From this condition of sin, this law of righteousness and this tribunal of final adjudication, there is neither exemption nor escape. This, probably, will not be accepted by those who entertain the idea that idolators on account of ignorance will not be judged in the final day by the law of righteousness, as will be those of the more enlightened world. This idea is largely begotten, we fear, by a desire to avoid responsibility for the present and eternal well-being of these people, and hence entertained by Christian philanthropists who think—

"Where ignorance is bliss
'Tis folly to be wise."

In this address before the High Court of idolators the apostle declared with unmistakable emphasis that idolatry is inexcusable before God, and gave reasons for so declaring, at the same time "calling upon all men everywhere to turn away from these practices, BECAUSE God has appointed a day in the which he will judge the world—these same 'all men everywhere'—respecting righteousness, according to the man whom he appointed;" giving "assurance" to these "all men" of a future state of being and consequent future judgment, in that God had raised this appointed one from the dead, and that the "Prince of this world had been judged."

Thus it was clearly stated by the Apostle Paul that there is to be one final judgment-day for all men; that the subject of inquiry on that day will be "righteousness according to Jesus Christ," as this righteousness will have been present or absent in the life of every man who will appear before the Judge on that day.

What, then, it may be asked, is righteousness? The answer is: It is the constitutional principle in the government of God on the earth. It is the acceptance by man and the incorporation by him as an active principle of his life, of the Deity, oneness and sovereignty of God, by virtue of the relation of the universe to him as its Creator and Benefactor, and the same full and cordial acceptance, as a like active principle in his life, of the fact of the oneness of the human race and the consequent obligation of men, one to the other, for the mutual well-being of the whole.

This principle of righteousness expressed in legal form by God's ordained teachers and confirmed by Jesus Christ is this: "Jehovah is one God — thou shalt love Jehovah, thy God, with the whole of thy soul, with the whole of thy heart, with the whole of thy mind and with the whole of thy strength; and thy neighbor as thyself." Concerning the last clause of this law Jesus said, "It is like unto the first." That is, it emanates from the same supreme authority and, like the first, is an element in the constitutional principle upon which the divine government on the earth proceeds, and therefore indispensable.

But notwithstanding this declaration of Jesus, the objection is urged against the law of righteousness, that the second clause is not possible of fulfillment. That while it may be possible in exceptional instances for one man to "love another as himself," it is not possible in the universal application. But why, may I ask, is not the same objection urged against the first clause of the law? Is this clause more easy of fulfillment than the second? Is it easier to love God, whom you have not seen, than your brother, whom you have seen?

These objectors ought to know, however, that their objection is being refuted every day by men and women who, impelled by no other motive than love for God and their fellowman, are fulfilling the whole of this law by feeding the hungry, clothing the naked, caring for the widow and destitute orphan, opening the blind eye of ignorance, the deaf ear of prejudice, and in sending the gospel of the grace of God to the ends of the earth. Moreover, they seem not to realize that their objection is a reflection on the wisdom and justice of God. It is to say that God has put man under a law that it is not possible for him to fulfill, at the same time holding him accountable for his failure.

The objection has no foundation except on the false assumption that God demands perfect obedience of man, as perfection is measured by his own infinite perfection. This is as untrue and objectionable as the objection itself. There is, however, a perfection which God demands which is measured and determined, not by infinite perfection, but by the desire, opportunity, ability and effort to do on the part of him who is under the law. This is God's standard of perfection for man.

But that we may possess in our minds and hearts a deeper and more serious realization of our obligations and responsibilities under the law of righteousness, we need but consider what God proposes to accomplish by man through righteousness. This is no less than to banish sin, and thereby restore the divine sovereignty over the earth.

In contemplating a responsibility of such magnitude and infinite consequences, man ought to stand in awe of himself and tremble in his own presence.

But in the bewildering magnitude of the work committed to them, and the corresponding obligations and responsibilities which attach to it men and women who are willing and anxious to work in the Lord's vineyard become perplexed and bewildered. They see so much to do immediately about them, among their own kindred, friends and neighbors, at the same time have so many and urgent demands for help from larger and far distant fields, that they become confused and hesitate where to expend their energies and their means in the great work. To these we say, follow the divine command and precedent. The command is: "Go into all the world and preach the gospel to every creature." Beginning at Jerusalem, on through Judea, Samaria and still on unto the ends of the world. Tarry not by the way. Tarry not till all the people in these districts accept the gospel. "Since you esteem yourselves unworthy of eternal life, I turn to the Gentiles," said Paul. The command and the duty is to go into all the world, and as you go, preach the gospel, preach it to every creature. When the obligation has been fulfilled in one field, duty calls to another. In such cases the greater need determines the action. All men stand in the same relation, each to the other and to God. "God has made of one flesh all nations who dwell on the earth," and hence "all ye are brethren;" and the obligation to preach the gospel to all men is the same, but the duty is not always the same. The deeper the depth of degradation, the greater need for the elevating influences of the gospel; the more dense the ignorance, the greater need for light; the stronger the fetters of superstition and idolatry, the greater the power needful to break them.

But the means must be adequate for the work to be accomplished, and individual effort, nor yet individual church effort, is not adequate for the work. As an individual member of the human body has certain functions to perform in and for the body, of which it is a member, so also individual members of individual churches have certain duties to perform for the church of which they are members. The same is true of the individual church in its relation to the whole organization. But the church, in its entirety, as the body of Christ, is the sole and only power fully organized and equipped for the great work of taking the gospel to the ends of the earth and preaching it to every creature.

And this it will do when Christian men and women awake to the fact that the "righteousness" which they profess to live, and by which they expect to be judged in the great day, looks manward as well as Godward.

St. Louis, May, 1899.

Charles E. Garst.

Mr. Garst was a liberal man. He had strong views on many subjects, yet he was always glad to offer even those who held the opposite view opportunity to express themselves.

He was a man of great sympathy. No one was sick or suffering but what received a word of encouragement from him. "He suffers more for me than I suffer for myself." "He seems my peculiar friend." On his trips through the empire he never neglected sending words of greeting to his friends and fellow-workers. They always knew of his success and felt that he was one of the family, as it were.

He was very fond of God's Word. On our last trip he was continually reading his Bible in the Japanese translation. He marked it well and loved to dwell on its beautiful passages. As a consequence his preaching was scriptural. He spoke in the words of the old prophets.

"My waking and my sleeping thoughts have been of righteousness." These are the words which he uttered just before he passed to the other world. If ever a man spent himself for righteousness, that man was Chas. E. Garst. His ideal was righteousness and his "eternal hope" was to "be clothed with the righteousness of God." "My life is my message," were the words which he used in answer to the question whether or not he had anything more to say. A glorious message. One that we are all proud of and one which speaks with great power for the "righteousness of God." To us who are to take up the work which he so nobly began this message speaks words of encouragement and sympathy. To us he leaves the pattern of a victorious life. He strove and succeeded against great odds. We, too, if we follow him wherein he followed Christ, will succeed. To the brethren in America it speaks in words of command. "Turn not back till this glorious conquest is ended." The desire for more missionary graves, expressed some years ago, is fast being gartified. Japan is sealed to Christ by the blood of two martyrs. Mrs. G. T. Smith, who lies at rest in the lonely grave at Akita, and Chas. E. Garst, who pillows his head beneath the sod of "Aoyama."

When I looked in his face for the last time, the first time to receive no welcome smile, I thought on the inscrutable mystery of death. Do we play our little part and pass forever from the stage of existence? Does life end on this "bank and shoal of time?" What means the funeral oration and the lying epitaph if life ends at the grave? We strain to catch the answer of the spirit-world and an angel whispers in our ears, "There is no death!" But oh, how lonely we are without thee, thou friend of all the years. Thou hast gone to join the quire innumerable of the immortal dead who sing in heavenly strains around the "great white throne." We must tread without thee "this lower way" amidst tho tempest and the shine. Torn by the wayside brier and tired from the weary journey, we hope to meet thee on the shores celestial in the better world. H. H. GUY.

Tokyo, Japan, Jan. 1, 1899.

Our Budget.

—Interest in the Jubilee Convention is growing.

—Substantial facts justify our enthusiasm.

—City evangelization is to be one of the leading phases of Home Mission work in the future.

—Our churches cannot afford to be indifferent to the cause of Christian education.

—The many interests of the C. W. B. M. and their wise management commands the admiration of our entire brotherhood.

—Colleges can become self-existing only by being sufficiently endowed. Once endowed they are no longer a financial burden to the church.

—Higher Criticism has stimulated rather than retarded the study of the Holy Scriptures. Not one of the foundations of God has been or can be removed by higher or any other kind of criticism.

—It is with pleasure that we give so much space this week to the interests of the Christian Woman's Board of Missions. We trust the sisters throughout the country will rally to their silver anniversary cry, "Ninety thousand dollars and ninety thousand women for '99." This is not impossible if the sisterhood resolves to make it so.

—The church at Fredericksburg, Va., now has about money enough to finish their new house, but need $300 for furnishings. It has cost them great effort to raise the $1,200 necessary to transform their old church. It has come in small amounts from all over the country and the $300 now needed for furnishings must be raised in the same way. The General Board is assisting in maintaining the pastor, Cephas Shelburne, at this point, and the magnanimous thing is to send in $300 needed for house furnishings. The church will then be equipped for aggressive work in that historic city.

—Last week we gave much space to information pertaining to our Jubilee Convention, to be held in Cincinnati, October 12-20. This week we are almost equally liberal to our C. W. B. M.—so much so that this might well be called a C. W. B. M. number. The literature was furnished by Mrs. Helen E. Moses, the secretary of the C. W. B. M. Bible Chair work; it is on the historic line and will be found instructive and interesting. The leading article briefly recounts their work in the foreign field, while C. A. Young, their field lecturer and institute man, tells of their Bible Chair work at Ann Arbor and other places. Sister Pounds has a short article on Junior work, while others tell of what the C. W. B. M. have done in the home field. Remember that the C. W. B. M. will celebrate their silver anniversary in connection with the Jubilee Anniversary of the A. C. M. S. at the October convention in Cincinnati.

—The annual address at the June meeting of the Victoria Institute, in London, was delivered by the Rt. Hon. Sir Richard Temple, Bart., F. R. S., whose review of the investigations and research now going on in Asia attracted much attention. He described his researches and those of an exploring society of which he was a leading member, in Egypt, Palestine and elsewhere; he had not only identified numerous sites mentioned in the Bible, but had examined them in connection with the events mentioned in that Book, and he had constantly found that the more credit for accuracy one gave to its narrative, the greater was one's success in appreciating the events and localities described. He added that research on the spot was a sure aid to successful investigation. One conclusion he had come to was that with the exception of Christianity, all religions ignored the scientific spirit, and ran dead against it.

—In this C. W. B. M. number of the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST we are able to give an excellent half-tone picture of Mrs. O. A. Burgess, the president of this great department of our missionary interests and work. Mrs. Burgess has been connected with the work of the Christian Woman's Board of Missions from its beginning in 1874. Although she was not present at the organization in Cincinnati, she was chosen treasurer of the work, and has remained in its service constantly. In October, 1890, she was chosen president, and in that office has served its interests most faithfully. The trusted counselor and loyal helper of her honored husband, his knowledge of men and affairs gave breadth and depth to her character and convictions, and has enabled her to see closely and plan wisely for the missionary interests committed to her care. Her home in Indianapolis is the home of Christ's messengers as they come and go on his errands, and all she is and has is consecrated to his service.

—About twelve of our papers gave large space to the Jubilee Convention last week. This is certain to increase the enthusiasm which is already very high.

—Brother McCollough, of Hiram College, has been selected as supply pastor for the Richmond St. Church, Cincinnati, and has entered upon his work, that its pastor, Bro. J. N. Green, may give his entire time to thorough preparation for the assignment of the hosts that will soon gather at the great Jubilee.

—Twenty thousand copies of Bulletin No. 1, with information about the Jubilee Convention, have been sent out from Cincinnati, and Bulletin No. 2 will be issued next week.

—In another part of this paper will be found an unusually liberal proposition from Prof. Robt. Graham, of Lexington, Ky., in relation to a large amount of the literature of our people which he has gathered about him during his ministerial life. We trust that such as is offered for the transportation will fall into proper hands and that which is offered for a price on the condition stipulated will not long await a purchaser. Here is an opportunity for doing good, many ways, by the same act.

—We have received announcement of the Kansas Christian College for 1899-1900. Eight professors are announced in the faculty with Aaron Prince Aten, A. M., president. The collegiate year begins on the first Monday in September. Females are admitted to all of the privileges and literary degrees of the college. The location of this institution at Harper, Kan., ought to secure liberal patronage from Oklahoma as well as from Kansas. This is the only institution for higher education of both sexes under the control of our people in all that great territory, and we hope for it a prosperous school year and greatly increased usefulness in its promising future career.

—The Herald and Presbyter says: "Those who think that they are possessed of small incomes and cramped in their living may do well to consider that even in this great rich country of ours most people have comparatively small incomes." If there is any consolation in this advice it must be on the ground that "misery loves company." Certainly, there is nothing inspiring, encouraging or hopeful in the statement. That nine per cent. of the people of the United States own 71 per cent. of its wealth is not a very beautiful figure to contemplate. It is rather calculated to make the spirit of man acrimonious than sweet. It is not that so few people possess so much wealth that hurts, but that 91 per cent. of the families of the United States are reduced to a state of industrial helplessness. This is the appalling feature of the question. But there will be a better industrial system some day, whereby wealth will be more equally and justly distributed in the nation. This is our hope and our consolation.

—The gain of nearly $1,300 in receipts for the American Christian Missionary Society last week indicates the rising tide of interest in our Jubilee offering. The receipts for the week ending July 22nd were $2,076.95. We urge all our churches and Endeavor Societies to have fellowship in this great work. Please remit promptly that others may be encouraged by your example, and thus we may "provoke one another to good works."

—The Ladies' Aid Society of the Broadway Christian Church, Louisville, Ky., will run an excursion to Cincinnati for the convention in October, going by river. The rate will be $1.50 for the round trip, transportation only. Meals and berths extra. Tickets will be good to return any time during the convention, or to remain until the very last session.

—A committee of Bethany ladies are seeking to interest the young ladies of our churches in the refurnishing of Phillips Hall, the ladies' boarding hall of Bethany College. The young ladies of a church are asked to raise $30 to refurnish one room. Smaller sums will also be thankfully received. The committee hopes in this way to have the hall in first-class order by the time the college opens, Sept. 18. A number of contributions have already been received, and some have promised to send gifts in time to have the work done before the college opens. Mrs. L. K. Woolery, Bethany, W. Va., will gladly send particulars to those willing to help.

—We desire to call special attention to "A Call to Prayer" from J. A. Lord, chairman of the American Christian Missionary Society and Benj. L. Smith, corresponding secretary, elsewhere in this paper. Unless we assemble at Cincinnati in the strength of Israel's God our meeting will be in vain. Our own strength alone will avail nothing. Let this call to prayer be heeded and the entire church go down upon its knees in devout supplication for divine guidance, for abounding grace and for results that will glorify his name.

—Our friend and brother, J. S. Huges, has been digging still deeper into the study of the Book of Revelation, and of its author, the Apostle John. He has found it to be so rich a mine that he cannot resist the temptation to go deeper down into its treasures. He has now prepared a little work on "The Visions of Patmos," which is intended to serve as sort of an introduction to his "Mystery of the Golden Cloth," and to give a historic setting for the Book of Revelation. See his advertisement elsewhere. We trust that many of our readers will avail themselves of his special offer.

—It will be seen from a letter in this paper, from the pen of W. P. Aylesworth, that Cotner University is about to step out from under the cloud of debt that has so long threatened its existence. This will be good news to all the friends of Cotner and also of our educational institutions. Deliverance has come to them slowly and in some instances from unexpected quarters, and its board of trustees and president now hope for a complete rescue of the university from debt. Not enough money has yet been received, but according to Bro. Aylsworth's letter a united effort on the part of the brotherhood in Nebraska and elsewhere will raise the required amount, and in this we hope there will be no disappointment. The school year will open as usual, but with increased brightness and courage.

—A special dispatch to the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST from Benj. L. Smith, Cor. Sec., Cincinnati, O., informs us that the Margaret Oliver Memorial Fund has given five thousand dollars to the American Christian Missionary Society for Home Missions. This is getting somewhat exciting. Surely we are going to reach the $100,000 mark before the Jubilee Convention. Who will be the next to give the the cause of Home Missions such a lift? There are others able and willing, and now is the day of salvation. Do not harden your hearts.

—The dates October 12-20 for the Jubilee Convention in Cincinnati include a reception at the Central Christian Church on the evening of the 12th and sightseeing on the 20th. The dates of the convention sessions proper are 13-19, but the 12th and 20th must not be overlooked.

—The plans for the Ecumenical Conference on Foreign Missions, to be held in New York City next spring, are being advanced, and everything indicates a most successful conference. The cordial co-operation of the missionary societies of Great Britain has been secured as well as that of societies upon the Continent, and the hearty welcome given in London and Edinburgh to the Rev. Judson Smith, D. D., secretary of the American board, who visited those places in the interest of the conference, indicates that those societies are willing to assume all needful responsibility and assist in every possible way and that there will be a full attendance of delegates. A special committee has been appointed of gentlemen representing the different societies, and including such men as the Rev. R. Wardlaw Thompson, Eugene Stock, Rev. Alexander Connell, A. H. Baynes, Rev. James Buchanan, Rev. John M'Murtrie, Walter B. Sloan and others, who will act in connection with the American committee in securing the best men to take part in the conference. Copies of the prospectus of this conference can be had from Ecumenical Conference secretaries, 156 Fifth Avenue, New York City.

—The male portion of the human family no longer monopolizes the club business. The women now propose to assert rights which, heretofore, were supposed to belong only to the male persuasion. "The Progressive Women of America" is the name of a new woman's club which promises to become a great social factor in their ranks. At present the headquarters of this organization are in Minneapolis, Minn., and Effie W. Merriman, director. This club started one year ago, was first thought of in connection with women living on farms, who were deprived of many of the advantages which fall to the lot of women in the cities, but it was finally so planned as to take in any woman who wished to join. It is composed of circles formed wherever seven interested women happen to live. It now has nineteen circles representing fifteen states and numbering about three hundred members. This club is undenominational, educational and altruistic. All circles are under the direction of one officer, known as the club director, who assigns topics for discussion at the regular monthly meetings. It is proposed to make this club a great help to women along educational and altruistic lines and we see no reason why they may not succeed in this work or why the men should object. Self-culture is not an exclusive privilege.

—The manufacture spends a thousand dollars on his machines keeping them up to the maximum of efficiency, but why should he spend almost nothing on the machinery of labor? At the Paris Exposition in 1900 the U. S. Commission, under the direction of Ferdinand W. Peck, Commissioner General, will exhibit in the department of social economy whatever is done by employers to improve the working staff. The director of the department of education and social economy is Howard J. Rogers; the assistant director is Richard Waterman, Jr. The co-operation of the league for social service has been secured to collect material in the section devoted to "Movements for Improving Industrial and Social Conditions," Dr. Josiah Strong, president of the league, and Dr. W. H. Tolman, secretary, having been appointed special agents in that department. This material will be interpreted by means of monographs, presenting a word-picture of existing industrial conditions, and will show what is being done to improve them. Photographs are particularly desired, because they will be made into lantern slides, and by means of a device will be shown in sets of four, with a fifth slide explaining in French and English the other four. An appeal is made to the national pride of all the employers to co-operate with the department of social economy so that the exhibit from the United States may be worthy of Americe, and show the world that our manufacturers are interested in the well-being of their employees. Any communication may be sent to the League of Social Service, special agent, No. 105 East 22nd Street, New York City, and a form will be sent covering the few points on which the information is desired.

—Christian College, Columbia, Mo., is to have new college buildings added to its present equipment to the amount of $80,000. This great work has been undertaken by two women, Mrs. W. T. Moore and Mrs. L. W. St. Clair, the present principals of Christian College. The buildings in contemplation are to replace the old structures, but will not be completed until 1901, at which time the college will celebrate its fiftieth anniversary. The new dormitory, however, is to be completed by the opening of the fall term. Since the publication of the annual catalogue of this college it has been found necessary to add another teacher to the already large corps of instructors in the department of music, and for this work the services of Prof. Arnold E. Guerne have been secured. The new life imparted to this school by these two women certainly commands our highest admiration and ought to put to shame some of the feeble efforts made to redeem other of our colleges from depletion and death.

—Will W. W. Powell and W. H. Boles each please tell us where to direct a letter so as to reach them? We have a letter for each in our care at this office.

—Jno. Carr, Geo. F. Kern, R. A. Smith and C. C. Dobson are making a canvass of Indiana in the interest of Butler College. They also represent the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST and other publications of the Christian Publishing Co. Butler College and the Christian Publishing Co. are two great educational institutions and we trust the brethren of Indiana will take full advantage of the present opportunity to show their appreciation of this fact.

—The receipts for Foreign Missions for the week ending July 19th were $2,873.09; gain, $8,902.08. Last year we received an annuity of $9,690. This year no annuity. Without the annuity we have a gain of $787.92. The receipts to date amount to $123,511.34. We must receive $26,488.66 by Sept. 30th if we reach the $150,000. Remember, we are to send four new missionaries to Cuba in October; four to Japan in September; one to China in September. This will be nine new workers, which will require a large increase in the receipts. We must reach the $150.000. We are able to do it. F. M. RAINS, Treas.
Box 884, Cincinnati, O.

—We are never disappointed in finding something of interest when we see the name of J. Fraise Richard attached to an article, and our readers will find this especially true in a bit of news and comments from his pen in this paper. We wonder what our Baptist readers will have to say about it.

—We had supposed that defenders of sprinkling for Christian baptism had about tired of quoting Ez. 36:25 in support of their unscriptural position, but it seems not. In the News-Journal, of Newcastle, Wyo., A. Sanders gives the correct interpretation of this Scripture for the sake of truth and the enlightenment of some of the citizens of that mountainous country. It is our opinion, however, that the majority of those who practice sprinkling have little regard for the real meaning of the Scriptures on the subject of baptism. They have simply made up their minds to adhere to the custom of their fathers regardless of sound exegesis, and so are keeping silence, as a rule, on the subject.

—The June meeting of the Disciples of Christ in Prince Edward County, Canada, held at West Lake, June 24, 25, is reported in the Christian Messenger to have been an exceedingly profitable meeting.

—Without controversy great is the mystery of pastoral indifference toward the circulation of church papers.

—We have the following unsigned articles recently received at this office: "Notes from Kingman, Kan.," "To Christian Endeavorers" and "Western Montana." The letter purports to be an account of the Montana Christian convention held at Corvalis.

—Enough money has been raised in Texas to insure the opening of Add-Ran University on the first Wednesday in September. Improvements on the building to the amount of $3,500 have been ordered and other immediate contingencies provided for. The reports show about $8,495 now available and the solicitation will be continued.

—The initial letters, B. N. E. E., in the official title to the name of C. C. Smith, the writer of one of our jubilee articles in our Jubilee number last week were attached thereto in this office and not by the writer, but the error will help to remind the brotherhood of the fact that N. E. E. is still a department of our Home Mission work, though no longer under a separate board. C. C. Smith is now associate corresponding secretary of the American Christian Missionary Society.

—The old mortgaged indebtedness of the church at Joplin, Mo., is paid, and during the first week in August its members and friends expect to hold a jubilee service, burn the mortgage and give a reception to the 70 new members received since Jan. 1.

—Robt. G. Ingersoll's attacks on Christianity were marked by a superficiality of thought and a general ignorance of the Bible. He seems to have possessed some commendable traits of character, being a kind-hearted husband and father, and his sympathies were generally with the unfortunate and the needy, but measured by any rational standard his life must be pronounced in the main a failure, because it was dominated by wrong principles and aims.

—The "Spiritualists" seem to be making a great noise about Robt. G. Ingersoll's death. They seem to be hard pressed for new evidences in support of their claims. Their cause must be getting into desperate straits.

—The CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST, we observe, is offered to new subhcribers on trial from July 1, 1899, to January 1, 1900, for fifty cents, two-thirds the regular rate, and the regular rate is only about one-half the price usually charged for papers of its class. The issues of this six months will contain the letters of Prof. Garrison during his wheeling tour through Europe, in addition to the endless variety of other matters of interest. Such an offer ought to add 20,000 to the subscription list.

—The question before us now is, What can we do to re-establish, or perhaps establish for the first time, civilization in Cuba? Whatever political future the country shall have, it is very certain that it will never again be a Spanish community, and whatever political relations it may have with the United States, it will be finally, in its industrial conditions, in its social order, in its educational structure, American. Cuba will be American, whether it flies our flag or not.

The above words from Lyman Abbott are words of truth and soberness and practically places the future of Cuba at the feet of the Christian people of this nation. We cannot evade the responsibility. Cuba needs relief work, industrial regeneration, schools and the gospel of our Lord and Savior Jesus Christ, and for these blessings she is depending almost solely upon the United States. Not alone through its political offices, but through the missionary and philanthropic spirit of the Christian people of the nation as well.

—In view of an effort about to be made in the state of New York to secure medical treatment for sick people in the hands of Christian Scientists the Observer makes the following pertinent although somewhat severe suggestion:

It is not necessary for Christian Scientists to take the trouble to evade such a law. If they are right they can permit the doctors to do their worst on themselves and their friends. All they will need to do will be to persuade their friends that even if they have to submit to medical treatment it cannot hurt them so long as they believe there is neither matter nor disease. A sick Christian Scientist can get well in spite of the doctors, drugs and devils.

—A correspondent, of Chicago, sends us the following clipping from one of the local suburban papers of that city, with request for its appearance in our columns, because of its correct presentation of the facts:

Rev. E. A. Cantrell, pastor of the Church of Christ since last December, tendered his resignation at last Sunday morning's service, to take effect the first of November. The action of the pastor was unexpected except by the board of officers of the church, who were aware of his intentions. No action is necessary, as Rev. Cantrell resigned unconditionally. The stories current that a division of the church is pending are entirely without foundation. Rev. Cantrell is a very fine Christian gentleman, highly educated, but his views are somewhat too liberal to be strictly in accord with the teachings and views of the Christian Church. He has made many warm friends since his pastorate here, who will be sorry that he cannot continue with them, but no feeling but one of harmony exists in the hearts of the four hundred members of this church. Rev. Cantrell's intention is to continue his search for knowledge by a course at the University of Chicago, later going to Germany to study in the University of Berlin.

—The governor of Texas, Sayers, has displayed commendable moral courage in his negative reply to the Galveston Athletic Association's request for an official permit to pull off a glove contest for the benefit of the Texas flood sufferers. Here is the governor's reply as given by special dispatch to the press of this city:

Without intending to be rude or offensive, I answer your question most emphatically, "No." Such an exhibition would, in my judgment, be a clear violation of the statute and should not receive the countenance of any law-abiding citizen, whatever its purposes. Though governor, the law is as binding upon me as upon the citizen, and my consent, even if I were so unwise as to give it, would not avail you against a criminal prosecution. If such an exhibition should be had, I would feel it my duty to most vigorously prosecute all engaged in it.

—Not a few persons, including some preachers, seem to think that the attitude of all Christian people toward Higher Criticism should be that of uncompromising hostility. And yet these same people are almost daily utilizing the results of Higher Criticism in some form, phase or department. In speaking on this subject recently the Observer, of this city, recently very truthfully said:

It is a fact of which many are unaware that a good proportion of the results of biblical criticism has already become a part of the common knowledge of the people. Many theories have been accepted which twenty years ago were rejected with heat and passion. It is no uncommon thing to encounter, in the most unexpected quarters, the results of Higher Criticism. It is amusing to hear a preacher denounce criticism in one breath and unconsciously use it in the next. We are daily accepting views of science, philosophy and religion which we profess to repudiate. Is it not time for enlightened Christians to stop warring against what they do not understand? We believe that the best interests of religion demand that we should accept the undisputed results of the best scholarship.

—The following words of the Countess of Aberdeen, president of the great Quinquennial Coucil of Women which met in London, June 26, might safely be labeled wise words:

It may be well to have unions of mothers, but do the fathers count so little in the home that their counsel is not needed? The redemption of the race can only be compassed by men and women joining hands and making common cause in every department of life.

"In Union There is Strength."

True strength consists in the union, the harmonious working together, of every part of the human organism. This strength can never be obtained if the blood is impure. Hood's Sarsaparilla is the standard prescription for purifying the blood.

PERSONAL MENTION.

R. H. Waggener seems to be in great demand for convention speeches.

Rumor has it that several of our stronger Missouri churches have designs on B. F. Clay, Kansas City.

O. P. McMahan, Blackwell, Ok., has resigned his work there and will probably take a pastorate in Kentucky.

Geo. H. Combs, of Kansas City, made the opening prayer of the Omaha "Greater America Exposition."

C. R. Neel, formerly of Chicago, Ill., is now supplying the pulpit of the First Christian Church in Rochester, N. Y.

P. V. Pope and wife, of DuQuoin, Ill., have gone to Macatawa Park, Mich., for a month's vacation.

C. C. Redgrave, pastor of the church in Esther ville, Iowa, seems to be making a successful use of the stereopticon in connection with his sermons.

Beginning Aug. 1, G. E. Sellers, of Emporia, will conduct an arbor meeting at Havensville, Kan., where W. M. Mayfield ministers.

F. G. Roberts, territorial evangelist for Indian Territory, desires correspondence with "a good, first-class" singing evangelist. Address him at Vinita, I. T.

J. P. McKnight and wife, of Peoria, Ill., have arrived at Macatawa Park, and have taken "Eidelweis" cottage, which they occupied once before.

J. Z. Tyler requests that all correspondence relating to the Bethany C. E. Reading Courses, or other matters, be addressed to him at Macatawa, Mich., P. O. Box 124.

J. H. Stone will not be able to continue his work for the church at Lyons, O., for financial reasons, and the elders of the church heartily commend him to any church in need of a pastor.

H. C. Patterson writes hopefully of his work in Webb City, Mo. Everything along church lines seem to be on the boom. Crowded houses, good collections and general prosperity.

R. A. Hopper, who has gone from Bernardino to Escondido, Cal., writes that his health has greatly improved and that he hopes to be able to do full work soon, He will try the work at Escondido.

During the closing week of the 13th session of the Kentucky Assembly, Zack Sweeney delivered his lecture on "Bottom Facts." This is Brother Sweeney's second lecture at this session of this Kentucky Chautuaqua.

F. O. Fannon, pastor First Christian Church, this city, has gone to Mackinac, Mich., for a month's rest and recuperation. The church will take advantage of his absence to become acquainted with other of the city preachers.

In the Christian Endeavor World's unique report of the Endeavor Convention at Detroit, the addresses of A. McLean, of Cincinnati, and H. L. Willett, of Chicago, are very highly complimented.

Dr. W. T. Moore, dean of the Bible School, Columbia, will preach special sermons at the annual roll call of the New Franklin Church, of which G. F. Assister is pastor, Aug. 6. The New Franklin brethren are preparing for a great day.

Chas. M. Fillmore, of Peru, Ind., has accepted work in the church at Carthage, O. He has also become editor of the Musical Messenger, which the Fillmore Brothers of Cincinnati, O., have revived.

D. D. Boyle is in a great meeting at Vinton, Iowa; 104 additions to date.

Prof. C. M. Hughes, 192 Spring St., Lexington, Ky., wants to rent a tent with a seating capacity of from twelve to fifteen hundred persons, for a meeting in September. Parties writing him are requested to state price, etc.

R. A. Schell has been continued pastor of the church in Hebron, Neb., for another year. Judging from a report of his work in Hebron the church is in a very prosperous state. Besides meeting salary and current expenses the church debt has been reduced from $1,080 to $500 and 66 members added to the church.

During the year the pastor of West Plains, Mo., A. F. Holden, reports a total collection of money for all purposes amounting to $535.96 and 11 additions to the membership of the church. This is one of the churches that remembered the Christian Orphans' Home, of this city, with an offering of $9.05.

Cephas Shelburne, who has charge of the work at Fredericksburg, Va., preached the union sermon to a crowded house at the Methodist Church, Fredericksburg, last Sunday night. A collection was taken for the new Christian church, now in course of erection. Bro. Shelburne has been accorded the use of the Presbyterian Memorial Chapel while building.

Wm. S. Canfield, a son of J. N. Canneld, of Indianapolis, Ind., called at this office while on a visit to this city last week. His father, J. N. Canfield, once assisted the assistant editor of this paper in a protracted meeting in what is now the Second Christian Church. Wm. S. Canfield is now in the printing and stationery business at 31 Virginia Ave., Indianapolis, Ind.

B. F. Hill, for six years the pastor of the church at California, Mo., has accepted an unsolicited call from the church in Nevada, Mo., and will begin work there Sept. 1st. Bro. Hill was in no way dissatisfied in California and the church will regret his change of field, but the call came in such a way as to persuade Bro. Hill that it was from the Lord.

W. H. Scrivner, pastor of the church at Erie, Kan., was recently visited by his congregation with the result of a refilled larder. He says the former pastor, C. J. Saunders, is highly esteemed for what he was and did while there and that the church securing him will find an effectual worker.

R. B. Briney, of Armarillo, Texas, has been elected president of Armarillo College, to succeed J. D. Hamlin, who has resigned that office. Bro. Briney has also been recalled, for the year 1900, by the Church of Christ in Armarillo. He will serve both the church and the college for the next 18 months at least. Children's Day offering there was $25.

Henry F. Davis and his wife who, soon after the Bible-school convention at Plattsburg, went on an excursion trip to Alaska, have returned and duly reported at headquarters (this office). They went as far as Skagway and were pleased with the trip as a sightseeing investment. They concluded, however, to stake no claims until after the settlement of the Alaskan boundary line with the Canadian Government. They report about one miner per hundred as succeeding in finding gold in paying quantities and saw many returning from the Klondike.

CHANGES.

W. W. Warren, Jr., Golden City to Dexter, Mo.

R. H. Lampkin, Chilesburg to Walnut Hills, Ky.

Geo. T. Smith, Albia, Ia., to 653 Monroe St., Chicago.

J. F. King, Scottville, Ill., to Rush Branch, Ky.

J. P. Knight, Peoria, Ill., to Macatawa, Mich.

Harry G. Howard, Eureka to Mackinaw, Ill.

R. N. Davis, Gilroy to Garfield Park, Santa Cruz, Cal.

The Bunker Hill Military Academy, of which an advertisement appears in our columns, is finely located on high ground at Bunker Hill, Ill., 40 miles northeast of St. Louis, is fully and finely equipped in buildings, grounds and teaching force, and has no superior in home-like surroundings and good influences. While it is prepared to instruct and care for any boy of public school age, looking forward to college or business, yet its arrangements are such that it can make a specialty of younger and less experienced boys needing parental supervision and training. The superintendent is a prize and honor graduate of an Eastern college and seminary, and has had 25 years' experience as a teacher.

Twenty-five Beautiful Years.

A bright woman, looking back into a past grown unclouded in the fair light of the days that are no more, has said:

"The years have linings, just as goblets do;
The old year is the lining of the new.
Tinged with the wine of precious memories,
The golden was doth line the silver is."

In this, the silver anniversary of the Christian Woman's Board of Missions, it is but fitting we should glance into the happy past that forms the golden lining of the twenty-five years of our life as an organization.

PIONEERS.

Many of the women who were the pioneers of our movement are still with us. Mrs. C. N. Pearre, then of Iowa City, Ia., whose stirring appeal moved us to united action, is still an inspiration and blessing to the workers in general and to her home auxiliary in Irvington, Ind., in particular. Miss E. J. Dickinson, the pioneer of Illinois, is a tower of strength in both national and state counsels. Mrs. C. E. Gaston, now of Fairhope, Ala., who organized one of the earliest societies, is, although over eighty years of age, still untiring in her devotion to the work she has so long served. Mrs. Charlotte S. King, who first rallied the children to an organized support of the work, from her home in Allegheny City, Pa., still most devotedly assists their present leader, Miss Mattie Pounds.

FIRST OFFICERS.

Our first president, Mrs. Maria Jameson, still lives in Indianapolis, Ind. She is now an invalid, suffers much, and is denied active participation in our work, but in a loving message to the silver anniversary number of the Tidings she voiced her affection for and deep personal interest in it. Mrs. Wm. Wallace, our first recording secretary, now leads the workers of the central auxiliary of Indianapolis, which is the oldest of our societies. Mrs. O. A. Burgess, who was our first treasurer, now serves the work with wisdom, energy and modesty as president.

MEMORIES.

It is one of our golden blessings that these and many others of our early workers are spared to us, but the breadth of a sigh will dim the luster of the gold as we remember those who are gone. Each state has its sacred memories of those who were to it God's own messengers of courage and strength. They are remembered and honored by larger work for him who was their inspiration and example.

ORGANIZATION.

We were organized in the basement of the Richmond Street Church, Cincinnati, O., during the meeting of the national convention, in October, 1874. There were present 75 representatives from nine different states. A constitution was adopted, which was modeled after that of the women of the Congregational Church, and had for its object, as stated in article 2nd,

"To maintain preachers and teachers for religious instruction, to encourage and cultivate a missionary spirit and missionary effort in the churches, to disseminate missionary intelligence, and to secure systematic contributions for such purposes; also to establish and maintain schools and institutions for the education of both sexes."

This work was to be accomplished through auxiliaries to be organized in the churches, which were to be under the direction of the state officers who, with the national officers and five resident members, formed the national executive committee. These auxiliaries were pledged to hold monthly meetings, to disseminate missionary intelligence, to cultivate a missionary spirit in the churches and to secure systematic contributions to missions. Each member was to pay monthly a definite sum into the treasury, which was not to be less than ten cents. This was no light undertaking for women who were inexperienced in organized work, but their growth has kept pace with the growth of the work.

FIRST WORK.

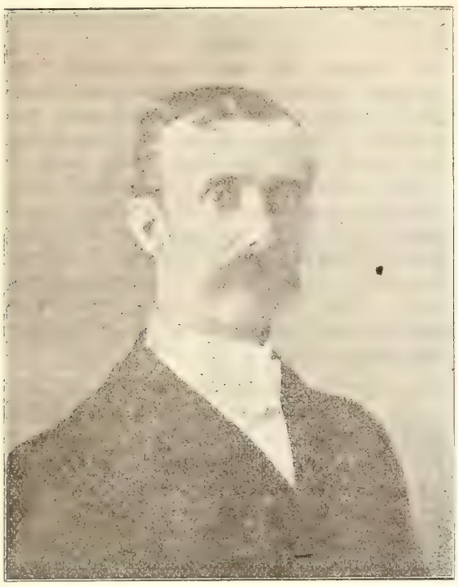
The first effort made by the new organization was for the freedmen of the South. Next, the work in Jamaica, that fairest gem of Victoria's crown, was undertaken. This was in 1876. Through the work in that island we have now 1,700 church members in 19 congregations; there are 1,200 Sunday-school scholars and several hundred day-school scholars who are receiving Christian education from our missionaries and teachers. C. E. Randall, his wife and two sons, G. D. Purdy and wife, Neil MacLeod and sister, A. McHardy and wife, Miss Isabel McHardy, A. W. Meredith, P. M. Robinson, with helpers and teachers, form our force of workers in the island.

INDIA.

In October, 1891, our board decided to cooperate with our younger brother, the Foreign Christian Missionary Society, in opening work in India. We had previously presented to this board the Josephine Smith memorial chapel in Akita, Japan, and assisted somewhat with their work in Paris, France; so to plan with them for an extension of Christ's kingdom was pleasant and easy. In September, 1892, we sen out with their missionaries, as our first offering to India, four young women: Ada Boyd, Mary Graybiel, Mary Kingsbury and Laura Kinsey.

BILASPUR.

These young women went to Bilaspur, and with M. D. Adams and wife, who were a little later sent out by the Foreign Society, opened a mission. In this station orphanage, hospital, school, zenana and evangelistic work are carried on. At various times, in addition to those who were the pioneers, there have labored there Arabella Merrill, Olivia Baldwin, E. C. L. Miller and Lillian B. Miller as physicians, Mrs. Bertha F. Lohr and Miss Kate Lawrence as teachers, Miss Mattie Burgess, who with beautiful and unselfish devotion, substituted in orphanage, school and zenana work; and Mr. and Mrs. C. G. Elsam, who are engaged in evangelistic work among the railroad employees of the lines centering in the town. From the Bilaspur orphanage have gone out native Christian girls to serve as teachers, nurses and valuable assistants in all lines of service in our other stations in India.



JEU HAWK'S SCHOOL.

BINA.

The mission in Bina was opened in 1892 by Mr. and Mrs. Ben Mitchell, Miss Mattie Burgess and Miss Ida Kinsey. Here has been built our first church home for English-speaking people. School, evangelistic and Bible work are also carried on. Miss Burgess and Miss Kinsey are now in the United States. Dr. Ada McNeil has been added to the force in this station, that medical work may be opened.

MAHOBA.

The work in Mahoba was commenced in 1894 by Miss Mary Graybiel and Miss Adelaide Gail Frost. Miss Elsie Gordon was added to a Mission Point of C. W. B. M.

the force in 1895, also a native evangelist and and wife. Dr. Rosa Oxer went to the work in in 1896, and later Mrs. Sarah Egan and a second evangelist and wife were added to the list. Orphanage, school, dispensary, zenana and evangelistic work are successfully carried forward in this station.

DEOGHUR.

The work in Doeghur was opened in 1896 by Miss Jane Wakefield Adam, a Scotch woman of unusual consecration. Going out alone, she sought for the darkest spot in India, and thought she had found it in Deoghur. In 1893 Drs. Merrill and Baldwin met her and the acquaintance led to her placing her work under the care of the Christian Woman's Board of Missions. In 1895 Miss Bessie Farrar and Miss M. Alice Spradlin were sent as helpers. In 1898 Dr. Olivia Baldwin, Miss Annie Agnes Lackey and Miss Dlla M. Maddock were added to this mission's working force. Here are located the 75 famine orphans given us by the English Government. Here, too, are the Leper Homes which Miss Adam established. Evangelistic, zenana and school work are also carried on.

HOME WORK.

While our work was enlarging in India, it was also growing in our homeland, for the C. W. B. M. has not slighted the land of her birth; the land which is to be God's strongest power for the conversion of the world. In 1882 we opened work in Montana, and from that we have assisted in strengthening the churches in all parts of of our country. Beginning with Montana, at various times the work has been helped by us in California, Oregon, Washington, Utah, Colorado, Nebraska, Kansas, Arkansas, Minnesota, Wisconsin, Michigan, Indiana, Kentucky, Virginia, West Virginia, North Carolina, Georgia, Florida, Mississippi, New York and Pennsylvania. At present we are assisting in 19 states and territories.

MOUNTAIN MISSION SCHOOL.

In addition to this general work for the churches through state organizations or local churches, the C. W. B. M., through its Kentucky organization, was the pioneer in Christian educational work among the mountaineers of Eastern Kentucky, and now has a flourishing school for this people with over one hundred pupils in Hazel Green, Ky.

CHINESE MISSION.

In 1892 work was opened among the Chinese in Portland, Oregon, by Jeu Hawk, who has had the joy of seeing 47 of his countrymen come to Christ. The influence of this work is extending across the seas into China, while it is teaching us to better know and help the "stranger within our gates."

OUR BIBLE WORK.

In 1993 was inaugurated a missionary educational work that gives our organization its distinctive characteristic, and marks it as belonging to the people whose plea is for the Bible and its message alone as man's spiritual guide. In this year arrangements were completed whereby courses in Bible study were offered to the students of the University of Michigan. This Bible work was the outgrowth of a Christian Church established by the C. W. B. M. in Ann Arbor, through a bequest made to it by Mrs. Sarah H. Scott, of Detroit, Mich. This movement has gone steadily forward, and this year 183 students of the university took the courses of Bible study provided by us. Similar work has been done by our organization in the Universities of Virginia and Georgia; the work for the University of Virginia being placed on a permanent basis by a gift of $10,000 from the family of Col. John B. Cary, of Richmond, Va.

MEXICO.

Our mission in Mexico was opened in 1895. The first work was done in Juarez. Later Monterey was chosen as a more desirable field.

DISTINCTIVE FEATURES.

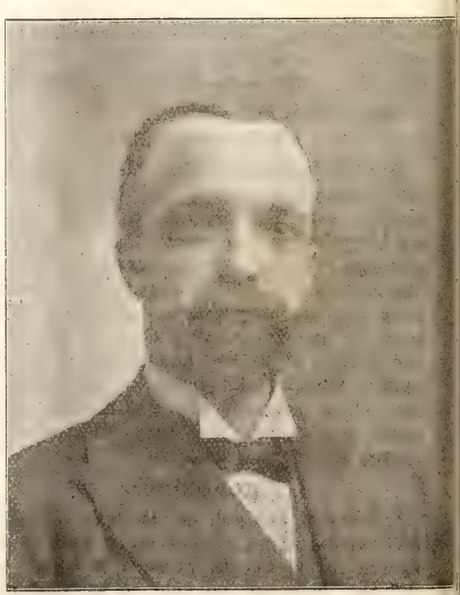
If asked for the distinctive features of our organization, we would point to our Bible work in the two representative universities of our great nation, Michigan and Virginia, and to our young people's work, under the direction of Miss Mattie Pounds, by which thorough and systematic training in missions is being given the youth of our churches in the Junior and Intermediate Societies of Christian Endeavor and the Mission Bands. Through these two lines of work for the young we are making our best offering for God and home and native land as well as for world-wide evangelization.

OUR PAPERS.

Through our papers, the Missionary Tidings and Junior Builders, we are trying to fulfill the clause of our constitution which binds us to the "dissemination of missionary intelligence and the cultivation of a missionary spirit in the church," with the strong hope that every enterprise of our brotherhood, that has for its object the happiness of humanity and the conquest of the world for Christ, will be strengthened by our efforts.

JOYS OF SERVICE.

Through working for Christ and his church, through learning more for his purpose and Spirit, the look backward through the years of our history is indeed a happy one, but the look forward is incomparably brighter, for over it gleams the light that shines from the opening gates of the Golden City—the city which hath foundations—its glory beckons us forward, its beauty fills our spirits and its promised joy makes us strong for service and for sacrifice.



HELEN E. MOSES.

The Young People's Department.

The Young People's Department owes its existence to a happy inspiration which came in the early days of the C. W. B. M. to Joseph King and his accomplished wife. The latter became the efficient superintendent of the departement, and served in that capacity for many years. The children were organized into Mission Bands, and their contributions were made to the Builders' Fund of the C.W.B. M. Mrs. King was succeeded by Mrs. J. C. Black, who brought into line, along with the Mission Bands, a large proportion of our Intermediate and Junior Societies. The work has now broadened out until it includes, not only the building, but also the orphanage work of the C. W. B. M. Last year 901 societies and bands contributed through this department. The total receipts were $12,365.22.

The boys and girls wish to have their part in the efforts and rejoicings of this anniversary year, and they have, therefore, taken as their motto, "Nine thousand for ninety-nine in the Builder's Fund." This will require a gain of more than two thousand dollars over the receipts of last year. This seems like a great deal to ask, when we remember what small sums the children's offerings are gathered; but through the aid and encouragement of leaders and parents, this and more than this can be done. Mite boxes have been sent out, free of charge, to all the bands and societies, and it is hoped that when these are opened it will be found that the amount necessary has been raised. Many of the children are contributing the sum of one dollar each to the silver anniversary offering. To these beautiful illuminated certificates are sent. Each society or band which contributes the full amount of its apportionment will receive a large wall certificate, suitable for framing, and will be entitled to a place on the roll of honor.

The work of the children is of prime importance. It means a helpful training for the young, and an example for those who are older and who might, with hearts as willing as those of the children, give and serve in generous measure. For, evermore, a little child shall lead them. JESSIE BROWN POUNDS.

Religious Instruction at State Universities.

In the parable of the sower the good seed sown in good soil brought forth thirty, sixty and an hundredfold. The lesson of this parable is beginning to be verified in the Bible Chair movement inaugurated by the Christian Woman's Board of Missions. The substantial growth of this great missionary and educational enterprise, like the seed deep down in the soil, has heretofore been seemingly slow, but like the true seed of the kingdom it is now bringing forth an abundant harvest. The wisdom of the C. W. B. M. in teaching young men and young women the living Word of the living God at the seats of the great state universities of our land is being recognized everywhere. During the past year the widespread demands for the extension of the Bible Chair work has far exceeded our ability to meet those demands. Only last week the Governor of Kansas, in a conference with H. L. Willett, advocated the study of the Bible as a part of the curriculum of the University of Kansas. Inquiries are coming to those of us who have advocated this work for a number of years for information concerning the origin and growth of the movement inaugurated by the Christian Woman's Board of Missions. It seems that even many of our leading men and women desire some clear statements in regard to the work in specific fields, such as Ann Arbor, Michigan, Athens, Georgia, and Charlottesville, Virginia. To meet this demand on the part of our best workers, who are just baginning to realize what a great harvest may be reaped from the seed sowing of the C. W. B. M., the following statements are given at the request of Sister Moses:

THE UNIVERSITY OF MICHIGAN.

Since our state universities have grown to such large proportions nearly all prominent educators have felt the need of religious instruction to supplement the secular teaching. Attempts were made by the Episcopalians under the leadership of Bishop Harris, and the Presbyterians in the state of Michigan, to surround the students of these special communions with religious influences while attending the University of Michigan. Fine buildings in the neighborhood of the university campus have been constructed by the friends of these enterpises. Moreover, the Student's Christian Association of the University of Michigan erected a fine building, costing over fifty thousand dollars, solely for Christian work. The very first practical effort, however, to teach the Bible as the Word of God systematically to university students was undertaken by the C. W. B. M. at Ann Arbor, Michigan. The actual teaching began in October, 1893. The first Bible instructors employed by our board were H. L. Willett and Clinton Lockhart. These men are now filling high and honorable positions in the field of education. It may not be amiss at this point to say that the instructors employed by the C. W. B. M. have always been in demand at other educational institutions. In 1895, at the suggestion of A. McLean, the secretary of our Foreign Missionary Society, I had the pleasure of recommending Prof. G. P. Coler to our board, who followed Dr. Willett in charge of the Ann Arbor Bible Chair work. Mr. Coler was an experienced educator, who had spent several years abroad, and was especially adapted for work among university students. His high moral purpose, his deep convictions of truth, his unwavering integrity and his broad sympathies soon won for him the confidence of both faculty and students in the University of Michigan. The work has steadily grown, both intensively and extensively, since Prof. Coler became responsible for its management, until last year one hundred and eighty-three persons were registered for definite class work; nearly all of whom were students of the university. The church work at Ann Arbor, which is the seat of the Uuiversity of Michigan, is second to none in importance among missions of the C. W. B. M. Our great sisterhood should never forget to honor the name of Sister Scott, who made the Ann Arbor work possible. This noble woman left over twelve thousand dollars to our various missionary boards, the entire amount of which was placed in the treasury of the C. W. B. M. on the condition that our board would assume the entire responsibility of the work, building a house of worship, supporting a pastor, etc. Never was the saying of Carey—

"Attempt great things for God, Expect great things from God,"

more bravely undertaken and more successfully executed and more bautifully exemplified than in the work of the C. W. B. M. at Ann Arbor. Our beautiful chapel faces the campus where more than three thousand students, representiog every state in the Union and a score of foreign lands, are annually gathered. In connection with the inauguration of this work, not only the saintly woman who made it possible, but the names of Fannie R. Thompson, who as president of the Detroit auxiliary cast the deciding vote in favor of building at Ann Arbor, John S. Gray, who is deeply interested in the loyal teaching of the simple Word of God, and others I have not space to mention, should be gratefully considered. The writer was the first pastor of the church, which was dedicated in 1891, by B. B. Tyler. From a nucleus of seven resident members and a faithful body of students the church has steadily grown, both in numbers and spiritual power. When the writer went into the field, at the request of the board, to supply the financial needs of the enterprise, H. L. Willett and G. P. Coler preached for the church. W. M. Forest succeeded C. A. Young as pastor of the congregation, and has eminently proved himself "the right man in the right place." Besides preaching for the congregation and in every way possible bringing the plea for "Christianity according to Christ" to the attention of thousands of educated young men and young women annually, he assists Mr. Coler in the Bible Chair work, these two important enterprises, the work of the church and the work of the English Bible Chair supplementing each other other. The Ann Arbor mission is undoubtedly the most important and far-reaching single enterprise which our board has ever undertaken. Some years ago A. McLean visited Ann Arbor and made a study of the situation. He said "the results had already more than justified the expenditure." Besides a number of young men who have gone into the ministry through the influence of this work and scores who have become Christians, missionaries have been trained for the foreign field, and hundreds of the brightest and brainiest young people in our country have been reclaimed from skepticism. "This," as the prisident of the Christian Woman's Board of Missions has well said, "is genuine missionary work." In no other mission field is the preaching of the Son of God and the teaching of the Word of God, which is reaching such a large number of persons who are destined to play an important part upon the future of our own land and foreign lands, carried on so successfully and so systematically as at Ann Arbor.

THE UNIVERSITY OF VIRGINIA.

The first steps toward the establishment of the "University of Virginia Bible Lectureship, founded by John B. Cary," were taken in 1895. In the beginning and development of the work of Bible teaching under the auspices of the C. W. B. M., at the University of Virginia, the of influence Col. Cary's noble life has been well exemplified. Col. Cary and the state C. W. B. M. officers, Miss Ellen Kent and Miss Gillie Cary attended the Chicago Convention and became deeply interested in the Bible Chair movement. At the request of these friends of the C. W. B. M. the writer visited Virginia in 1894. Again, in 1895, the writer visited Richmond, Virginia, and at the request of Col. Cary stopped off one night at Charlottesville to have a conference with Dr. Charles W. Kent, of the University of Virginia. Dr. Kent, one of the most genuinely Christian men in our brotherhood, considers this visit providential. That night the faculty of the university were to consider the matter of religious work among the students. Mr. Jefferson, realizing the importance of religion in the realm of higher education, and wishing to avoid sectarianism in the University of Virginia, had arranged that the four leading denominations in the stste at that time should in turn have charge of religious services among the students. This arrangement, called the "ecclesiastical quadrilateral" by Mr. Campbell, limited the chaplaincy to the above-named denominations. It was nearly midnight when Dr. Kent introduced me to the faculty, and at their request I outlined the Bible Chair work of the C. W. B. M., laying special emphasis upon the fact that the work was purely nonsectarian and evangelical. An hour later I left Charlottesville, but Dr. Kent and Col. Cary took a deep interest in the enterprise. Miss Ellen Kent and Miss Gillie Cary loyally supported the English Bible work, and through a special effort raised sufficient to have H. L. Willett employed by the C. W. B. M. to introduce the Bible work at the University of Virginia for the session of 1896-'97. Dr. Willett's teaching at the University was an unqualified success. He also visited Richmond, Washington, D. C., and other points; in all of which he made staunch friends for the University of Virginia Bible Lectureship. Col. Cary attended the National Convention, which met in Indianapolis in 1897. His noble bearing and generous offers will long be remembered by those who attended the executive session of the National C. W. B. M. It was then decided to make the work at the University of Virginia one of the permanent enterprises of the C. W. B. M. The writer has been in charge of the Bible teaching since 1898, and the University of Virginia has taken the most advanced steps of any state university in the interest of systematic Bible study. Not only has the work the sympathy and support of the leading members of the faculty, but the board of visitors has appointed the C. W. B. M. English Bible teacher instructor of the Hebrew language. Furthermore, Prof. Humphreys, in charge of the department of Greek language and literature, will offer a thorough course in New Testament Greek, and Dr. Kent and Prof. Noah K. Davis will offer courses in English literature, ethics, etc., which will be of special value to ministerial students. All such students will be admitted to all the privileges of the academical departments of the university free of tuition. In this great work, the noble life of Col. Cary is fulfilling the language of Scripture, "He, being dead, yet speaketh."

A GROUP OF C. W. B. M. MISSIONARIES IN INDIA.

ATHENS, GEORGIA.

In the spring of 1897 Bible teaching, under the auspices of the English Bible Chair of the C. W. B. M., was inaugurated at the University of Georgia. The expenses of the work were cheerfuly met by leading women in Georgia, such as Mrs. John A. Perdue, Mrs. Albert Howell, of the First Christian Church in Atlanta, and Mrs. M. A. Lipscomb and Miss Mildred Rutherford, of the First Baptist Church in Athens. Large classes have been conducted each year since then, both among the students of the University of Georgia and the students of the Lucy Cobb Institute, one of the finest young ladies' institutions in the South, of which Mrs. Lipscomb is principal. During the past two years the expenses of the work at Athens, Georgia, has been met by the C. W. B. M., all funds raised by the writer and the workers in Georgia going to the regular Engish Bible Chair fund. The denominations in Georgia are very conservative; but the work proved to be so valuable that after it was thoroughly understood the leaders in various denominations have been generous in their praise of the wisdom of the C. W. B. M. in having the Bible taught to the students of the university, and also generous in their offerings. Mrs. Lipscomb contributed seventy-five dollars to the English Bible Chair Fund this year. In both institutions one hundred and one students pursued systematic Bible study in Athens, Georgia, last year. In the Lucy Cobb Institute sixty-four students made a systematic study of the life of Christ. If Georgia only had a Col. Cary, a great work could be accomplished at Athens. The conditions in Athens are more like those in Ann Arbor so far as the church work is concerned than at any other educational center I have visited. May God prosper the work of our noble women in these educational centers.

Missoula, Montana.

Missoula, Montana, is beautiful for situation, surrounded as it is by magnificent mountains; and it is the commercial center of one of the most fertile valleys of the West. Here is located the University of Montana, and an opportunity is given our people for doing a fine work in reaching the students, and it is fondly hoped that some day we may have a Bible Chair in connection with the university. The pastor of the church has given some attention to this matter. One of the students, Bro. W. E. Reavis, took some special Bible work during last year, and also commenced to exercise his talents as a preacher of the gospel, with promise of success.

The church building in Missoula was erected with money that was raised very largely by the Children's Mission Bands, under the superintendency of Mrs. Joseph King, and the work is still carried on by the Christian Woman's Board of Missions. Since March of last year thirty-eight names have been added to the list of members. The especially hopeful features of the work are the interest and growth in the Bible-school and young people's meetings, the well-attended and excellent midweek prayer - meetings — the attendance at these ranging from about thirty to seventy people—the growth in the missionary spirit and the deepening of the spirituality on the part of those interested in these departments of the work.

With proper care and wise leadership, the church in Missoula will become one of our strong churches, able, not only to care for itself, but also to look after the proclamation of the gospel in other fields.

A New Field.

We have entered Wisconsin this year in an aggressive, enthusiastic manner. This great state is 300 miles long north and south and 260 miles wide east and west at points of its largest dimensions. There are 53,924 square miles of land. Here are more than 1,500,000 inhabitants. There is still much wild forest land. The north part of the state is a veritable frontier region with its dense forests, tangled jungles, Indian tribes, bear, deer, etc.

The bulk of the population is in the south part of the state. So far as developement is concerned, Wisconsin may be said to be the "newest" state east of the Mississippi. Large areas of forest are being cleared annually and converted into farm land. New railroads are being projected and new towns are building up.

Settlers come from all over the world, but chiefly from the German Empire, the Scandinavian Peninsula, the Netherlands and our Eastern states. Seemingly few come from the states where the Disciples of Christ are numerous.

Hence, though there is a rapid growth both of population and arable tracts, there are few of our brethren. Catholic and Lutheran Churches are multiplying while we have but a handful of churches with about 1,000 communicants. Of our 66 counties we have churches in only eight. There are 60 county-seats in which we have no church. Surely, this is missionary territory.

We who live in this state believe it will respond promptly to missionary treatment. Little has been attempted heretofore, yet the success that was achieved compels our belief that effort will be accompanied by larger results.

The chief hindrances to evangelical work are, not climate nor temperament, but the Romanism and languages of the people. Wisconsin is a Catholic stronghold. Her people are largely foreign-born or of foreign extraction, speaking some other language better than English. But these difficulties will be less hereafter. Even now people are drifting away from Romanism and there is scarcely a Protestant church in any of our cities which has not its ex-Catholic converts. Also the younger generation is more and more inclined to attend English services and a few churches have found already the necessity of changing and becoming American churches in language as well as geographically.

Our earliest successes will be in the new settlements and in towns and cities where there is an English-speaking element.

In two new towns on railroads having over 500 population there is no church of any denomination whatever, yet a few Disciples live there. There are other places like them and will be more. Such places we should enter promptly, and there we will succeed. We hope to report to you one good church in one such town before your convention assembles in Cincinnati.

We have faith in God. We believe he will use the Disciples of Christ for great purposes and through them will accomplish great things. We have a destiny to fulfill in Wisconsin which it will be a pleasure to accomplish. "Come over . . . and help us."

Huntington, West Virginia.

The work at this place has begun to assume permanency. For a time after the struggle in saving th church many friends interested without the state feared a collapse from the reaction of the prolonged struggle and strain and the almost miraculous deliverance following. But such has not been the case. Even sooner than the most sanguine expected, the zeal of the members loyal has become greatlyintensified, and they are beautifully and harmoniously at work.

The passing through the fiery trial has done what nothing else could have done so successfully, i.e., cleansed the church of all dross. The membership before the crisis was about three hundred and twenty-five in number; now it is about one hundred and fifty. But they are of the "band of Gideon, marching with torch and pitcher in hand, and have already begun the attack."

The greatest need is men, good, honest, Christian men, who can carry on the Lord's work in a systematic and businesslike way. These we anticipate in the near future, because we have asked them of our Lord. The members still feel the effects of the severe financial strain to which they were subjected in the saving of their church property, and we have yet to raise, in addition to our interest on the loan from Church Extension, $400 to pay off the balance of indebtedness assumed by the congregation when the cash could not be raised to secure releases in time to save the church from selling.

These releases were secured by members morally pledging themselves, and now it is properly due, and by God's help and the work of the noble women—our best men—we will borrow the money and pay it off, and thus keep our credit, and take our own time in meeting the note in the bank.

The best feature in our work, to my mind, is the increasing audiences to hear the Word, and the attendance upon our midweek prayer-meeting; the latter at all times most spiritual in tone, and helpful and encouruging to all present. We regard this the pulse of our spiritual man. All departments are doing nicely, and particularly the young people's work. They are doing the best in their history.

The Sunday-school is increasing,and we hope soon to have a school equal in numbers and zeal to any in the city. The noble women, who truly "labor with me in the gospel," deserve the highest praise. They have never lost hope, and even have many times hoped against hope, but the brotherhood owes the saving of the church at Huntington as much to the Christian women as to any other and all other aids.

About fifteen have been added to the faithful since February 1st; one-half by primitive obedience. May God's blesings continue, is our prayer. And may he continue to guide to the salvation of souls, as he has in the past, the Christian Woman's Board of Missions.

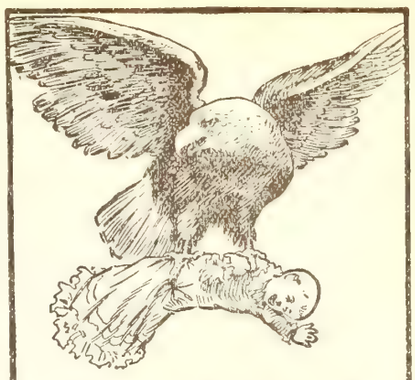
Jamaica Letter.

At the time I sit down to write this letter I suppose all loyal subjects in the United States are engaged, more or less, in celebrating the "glorious fourth." Many are congratulating themselves and others on the great act which was done a hundred and twenty-three years ago. Of course it is not forgotten by loyal Americans here. Our esteemed half Canadian, half American brother, MacLeod, in his patriotic zeal is taking his King's Gate Sunday-school for their picnic to-day. No doubt they will give cheers for "Old Glory," and will almost fancy themselves American citizens while they disport themselves under the blazing sun. Later in the day I purpose to go out to their rendezous to see if the survive notwithstanding the great heat. Seldom do we have such continuous, scorching sun at this season of the year as we have now. Usually a part of the day is cloudy, and we have occasional showers. This year our season rains have failed, and from day to day there is no rain or sign of it. This is causing anxiety, as the consequences may be serious if rain does not fall soon. In Kingston our water supply is locked off for some hours during the day. We hope the worst may not come; though some of the weather-wise prophesy that we shall not have much rain before the next wet season in October. This would be a sad visitation. To talk or write about the weather is not usually deemed very interesting; but in a case like this it is a matter which is very important in relation to the condition of a people.

The agitation and unrest which prevailed among us in reference to political matters generally, has considerably quited down. It was a notable struggle between the government and the elected members of the legislative council. The government found the revenues running short and the island in debt to the tune of $900,000 and felt that money must be got somehow and from somewhere. At once a new tariff bill was brought in levying heavier duties—in some cases as high as twenty-five per cent. on the value of imported goods. The elected members opposed this, feeling that the country could not stand it. They thought that the first thing to be done was to see to what extent retrenchment in expenditures was possible; and refused to pass the tariff bill until the estimates had been placed before them. The governor resorted to the extreme measure, which he claimed was permitted by the constitution, of appointing four new government members of the council to carry the bill as a matter of "paramount importance." The temper and strength of the elected members had not been truly estimated. They fought every step with determination, and a deadlock occurred. The result was, the governor finally acknowledged his mistake and withdrew the four obnoxious members. Afterward the legislative work went on; but amid shoals and rocks. The very objectionable tariff bill was not passed; though that which we have is found to be a heavy burden upon the people generally—especially upon the poor, because the necessaries of life, such as flour, corn meal, rice, kerosine oil, etc., are heavily taxed. This is not done at all with a view to discriminate against American productions, but because it is on these things that the largest amount of revenue can be realized.

One thing, however, has been made clear, that unless our productions can be increased and a fair price obtained for them our future prospects are gloomy. It has been feared by many that the United States may discriminate against our produce, such as tobacco, fruit, etc., in favor of Cuba and Porto Rico to give them a helping hand. This would be a hard line for us. In order to try to avoid trouble the legislative council has sent a commission to Washington to try to arrange a treaty of commerce with your government. It is reported that they have succeeded well with their mission. The gentlemen composing the commission have proceded to Canada in order to try to open new avenues for trade with the Dominion. Their progress in this direction is said to be favorable. This morning a cablegram appears in our papers stating that efforts that have long been made to establish with England a direct line of fast steamers, have been successful. In due time, therefore, it is expected that we shall be able to forward our fruits and other produce in good condition to the mother country. These things help to give a decided gleam of hopefulness to the future.

One of the things that have received great attention of late in our legislative council is the government system of grants in aid of elementary education. On this department there has recently been expended about $350,000 per annum. By some who were strong on the matter of retrenchment and weak on the matter of giving an education to peasant colored children, it was thought that here was a splendid opportunity to cut down expenditures. It was proposed to reduce by $70,000 and to close 250 schools. This caused great agitation throughout the island. The ministers, teachers and the friends of the people were earnest and united in their opposition, with the result that whilst the subject and importance of education has been discussed and expounned and insisted on as never before; although some schools that are deemed unnecessary will be closed and others amalgamated, the amount allowed for it has scarcely been diminished, and it is probable that good, rather than harm, will result from the attack made on popular education and the consequent agitation.



Whilst elementary education has had a rough time, secondary education, as conducted in the higher schools, has been decidedly in the ascendant. The distribution of certificates in connection with the Cambridge local examinations was an interesting function which took place here last week. This examination, as you are aware, is conducted in all parts of the empire. Jamaica students have taken and are keeping the first place. Of the 15,941 candidates who entered for last year's examination at 438 centers, Jamaica supplied 230 boys and 118 girls, making a total of 348 at seven centers. Of this number 231 passed, 66 of them in honors.

The results in Jamaica are rather suprising. The percentages of honors gained at the various examinations compare most favorably with the general results of the examinations as held at all the centers. Thus, for preliminary boys under 14 years of age, whereas the general result is that 18 per cent. passed in honors, in Jamaica the percentage is 25.6. For the junior boys under 16 years of age the general result is 33.6 per cent. honor passes, and for Jamaica alone 44.4; and for the junior girls the general result is 24.8 per cent., but the Jamaican 29.6. Once more, our senior boys under 19 years of age have specially distinguished themselves, the percentage of honors being for all the centers 33.7, and for Jamaica 53, of which 31 were in first-class honors. Of the 32 senior boys under 19 years of age, who were examined, 26 passed, 17 of them in honors. Fifty-nine senior boys in all gained first-class honors, and of these 16 were from colonial centers and 10 from Jamaica alone. The standing of Jamaica candidates in separate subjects is most satisfactory. In the junior examinations one boy stands third in mathematics out of 1,249 candidates and is bracketed sixth in religious knowledge and arithmetic out of over 8,000 candidates. One girl was bracketed fourth in German out of over 1,000 candidates, and another who stood well in the whole examination was distinguished in six subjects, a like distinction being gained by no other girl in any center. One lad gained a great distinction for Jamaica, standing highest in all the centers of the world, and gained the prize offered by the Cambridge syndicate to the highest senior boy. I wish to imform you that these young folks who have done so well are of all shades of color, and the lad last mentioned as highest, is nearly black. All study together in our schools, and stands an equel chance. Since I saw the opposite course adopted in your Southern states I have felt what a great mistake it is. I feel that results will be far better when ability and attainments take their proper place irrespective of color.

Our financial condition is still low, though perhaps slightly improved. It is felt severly by the poor classes, who find it exceedingly difficult to get employment, and what is got is very poorly paid for. Many are unable to attend a place of worship for want of proper clothing, especially for want of boots. I con remember the time when in large congregations there were very few who wore boots, but now all must have them in church, even if they walk miles, as they often do in the country, with bare feet, and do not put on their boots till they come near the chapel. Indeed, you may often meet women on Sunday morning, carrying large bundles on their heads, and dressed in very ordinary attire. The fact is, they are carrying their Sunday-go-to-meeting clothes, and when near the place of worship they will call at a friend's house and dress themselves for church. They then look bright and fresh, which they would not do if they had walked, perspiring, for miles in their best garments.

Many at the present time are stopping from church for want of proper clothes. It is having a bad effect upon our churches. A low religious life seems to be the result. Of course, indifference to spiritual things seems to follow, and all our church work suffers. No body of Christians appears to suffer in this way more than we do, as our people are nearly all of the poorest class. We are, however, pressing on, and are not without some fruit and evidence that the Lord is with us. C. E. RANDALL.

It Has Happened

More than once that a child has been carried off by an eagle. When such a thing does happen the press rings with the story. There's not a line given by the press to the babies carried off daily by disease. It isn't the fact of the child being taken away that is startling or interesting, it's only when the method of taking off is novel that it excites interest. How many children die who might have been saved if the mother who bore them had been able to give them strength and vitality. Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription makes healthy mothers and healthy mothers have healthy children, strong enough to resist disease if they are attacked.

Mrs. Axel Kjer, of Gordonville, Cape Girardeau Co., Mo., writes: "When I look at my little boy I feel it my duty to write to you. This is my fifth child and the only one who came to maturity; the others having died from lack of nourishment—so the doctor said. This time I just thought I would try your 'Prescription.' I took nine bottles and to my surprise it carried me through and gave us as fine a little boy as ever was. Weighed ten and one-half pounds. He is now five months old, has never been sick a day, and is so strong that everybody who sees him wonders at him."

Dr. Pierce's Pleasant Pellets keep the bowels healthy and regular.

Letters of Travel.

A month ago, this day, I left the new-born Church of Christ in Haineh, with its 57 members in the care of our Heaveny Father, and returned to Diarbekir to start on my homeward jorney by way of Harpoot, Sevas and Samroon, on the Black Sea. Diarbekir did not leave me idle during the days I spent with them, for they invited their friends to talk with me and hear the preaching of the gospel. The night before I left the city one of them confessed the Savior, whom I baptized on the following morning, and went on my journey, reaching Harpoot on the afternoon of the third day. Soon the brother of our lamented A. Paul came and found me in a khan and took me to his home. He is living in the house Bro. Paul had built, upon which there are several claims, amounting to some $700, for which his brother being security, the creditors demand their money from him, against which he has not a single dollar to pay. Besides this the relatives of the widow of Bro. Paul are claiming the house for the widow and her two children. His brother, though a poor man and receives no support, is still preaching the gospel to the best of his ability, not only in the city of Mozirch, but also in the town of Khokh, some four hours distant from the city. Though on account of the massacres the church is scattered, but in both of the places there are some faithful ones who are continuing to worship God under the preaching of this poor brother. Harpoot is one of the few most promising and large fields where our "anti-society" brethren have commenced a good work, but unfortunately left it unfinished. If they only could see the field and and the work which is open for them there, I am sure they would not leave such a work to perish and become a cause of much disgrace to the cause of the gospel in Turkey. Outsiders testified that Bro. Paul's mission house in Harpoot had been one of the only two houses in each of which were sheltered and saved from four to five hundred men, women and children, who had fled there from the surrounding villages to escape from death from the hands of the infuriated wild Kurds and Turks. Believing that those two houses were under American protection, they had left them alone. If the mission house of Bro. Paul had been built only for this purpose, surely it paid well for the money invested in it. But there is a great work in Harpoot which can be successfully carried on comparatively with little expense if once the house is cleared from all indebtednees and a small salary of $15 or $20 allowed to the poor preacher who is so faithfully doing all he can for the good cause; and unless this is done at once, the house will fall into other hands, and the good work will suffer loss. I do not care what the name may be. I know this, that no Church of Christ knowingly can be indifferent on these things. Hoping that these lines will be read by some of the friends of Bro. Paul, yes the friends of Jesus, I hasten to reach them through the kindnes of the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST. Any one desiring further information about the Harpoot field can write to me to my address in Constantinople and I will answer them all I know.

Two days' ride from Harpoot brought me to the desolate city of Arapker. I had seen its large, comfortable houses. I had seen its happy and contented people; but lo! ruin and desolation in its place so great that I could not hold back the tears that flowed without my will. The remnant receiving help from outside Christian people have huts built for themselves to live in. I was invited to preach in the Congregationalist Church; the Baptist Church is burnt and their preacher murdered. From Arapker I went to Malatia, another ruined city. In both of these cities the bloody work was continued for three to four weeks and it is a miracle that Armenians are still found in them and are striving to make a living. In Malatia also I was invited to preach. The large Congregationalist church and two schools being burned, the people had gathered in the yard in the open air, over a thousand people, who most attentively listened to the preaching of the gospel. We had only one brother in Malatia, baptized by Bro. Paul; his brother also desiring to obey Christ, I baptized him before leaving the city. Four days' drive brought me safely te Sevas, and I was glad to meet once more the dear and faithful brethren and sisters in this city. This is the eighth day since I came, and almost every day I have been preaching in our own house of worship, and it pleased the Lord to add three precious souls to his church. They are in need of an able leader and preacher, for there is great work in this city. If we could give them a a faithful man to labor with the church, they would soon grow both in numbers and influence upon the people. On Monday next I leave Sevas on my homeward journey and expect to see my dear Bro. Kevorkian and his work in Tocat. I learned from a letter he had written that he is now preaching without hindrance.

I have hurriedly scribbled these pages, but I have not the time to write it over, so you will please accept it for what it is worth.

Yours in hope,

G. N. SHISHMANIAN.

New York Letter.

A number of inquiries have come to us recently concerning the Christian Endeavor trip to London next summer as spoken of at Chattanooga convention last October. It is not possible to announce definite rates as yet, owing to the unwillingness of the steamship companies to bind themselves to any given schedule of prices. They plainly forsee extra heavy travel to Europe next summer on account of the London convention and the Paris Exposition, and expect evidently to make rates to suit themselves, in the main at least. But what I proposed at Chattanooga was this: that the Disciples go to London together on one steamer, and have all the rallies, meetings, etc., they choose aboard the steamer going over. The Cook Agency here are quite certain they can furnish a good passage, second cabin, New York to London and return (30 days), including 10 days in London, all expenses, for $100 and $150 and upward. To many this would be the trip of a lifetime, and we are planning to carry out the proposal made at Chattanooga last fall. A number then and there signified their purpose of going. We hope to have the plans so far mature as to make definite announcements at the Cincinnati convention in October. Meantime, we should be pleased to hear from all who would like to make the trip with us. It is not too early to begin to plan for this delightful excursion and the great London Endeavor convention. Drop us a few lines saying you will be one of our party.

At this point I recall the all but matchless energy and enterprise of our old classmate and friend, T. E. Cramblet, pastor of the East End Christian Church, Pittsburg, who is doing so many good things that all can not be recorded here. Since taking up his present work he has inspired his people to build a $30,000 house, has launched and edits a spicy, newsy religious weekly for Western Pennsylvania, has invented and set a-going the Sunday-school "Point System," has been one of the leaders in putting a city evangelist in Pittsburg, and now he is planning to make up and lead a select party in a cruise to the Mediterranean and the Orient Feb. 1-April 5, 1900. This cruise can be made for $400, or as much more as you choose to pay. If there are those who would not be satisfied with our modest little sail to London in July, they could not do better than join Bro. Cramblet's cruise in February. Any desired information can be had by addressing him at 351 Spahr St., Pittsburg. The educational and inspirational advantages of such a trip are beyond all calculation. To see the classic old cities and temples of the Orient, to visit the lands and monuments of the earliest civilizations, and to see the lands of the Bible with their wealth of historic associations and suggestive memories —these are among the highest privileges of the Christian student.

Dr. William H. Faunce, the new president of Brown University, made an address before the students' conference at Northfield recently on "The Still Hour," which was listened to with great interest and which ought to be heard and heeded by all Christian people. Among other things he said:

Never since the days of Queen Elizabeth have the thoughts of men been so widened as they have been during this nineteenth century. Alfred Russell Wallace, in his book, "The Wonderful Century," shows that thirteen great inventions have been made during the last one hundred years, while in all previous human history only seven inventions have been made of the same rank But one of the strongest delusions is that the widening life can give us happiness or goodness. What is the use of traveling at sixty miles an hour if we are just as discontented at the end of the journey as we were at the beginning. Every living man needs to be sometimes alone in order to get acquainted with himself. Many of you would pass a good examination in law, medicine or theology, but could not answer the simplest question about the quality of your own life. Amid the rushing tides of activity no man can preserve his own sanity and self-respect unless he is in the habit at certain times of going home with himself. We need to be sometimes alone in order to get acquainted with our tasks in life. If we aim at nothing we shall surely hit it. We need the still hour in order to get acquainted with God. We need to get out of the ruts of prayer, the worst ruts in the world when all life is a prayer. Then we can truly pray without ceasing. There devotion will not be a form or a formula, but a continual inflow of God.

Now would it not be a good thing for us to spend much of the present vacation season in quiet meditation and reflection—in getting acquainted with self and getting close to God? This would turn our vacation into a recreation, which in reality it should be.

At a largely attended and deeply interesting meeting held recently at the Hotel Waldorf-Astoria, by the Medical and Legal Aid Society, a movement was started looking toward legislative regulation of the practices of Christian Scientists. The following measure was proposed to be presented to the Legislative of New York:

First—A person who advises, persuades or attempts to persuade any other person not to employ medical or surgical aid in a case of illness or physical injury of any person influenced or controlled by him, is guilty of a misdemeanor; it is no defense to a prosecution under this section that the defendant did not believe in the existence of such illness or injury.

A person who:

(1) Advises or persuades any person afflicted with illness or physical injury not to employ medical or surgical aid is, if said afflicted person shall die of said illness or physical injury without receiving medical aid, guilty of manslaughter.

(2) Advises or persuades a person having influence or control over any person afflicted with illness or physical injury not to employ medical or surgical aid for the person so afflicted is, if the person shall die of said illness or surgical aid, guilty of manslaughter.

(3) In a prosecution under the preceding section of this act, proof that the person receiving such advice was the husband, wife, father, mother, brother, sister, master or guardian by appointment or adoption of the deceased is proof that the person bearing such relation to the deceased had influence over him.

What disposition will be made of it in the Assembly is not known, but it is interesting, to say the least, as the Christian Science craze has assumed considerable proportions throughout the country. S. T. WILLIS.

A Suggestion.

Continued presentation of diverse views with regard to the relation between baptism and the remission of sins may excuse the suggestion of a view-point somewhat different from that occupied by many who express opinions on the subject.

About the fundamental facts of the gospel there is, I presume, little difference of opinion. There is proclamation of the divine love and mercy finding expression in the suffering of the just for the unjust. There is a call to turn from sin unto reconciliation of the human with the divine ideal of life. There is promise to responsive souls, not only of mercy with reference to a misspent past, but of assistance toward a well-spent future in which a living and growing faith shall develop courage and knowledge and love, fruitful of blessing and ministering an abundant entrance into the eternal kingdom of the Savior. But Peter, in his first proclamation of this gospel, used these words, "Repent and be baptized every one of you, in the name of Jesus Christ, for the remission of sins, and ye shall receive the gift of the Holy Spirit."

Discussion has sprung up with reference to the phrase "for the remission of sins." Opinions as to the real idea intended vary according to varying conceptions with regard to sin, remission and the relation expressed by the preposition for. The preposition for, in English, expresses several varying relationships. Among them will be found such uses as these: "I shall go to the city for a new dictionary," and "I paid fifteen dollars for a new dictionary." The relation expressed by "for" in this last sentence is one of exchange, and there was a day when many men, certainly, attached that meaning to the word in the sentence quoted from Acts 2:38. In more modern times the feeling has been quite general that such meaning could not inhere in the expression, and various other view-points have been chosen, some with reference to the meaning of remission, others with reference to the force of for, in order to the better explanation of the apostle's language. The usage in the Greek, "eis aphesin hamartoon," is really less ambiguous than the English by which it has been translated. In the Greek New Testament "eis," with an abstract noun following a verb in the future tense, and often in the aorist, is a very common equivalent for a clause of purpose. A typical instance is found in Matt. 25:1, where the ten virgins "went forth to meet the bridegroom" (exeel thon eis hupanteesin tou numphiou). Instances might be multiplied almost without limit. An excellent illustration is the usage of John 9:39 (eis krima—eelthon, hina, etc.), where the idea, first expressed by the preposition and noun, is repeated in the conventional construction of the clause of purpose. Much trouble seems to have resulted from failure to keep prominently in mind this idea of purpose, or, as a recent commentator has put it, an "end in view." It will be fatal to accurate exegesis to drop the last two words of this expression and regard it as an end, and not as an end "in view." In fact, just such lack of logical fidelity must be held responsible for the development of the idea of baptismal regeneration. The acceptance of this expression unreservedly as a clause of purpose will probably modify to some extent the ideistic limits of the other words of the phrase. If it is a clause of purpose it would seem necessary to interpret it of the purpose of the urged repentance as expressed by the symbolic act of baptism. Viewed thus, the remission, or, etymologically, the putting away of sins, is an expression which does not exhaust its meaning in speaking of the divine mercy, but contains a reference as well to the conditions upon which it is extended. These were well understood by the Jews, having had explicit statement by the prophets, as, for example, in the eighteenth chapter of Ezekiel. As matter of fact, would it not be a distinct gain if our idea of the remission of sins should rise above the mechanical conception of escape from punishment to vision of the purification of life through the ministration of the Holy Spirit? In fine, is there anything which runs counter to the general understanding of the elements of the gospel in such exegetical paraphrase of Peter's words as that which follows? Turn from selfish life, expressing by the symbol of death and resurrection your purpose of obtaining the mercy of God upon his proclaimed terms of hearts purified by faith in Jesus Christ, and, to the fulfillment of your purpose now in accord with the divine desire, will God the Father grant the ministry of his Holy Spirit. The force of such interpretation in its bearing upon subsidiary questions, such as "the proper subjects of baptism," etc., is left for the consideration of the thoughtful reader.

The Overshadowing Issue.

College endowment is the overshadowing issue of the present. There is no church interest confronting the Disciples that can compare with it in importance for one single moment. Are you prepared to receive this statement? If not, I am sure you will be if you will give this matter a little earnest thought. No religious people can live growingly who do not provide in a strong way for the education of their young people. The past history of religious bodies demonstrates the truth of this statement beyond the possibility of a doubt. The religious people that educate the young people will be the church or the churches of the future, as in fact they have been of the past. Furthermore, there is no reliable source for ministerial supply except through the agency of the college. This can not be successfully denied. This being true, the one great question that confronts the Disciples at the present time is the question of college endowment. We have not a single adequately endowed institution! This has been said again and again, but it cannot be repeated too often. If all the money we have put into college endowment were concentrated into one place, it would scarcely be enough to endow one strong institution. After we have reduced the salaries of our teachers to the lowest possible point and have reduced the work to the smallest limit, consistent with the demands of the present in educational lines, we have not a college among us that can run clear of debt, with possibly one or two exceptions. Recent newspaper articles show that one of our strongest colleges had to raise $60,000 to clear it of debts contracted for current expenses; another college has run into debt about $25,000 within the last three or four years; another leading institution has been compelled to accept the resignation of its president and at least one professor, owing to lack of funds to pay them. In other institutions professors receive such meagre salaries that they could not live if they did not supplement their salaries in other ways. Annual deficits confront nearly every institution that we have, after the most rigid economy has been practiced. Things cannot go on in this way much longer without serious disaster to our educational interests.

Furthermore, we are losing many of our best young people every year because our institutions cannot offer the material equipment that is offered by the best institutions of other religious bodies. The number of young people going away to other colleges is increasing every year, and this means that we are losing hold, gradually, upon the rising generation. Our colleges must be adequately endowed, and that immediately. We cannot wait for our institutions to be eddowed by bequests. We must have money AT ONCE. Bequests may be relied upon for the increase in the endowment normally demanded; but until we have our endowment up to the point where our institutions can live, we ought not to think of relying upon this slow process of endowment.

We pride ourselves on our growth along missionary lines, and God knows I would not say one thing to the detriment of this great interest, which I continually labor for and pray for; but I do think college endowment rises supremely above every other interest at the present time. For every dollar we put into other things we ought to put ten dollars into college endowment, at least for the next few years.

OUR JUBILEE.

As has been frequently announced, Hiram College is making a strong effort to add $250,000 to its endowment on the occasion of its fiftieth anniversary in June, 1900. We are calling upon the Disciples everywhere to unite in one supreme effort to endow this old and tried institution. Considering the importance of the movement every Disciples ought to regard it as his duty to join in the work. Dear brother! sister! friend! will you not send us your name at once, and let us enroll you in the Hiram army? There are those who are intending to join this army, but who have not yet sent their names. Do not neglect it another day, we beseech you. Address,

E. V. ZOLLARS.

History Repeats Itself.

The Evening Star of this city, in its issue of July 17th, has a dispatch from Richmond, Va., of the same date, as follows: "Something of a sensation was created in religious circles here yesterday when it was circulated about the city that Rev. Dr. Theodore Woelfkin, one of the most prominent Baptist ministers in the country, and pastor of one of the largest and most influential Baptist churches in Brooklyn, N. Y., had administered the Lord's Supper at the Seventh Street Christian Church.

"Dr. Woelfkin was invited to supply the pulpit, which is now without a pastor. He was invited to remain and witness the celebration of the Lord's Supper, which he agreed to do, and when asked to administer the sacrament many were surprised that he accepted, though there were no unfavorable criticisms. It was the first case of the kind here, and to-day it is much discussed."

What a crime! It reminds one of the days in Virginia when Patrick Henry in journeying through the country stopped at a courthouse where he found an unusual commotion. Inquiring the cause, he learned that the prisoner was a Baptist minister who was arraigned by ecclesiastico-political authority on the charge of "preaching the gospel of Christ." With the true eloquence and dramatic force that only Henry could command, he read the charge deliberately three times—"Charged with preaching the gospel of Christ," "charged with preaching the gospel of Christ," "charged with preaching the gospel of Christ." The man was released without further effort. Then "something of a sensation was created in religious circles."

In a certain narrative written by an eminent physician of the first century is another interesting historic statement showing the hidebound prejudices of the times. Said a prominent teacher to one of the world's great reformers: "Master, we saw one casting out devils in thy name, and we forbade him because he followeth not with us." The great reformer replied: "Forbid him not: for he that is not against us is for us."

A little later, when the people of a certain region neglected to receive this great reformer, his advocates were wrought up, and coming to him, said: "Lord, wilt thou that we command fire to come down from heaven and consume them, even as Elijah did?"

This meek reformer rebuked their bigotry, saying: "Ye know not what manner of spirit ye are of. The Son of Man is not come to destroy men's lives, but to save them."

Truly, history repeats itself, even in the grand Old Dominion! J. FRAISE RICHARD.

Washington, D. C., July 19, 1899.

Cotner Letter.

The absorbing interest attending our great struggle to wholly free our beloved institution from debt has prevented any recent mention of our work. We will stop long enough to say, "Halloo!" from the field of action. A few with increasing numbers have vowed that the shadow that rested upon this grand work shall be lifted or that the responsibility of failure must rest elsewhere. The past two months have been more and more encouraging, and day by day, as some new ray of devotion reaches us, we are more encouraged that in a few weeks we shall have pledges sufficient to meet the claims of those who hold the property, and with the sale of other property, extra of the building and campus, clear the institution of every vestige of debt. When turned over to the brotherhood it is the purpose to have placed in the organic basis a bar against any incumbrance being upon the building and campus in future. While we are still short of complete success by a few hundred dollars, we are sure of victory if there is a strong and united effort made now. Very largely the help has come from our poorer brethren and weaker churches. Our country church has given over twelve hundred dollars.

A young man, a former student, offers his farm, his all, if need be, to save his Alma Mater. One notable exception is in the action of Brother Horace Morse, of Colorado Springs, who, without solicitation, has offered aid. His gift of fifteen hundred dollars has been an inspiration through all the struggle. God bless Brother Morse. Such men are an honor to our great brotherhood.

It is sometimes asked how we can conduct the school without endowment. Who says we will be compelled to do this? Let it not be forgotten that an effort will be continued to lay strong foundations for the future. We have a great brotherhood who will see the need of endowing our schools, such at least as are by location and history in the line of progress. The next great crusade for our cause, in my judgment, will be educational. Meanwhile, as in the past three years, during which no debt has been incurred, the school will strive to hold a high place, as it has in the past, for thoroughness and standing among the best schools of the West. With better hope and outlook attendance will grow.

We are about to issue our annual catalogue with announcements for the eleventh year. The school will open its doors for students with brighter future than for five years, and an increased attendance is expected.

The closing days of the last session were very interesting. Our annual address, by Brother B. L. Smith, on Alexander Campbell, was a grand inspiration for the occasion. It was greatly appreciated.

May we not ask our brethren everywhere to have fellowship with us in these last days of our struggle, so that we may make fast and sure, in this Jubilee Year, this victory for Christian education? Failure now would be crime. Send pledges or offerings, large or small, to J. W. Hilton, Bethany, Nebraska.

W. P. AYLSWORTH.

Questions.

I wish to ask Bro. A. B. Jones a question or two with regard to "actual and formal remission of sins." I wish you to go a little deeper into the philosophy of your illustration of the prodigal boy.

1. First in order, I wish you to explain the extent of the sin, for the foregiveness must be commensurate with the sin. When you represent the father as saying, "It is all over now," is it actually over before he kisses his mother? Has that boy actual forgiveness before he complies with the father's requirements? Let us look at it from another point.

2. If it was all over and the father willing to forgive on the condition that the boy kiss his mother, would the boy have been forgiven had he refused to kiss his mother? While you are at it I should like very much for you to get this question settled. Do you not make a mistake by confounding the God side and the man side of salvation?

3. Is it not true that God is always as willing to forgive sins as you represent that father to be willing to forgive his son?

4. If God is willing to forgive sins on certain conditions, can it be truthfully affirmed that sins are forgiven till those conditions are met?

5. I cannot conceive of any business transaction being complete where forms are at all required, until those forms are complied with. And you will confer quite a favor upon me by further explaining this matter.

6. It might be well for you to remember, too, that your illustration of the president is an impertinence, for the reason that the government is an absolute man-archy in which God both makes and executes all laws. Therefore it is a literal impossibility to discriminate between sinning against God and his government. H. M. BROOKS.

Paris, Ill.

ANSWERS.

1. As I did not in my illustration referred to, assign any particular "extent" to the sin, I cannot "explain the extent of the sin." Yes, the forgiveness must be as big as the sin in order to cover it. My argument is that the boy is actually forgiven in the father's heart before he complies with the father's requirement.

2. Had the boy refused to comply—a supposition quite impossible under the moral conditions supposed—he would not have received formal remission, and a new case of sin and rebellion would exist.

3. I think God is "always" willing to forgive—actually forgive on the ground of repentance, formally forgive on the ground of baptism.

4. God does not forgive, as I see the matter, until the conditions are met. I speak now with reference to a normal state of things.

5. I can expiain, but I cannot impart to another the power to "conceive" the truth explained.

6. There is a sense in which every wrong that we do is a sin against God; and yet, there is a sense in which "sin is the violation of law." The average man will not find it an "impossibility to discriminate" here.

It is a little surprising that a man who can settle the question of "impertinence" with such facility in my case and his own as well, should seek the aid of anybody in answering the foregoing trivial questions and observations. A. B. JONES.

Chautauqua (N. Y.) Notes.

The season at Chautauqua is now fully inaugurated. The attendance is the largest in the history of the Assembly for the same date —July.

The "Disciple Headquarters" is much improved by the removal of a partition. By this means our assembly room is much enlarged and beautified. Our indebtedness is much reduced, although further contributions are needed.

Not many of our preachers are yet here, the list being Geo. Anderson, Youngstown, O.; S. L. Darsie, Buffalo, N. Y., and B. Q. Denham, North Tonawanda, N. Y. There are 95 Disciples of Christ registered at headquarters, of whom 28 are from Kentucky and 18 are from New York.

S. L. Darsie preached last Sunday, and Bro. Anderson is announced for next Sunday.

Our prayer-meeting last Wednesday evening was well attended, and was admirably led by Mrs. J. J. Bronaugh, of Lexington, Ky.

Bro. W. J. Ford and wife, of Hiram, O., have charge at headquarters, and nearly all rooms are occupied under their efficient management. B. Q. DENHAM.

Minnesota.

Delightful is the season. Summer resorts are filling up with tired humanity. Minnesota, with its altitude of 1,000 feet, its extensive forests and broad prairies produces a brand of ozone famous the world around. Lake Minnetonka, the chief summer resort, is just beyond the limits of Minneapolis, and with its fleets, woodlands, hotels and cottages is a delightful spot to recreate in.

Business is brisk and the natural advantages bestowed by God Almighty are being exploited as never before. The iron mines of the North, where the ore lies out of doors like so many great hills and plains of sand (and as easily worked, the work being done by steam shovels) is illustrative of the general rush, it being almost impossible to secure sufficient shipping to meet the demand in the East.

And Minneapolis, with her 23 flourmills and as many more sawmills, adds to the volume.

Back of all, however, is that bulwark of prosperity, agriculture, which is pressing to the front by bounds and overshadowing all as should be in every well-balanced state. The past has been taken up with grain raising almost exclusively, as is the case in nearly all newly settled communities; but with reduced liabilities and established credit the farmers have taken to a diversification of crops with a pronounced tendency in the direction of dairying. And it is likely the state in a few years will be among the leaders in this important and paying industry. Already have first honors been carried off for excellence in butter-making at the Omaha Exposition.

Extension of the Time of Railroad Tickets to the Jubilee Convention.

A number have written and asked that the time limit of the tickets to the Jubilee Convention be extended to thirty days after the close of the convention. We have taken the matter up with the Central Traffic Association and that association has offered us thirty days extension provided we guarantee the expense of such an extension. The cost will be about $500.00; two railroad men must be employed for fully a month; some printing must be done. books must be kept giving a detailed account of each ticket; an office must be kept open here in Cincinnati for thirty days. To meet these expenses a fee of fifty cents per ticket is asked, and those asking the extension are required to guarantee whatever remains of the cost, as above indicated.

We are anxious to accommodate our brethren in every way possible. There is no fund known to us from which this $500 or any part of it can be drawn. It is uncertain whether a thousand people will want to remain after the close of the convention. Will all those desiring to have their tickets extended please write me of that fact so that we may form some estimate as to how many of our brethren will wish to take advantage of this extension of time and some estimate may be formed as to what action we should take.

PLEASE NOTE:—All those who desire to have their tickets extended beyond the return limit by the payment of 50 cents at the close of the convention, please inform the undersigned.

Boise, Idaho.

There is a noble band of Christian workers here under the pastorate of Bro. G. L. Surber.

This new state of Idaho with its wonderful mineral wealth, its facilities for stock raising and fruit raising certainly has a remarkable future before it. The salubrity of the climate here in Boise is not excelled anywhere in the world.

The winters are mild, the summers cool. The air is pure and dry and the water as pure as mountain reservoirs can make it.

There are all kinds of fruit here and in wonderful abundance.

The skies are as blue as those of Italy and cyclones and tornadoes are unknown.

Boise is the capital of the state and has a population of about 12,900.

They have a very fine system of public schools.

Our church home is a modest building with a seating capacity of about 300 and in a very good location. Unfortunately, the church here has a debt of two thousand dollars.

Bro. Surber has just been granted a vacation of two months. He donates his salary and expects to solicit aid for the church during the time he is absent.

The church has the credit abroad of a much larger membership than she really possesses. One of the members said to me: "We have just about twenty-five working and paying members out of one hundred and twenty-five on the church roll."

My idea is that the Home Mission Board could not do a better or a wiser thing than to come to the rescue of this consecrated and overburdened little band and pay off the $2,000 and let them stand on their feet. This is a field that they can not afford to neglect. The importance of a strong church here must be apparent to every one, and this debt of $2,000 hangs as a millstone about her neck.

I am only here spending a part of my summer vacation, but I can see clearly that unless the church can receive some very substantial aid and that soon, the cause here will practically perish. Fraternally,

C. M. PINKERTON,
Supt. City Schools.

The Kentucky Mountain Mission.

The thirteenth annual session of Hazel Green Academy, the Kentucky Mountain Mission of the C. W. B. M., closed on June 6. Looking back over the year's work we are saying it is equal to the work of any session in the history of the mission, and it far exceeds many of them.

There was an enrollment of 158 pupils, 69 of whom were boarders from many counties throughout the mountains. There were 36 enrolled in the Teachers' Drill Class, while many who were pursuing other courses of study were teachers in the public schools of Eastern Kentucky. There were just 53 public school-teachers enrolled in the school during the session. Many of these will teach during the summer and fall, and will again enter school in the winter.

There were seven graduated—six in the English course and one in the Latin scientific course. The work done by the pupils as a body was good and the deportment and interest manifest were exceptional. We do not think a better school of boys and girls, or young men and women, can be found anywhere. How eager most of them are to learn; and they believe that it takes hard study to acquire things worthy. These young men and women are not only interested in gaining knowledge intellectually, but they are also interested in spiritual things. The majority of them were regular in attendance upon all church services and were deeply concerned.

The mountains of Kentucky furnish one of the best possible fields for missionary work. People who have never visited the mountains can have no conception of the importance of this field. Come over and look in upon the mountain homes with their thousands of boys and girls, eager and anxious to know of the world and of God and his Christ. It behooves us to bestir ourselves and to make every preparation to win this people to the Christ. The people are anxious to hear "our plea," the "simple story of the cross," the "story of Jesus and his love." We must gather the young men and women into our mission school and send them out as heralds of the good news, the glad tidings. Such leaven will eventually leaven the whole lump. We must act while it is to-day. What may to-morrow bring forth! The people from the valley must after awhile turn towards the mountains as a source of supply. This whole country is rich in undeveloped resources; it will in some future day be the El Dorado of the great central part of our Union. Let us continue to occupy it, but upon a larger scale. WM. H. CARD.

A Progressive Institution.

The unusual healthfulness of the climate added to the superior educational advantages makes the Mary Baldwin Seminary for young ladies, Staunton, Virginia, the popular school that it is. During the present summer a building which will add greatly to the comfort and convenience of the students will be erected to the memory of its noble founder, Miss Mary Julia Baldwin. With increased facilities and a generous endowment the Seminary offers greater inducements than ever before to those in search of a classical education. The watch-word of this institution is Progress. Write to Miss E. C. Weimar, Principal, or Mr. W. W. King, Business Manager, for catalogue.

State Mission Notes.

The program committee of the state convention at Jefferson City, Oct. 25, are almost ready with the first rough outline of the program. The speakers are being obtained. D. R. Dungan, of St. Louis, has promised us the convention sermon, and those who know him know that it will be full of good things. This will be the beginning, and we promise you there shall be no let-down till the very end.

A little different division of time will obtain this year from last. At their request the C. W. B. M. will begin their sessions on Wednesday at noon, and will close Thursday at noon. The closing sermon, a sermon of consecration, will be given by D. W. Moore, of Springfield, and you can expect one of the richest feasts of all in that.

I am now in correspondence with the railroads in regard to rates. We will have a rate of one fare for the round trip if it is possible to get it, and we think it is. It will be a shame to us if we do not go to the convention at at Jefferson City with a unanimity and greatness that will be impressive. It is the first time we have ever been to the capital of the state. Our church there is weak, and needs the help which a great convention can give. A weak, poorly attended convention will injure the cause in the whole state, and especially will it be a depressing influence on the church at that place.

Every preacher in the state should make it a matter of duty to bring this matter before his people and insist that they owe it to the brotherhood at large, to the cause in the state and to the church at Jefferson City to come and be present at that convention. Remember the time and the place. Print it on a placard, write it on your bulletin board, "State Convention Meets at Jefferson City, Oct. 2-5, 1899. You are Expected to Go."

And remember how near the time is at hand, and so many of you have not sent in your contributions to the state work, and it is needing it now.

Yours in His name, T. A. ABBOTT.

To the Brethren at Large.

Having arrived at the age when I can no longer use to advantage the paper tracts, reports, sermons, etc., published by our people during the past thirty or forty years, and wishing to put them where they may do some good, I will give them or a portion of them to any one who will pay the cost of transportation. Some of these pamphlets are of little value to busy people of to-day, but some preachers and young Disciples wishing to know the past of our people and to some who may desire to publish items of interest concerning it or to get up addresses for public occasion, they are too useful to be thrown away. Among them are complete files of the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST, Standard and Guide for many years past.

It is known to many that for sometime I have been collecting Millennial Harbingers and furnishing them to others making up sets of thin rare and valuable work. This has cost me as immense amount of time, labor and expense, but I found pleasure in it, confident that the day is not far distant when the work will be of great value to many of our successors as a book of reference. A complete set consists of 41 volumes extending from 1830 to 1870 inclusive. Some of these numbers and volumes have been given me by kind brethren, but others I have bought at from $1.00 to $1.50 per vol.

Now I propose to sell well-bound sets at prices ranging from $50 to $90 and to give one-half the proceeds to any of our colleges or missionary societies that the purchasers may designate. It seeme to me that a copy of this valuable work should be placed in some of our public libraries to tell the story of our rise and progress to those who come after us, and from no other source can that story be as easily gathared as from the pages of the Millennial Harbinger.

I have also a large supply of odd numbers and volumes which I will dispose of at reduced rates to such as may be making up sets for themselves or for the use of others. It will not be long before these will be impossible to find; it is even now difficult. For further information address R. GRAHAM.

New Mexico Camp Meeting.

A camp-meeting will be held on the Gila River between Duncan, Arizona Territory, and Lordsburg, New Mexico, beginning Aug. 5th and embracing two Lord's days. The brethren expect the largest gathering of the kind ever known in that country. The writer has been invited to attend as chief speaker. He hopes to meet the Disciples from Eastern Arizona and Western New Mexico. Come and let us worship together and consult concerning the interests of the Master's kingdom in that region. Conveyance can be secured from Lordsburg if you reach there Aug. 4th by addressing B. B. Ownby.

Chautauqua Notes.

In sending to ask that the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST may be placed on the headquarters' table here where visitors have already been inquiring for it, it will not be amiss to note some of the sayings of Dr. A. H. Bradford, of Montclair, N. J., who has all of his ministerial lifetime been pastor of the First Congregational Church there, 29 years in one place. His words have been read, as he is associate editor of the Outlook. This has been called an age of doubt. In comparison with other times this is an age of faith, said he, in a sermon in the Amphitheatre on Sunday morning last. The scientific spirit distinguishes our time. Twenty-five years ago Prof. Huxley found in matter the promise and potency of all life. Sir William Crooks, in 1898, speaking from the same position as Huxley, declared that to-day science finds in life the promise and potency of all the material universe; and this statement marks the progress of science during the quarter of a century. George J. Romanes, after long wandering in the deserts of agnosticism, came back to a child's faith. In the British Scientific Association the Christian members maintain a daily prayer-meeting.

Few books have done more to strengthen faith in immortality than the "Unseen Universe," by Profs. Tate and Stewart. Spiritualism, faith-healing, Christian Science, mental science, call them fads, illustrate the universality of faith. All of them rest on evidence entirely in the sphere of the unseen.

Christian Science is exaggerated faith. Thinking of this faith, so universal, the writer calls up some grand expressions of our Bro. Harrison Jones, of Alliance, O., who has been preaching 70 years, and is now past 85. He was Gen. Garfield's army chaplain, and in his talk to me a few days since said: "Peter, before he knew the gospel was unto the Gentiles, saw the sheet let down from heaven three times, full of all manner of beasts. As a Jew he strove against the vision, but finally understood it, and said, Now I see that thou art no respecter of persons, and this gospel is for all the world. On the day of Pentecost they were together in one place, and the Spirit descended upon them, and they spake with tongues, every man in his own language. It was to be preached among all nations, beginning at Jerusalem. The Christ was the stone cut out of the mountain, which was to fill the whole earth. No sects, no divisions, no classes of people within this message, but it was to be one gospel, and the same gospel unto the uttermost parts of the earth. It was to give liberty to all nations, and wherever the American flag has gone the gospel has been heard, giving equal rights unto all men. So, when Cervera's ships sailed out into the mælstrom of death in the Carribean Sea, and fearful Union shots swept whole lines of men prostrate upon his decks, our great commander said, "Don't cheer, boys; scores of their men are dying now." And another majestic officer called, "Hats off. Let us thank God for victory." So righteousness prevailed, and the United States sailors cared for the fallen foe, and humanity was to be lifted up. W. J. FORD.

HERE is a medical lecture in a nutshell. The Kidneys drain water and impurities from the blood. The liver makes bile and helps to drive off other waste. If these organs work badly the body becomes a cesspool and disease sets in. You must get them into healthy action or die.

Dr. J. H. Mc Lean's Liver & Kidney Balm is an old and unsurpassed remedy for Backache, Debility, Sleeplessness, Lost Appetite, Foul Tongue, Palpitations and all other symptoms of disease in those organs. It cures as well as prevents every serious trouble in Kidney, Liver or Bladder. At druggists, $1.00 per bottle.

W. B. Taylor, of Chicago, and F. W. Mutchler are holding a protracted meeting for Bro. Mutchler's church at Center.

E. M. Norton preached three sermons at Lynxville, and had three additions; one baptism in the Mississippi River.

A. F. Willett got the church at Richland Center into so hopeful a mood and enthusiastic in work that they decided they must have a new house and sent for me to help them in the matter. I secured $1,805 in good pledges. This could not have been done but for Bro. Willett's good start. They went to work on the new building the next morning after I presented my report. They hope to have the new house ready for our state convention. Every dollar for this building was raised within the church membership.

The district convention at Sugar Grove was not largely attended at the start, though there was a better representation later.

J. H. Berkey, of Monroe, recently made a tour into Indiana and Illinois, lecturing. I filled the pulpit for him one Sunday and presented our state work there.

Mr. and Mrs. W. S. Campbell, of Rushville, Ind., are holding a meeting at Kelley Brook and Amanda, under the direction of the state board. Epidemics of diphtheria and measles closed the meetings at Kelly Brook.

H. F. Barstow will move this week from West Lima to Hickory, where he will become pastor. The cause there will continue to prosper under his leadership. During my last visit there I started an auxiliary of nine members.

F. N. Calvin continues to move things at Miwaukee. Additions almost evers Sunday recently, six in last three Sundays. The lot for the new building haa been purchased.

Sugar Grove asked to be released from having the state convention this year and Richland Center invited it there, which invitation the board unanimously accepted. The dates are Sept. 13-17. Let every church be represented by at least one delegate. Let every delegate plan to stay over Sunday. The following speakers from outside the state have been secured: C. C. Smith, of Cincinnati; Mrs. Helen E. Moses, of Indianapolis, Ind.; Pres. J. H. Hardin, of Eureka College, and Mr. Wharton and Miss Burgess, who are missionaries on furlough. This promises to be even a better convention than the last one. Let us make it larger as well as better. Every church should have its apportionment paid in full before convention time.

By A. McLEAN,
Secretary Foreign Christian Missionary Society.

This book contains 62 chapters, 384 large pages of printed matter, and more than 100 portraits and illustrations. The pictures of all the foreign missionaries of the Christian Church, their homes and places of worship, are among the illustrations.

In August, 1895, Secretary McLean, having been granted a leave of absence for one year, started on a visit to all our Foreign Missions, and this volume records in the author's terse, clear style, the impressions he received, the sights he saw, and the needs of our missionaries on the field. It contains a fund of information on the customs of the countries visited, the lives of the people, and the success of our missions. The book is profusely illustrated with pictures taken on the spot. The book is written in a most fascinating manner, enabling the reader to feel as though he had made the trip with the writer. The author set out from Cincinnati, Ohio, crossing the American continent to San Francisco, then across the Pacific Ocean to Japan, stopping at Honolulu, then to China, India, Australia, Egypt, Palestine, Turkey, European countries to London, across the Atlantic to America, and then home. The book gives the social, political and religious phases of the many nations visited by the author. ☞Cash must accompany the order.

Christian S. S. Literature

WHY USE IT?

For the same reason that Christian Churches employ Christian preachers. Preachers are instructors, but not more so than the literature placed in the hands of the children. If first impressions are most lasting, would it not be safer to put sectarian preachers in our pulpits than sectarian literature in our Sunday-schools?

Sunday-school instruction should be in harmony with the teaching of the Bible. The literature published by the Christian Publishing Company is sound to the core, and proclaims the Old Jerusalem Gospel in all its simplicity and purity.

The Blind Weaver.

The great wheel turns, and through my hands
I feel the swift threads run;
My sightless eyes can never see
In warp and woof of tapestry
The tissue Fate has spun;
I know not what I blindly weave,
And yet I dumbly pray
That when the shadows closer creep
Some bit of beauty I may keep
For all the toiling day.

Sometimes the thread is silken, soft
As thistledown afield:
I tremble—is it Love at last?
A light for vision overcast—
And has my heart a shield?
The wheel waits not, and I toil on
Along the vast design;
From coarse to fine the woof-threads range—
Ah, foolish one, they shall not change
For wish nor prayer of thine!

The night draws near. My tired soul
Is rent with sudden fears;
The wheel is still—the broken thread
That through my weary fingers sped
Is rough, and stained with tears.
My bleeding hands, I know, have grasped
A web of somber hue—
Pass not the sightless weaver by!
O Master, chide me not, for I
Have done as best I knew!

Her Siloam.

MINNIE E. HADLEY.

It was a beautiful Sabbath morning in June, and the sun's illuminating rays never shone more beautifully than now, as they poured through the elaborately painted windows of "First Trinity Church," in the city of L, throwing their gorgeous beams of kaleidoscopic colors with equal splendor upon the sombre, threadbare coat of the pious deacon and the gaudy organdie of the typical summer girl.

Marion Clifford, the soloist of the choir, attired in a costume which outrivaled the gayest of the gay, drank in the beauty of the scene about her and felt intoxicated by its richness. The church was a new one and its interior a veritable bower of loveliness, to which the sun this morning was adding extra touches of splendor.

Instead of a "sea of upturned faces" Marion saw in the congregation before her one continuous bed of bright-colored flowers, composed of new spring hats and supported by as many bright and airy figures of female loveliness.

The sweet fragrance of roses and lilies at the altar, blended with little wafts of perfume from various quarters of the congregation, was scenting the whole auditorium.

The great pipe organ was sending forth its most resonant and clearest tones; the soul-stirring chimes from the bowels of the great dome were issuing forth in harmonious peals of welcome — everything and everybody was at its best. Marion Clifford was never more stylishly dressed nor had her beauty shone to better advantage than this morning; and yet in the midst of it all Marion Clifford was very, very sad.

Religiously, she was undergoing a great change. Only in the last few weeks Christ had more than once touched her soul in the plain, outspoken, but earnest words of the new minister, Rev. Barnes.

Marion Clifford was wealthy, beautiful and talented, and during the four preceding solos that she had sung in the Trinity Church choir, the ministers were wont to praise, flatter and fawn on her as servilely as the most cringing admirer of the congregation. Possibly because they knew she liked it; possibly because it was policy to do so.

Rev. Barnes was so different! Never yet had he complimented her singing, and only last Sunday, when one of the girls had told her in his presence that the "solo was grand" and that "she looked too sweet for anything," Marion's quick eye detected a look of mingled pain and disgust which seemed to say, "You poor, foolish, deluded child; you might do first rate for a third-rate opera, but for a real, spiritual minded church soloist you are as far away from it as Dan from Beersheba."

Marion felt it keenly and she did what she had never done before — she prayed long and earnestly that she might be able to put more of Christ into her church singing and less of self.

"How beautiful everything looks this morning!" thought Marion. "How richly beautiful, and yet how much true Christianity is there here? Not so much as there ought to be surely, else the poor sufferers down at the stockyards would receive more attention."

Only the night before, aroused by something that Bro. Barnes had let fall in one of his sermons on reform, she visited that God-forsaken district for the first time, and its wretched pictures of vice and suffering were branded into her very soul, never to be forgotten.

"There is Bro. Barnes," she thought. "Of course, he is religious. Already his sermons are shedding warmth and gospel light into the remotest corners of this cold-storage church, while every ragamuffin in the stockyards seemed to know him as a personal friend."

"No. 2, Sister Morrison—wealthy, stylish, kind-hearted withal, and yet a menial slave to fashion and society."

"That lavender bonnet must have cost at least $20," thought Marion, and blushed when she remembered that her own had cost $15, and that there were people in the stockyards who were actually starving for bread and butter.

No. 3, and her eyes fell upon Miss Prim, a very precise old maid, who sat very erect and looked very dignified. "A slave to her intellect, her Browning philosophy and her club work," Marion was thinking. "How little she really knows or cares of the suffering multitudes all about her."

And thus she might have gone on with her cataloguing to the end of that aisle had not one of the choir girls nudged her. "We are waiting for your solo, Miss Clifford."

"By cool Siloam's shady rill
The lily must decay,
The rose that blooms beneath the hill
Must shortly fade away."

It was the third stanza and the last two words seemed to choke her. A grear lump arose in her throat and for a single moment her tones failed her. Thoughts of the proud and cold congregation on the one hand and of the poor, helpless sufferers on the other were surging through her brain in a very whirlwind of confusion.

Her elegant, fashionable hat seemed burning into her very brain and a fainting weakness seized her. In that trying moment, while all eyes were fixed upon her, a little prayer went up to God—just a word—but oh! how much of her soul went with it, and then she sang, sang with a clear, beautiful, but slightly quivering voice as she had never sang before, so much tenderness and spirit did she put into it.

"Thou, whose infant feet were found Within thy Father's shrine,
Dependent on thy bounteous breath,
We seek thy grace alone,
In childhood, manhood, age and death,
To keep us all thine own."

Rev. Barnes had turned in his chair and was looking straight at her.

Then the sermon began. And such a sermon Marion had never heard him preach before. His text was the blind man and the Pool of Siloam.

"There's a Siloam in the life of every penitent seeker," he shouted with earnest eloquence, "something that is difficult to do, some sacrifice to make as a test of faith which requires strength and courage, but Christ will always meet us half way. A very little bit of genuine sacrifice in the Christian life is worth a great deal of lazy, idle and mechanical service."

It was a new thought to Marion.

"There yet remains some Siloam in my life, in the waters of which I must bathe before I am truly converted. God help me to find it and give me strength to meet it, no matter how great may be the sacrifice!"

"I never heard you sing like that before, Miss Clifford," said Bro. Barnes, as he shook hands with her at the close of the service; "it gave me inspiration for my sermon."

The next day Madame de Arnant, the most fashionable milliner in L, almost lost her breath when Marion Clifford entered her shop and said:

"I should like to exchange this hat, Mrs. Arnant; I want something cheaper."

"But we never refund money, Miss Clifford, after a sale is once made."

"Of course you do not. But just give me the little dainty sailor there in the window that is marked $2.50, and I shall wear it all summer. That leaves $12.50. I will invest it all in those cheap sailors which lie there on the counter—if you would just as soon."

Marion's hat was not soild a particle, as she had only worn it to church the preceding Sunday, and as the sailors were slightly out of date, Madam de Arnant was only too glad to make the exchange. But what had possessed Marion Clifford? She must certainly have lost her senses!

"They are for the stockyards," explained Marion, smiling at the poor woman's look of consternation. "Please have them sent to my home as soon as possible."

Her work of reform had indeed begun. Henceforth she would practice the most rigid economy in every way and give her surplus funds to charity.

"After all this isn't much of a sacrifice," she thought, as she put on the dainty little white sailor and stood before the large mirror of her boudoir. "I am really prettier in this than I was in the more expensive one." And in spite of her trying to force it back, the thought would thrust itself upon her: "I am truly beautiful! Every one says so."

Suddenly she snatched the hat from her head and turned away from the glass.

"I really wish I were plain, very plain, then it would not be so hard for me to be good. My beauty tempts me to vanity."

The next moment she was humming, "By cool Siloam's shady rill," and thinking of Birdie Webb.

Birdie was a poor little cripple girl, who lived in the second story of one of the most miserable tenements of the stockyards, and whose father was a cruel, vicious drunkard.

"What a perfect little saint upon earth she is, to be sure," thought Marion. "I shall take her plenty of good books to read, an invalid chair with wheels and new clothes. Then she can go all about those wretched, sinful holes and teach the people of Christ. Why, that child's face is almost enough to convert one and her presence there shall be a continued benediction."

"Now Birdie, we must become the best of friends," said Marion that evening, as she placed the meek little creature in her new wheeled chair. "You are a very little creature, but you are also very good and very Christlike, and you must be my main help in leading all these wretceed people to the blessed Master that you so dearly love. I have rented the little empty room next to Mike Donnelley's saloon, and there we shall try to hold a Sunday-school and prayer-meeting. You shall be a great help to me in both."

"Me! Me! Miss Clifford?" and Birdie clapped her thin little hands with delight at the thought of making herself really useful in this sinful world.

The next moment she had burst into a flood of tears, but they were tears of joy, and Marion quietly depositing the books and clothes on a dilapidated old stool beside the child hurried down the rickety stairs, for she, too, was weeping. She also left a little hand-bell with which Birdie was to summon an honest old tobacco dryer across the way to help her down the stairs. Marion had already paid him for one month in advance.

It was a hot, windy afternoon in July. The little congregation at Marion's first stockyard prayer-meeting were idly lounging off in various directions.

"They have at least heard of Christ," thought Marion, as she gazed after the motley, hopeless looking array of ragamuffins and dissipated sots that had just been listening to her story of the Savior.

God had blessed her that afternoon with power which she had never dreamed of, and the beautiful story of Christ's death and resurrection she had told very touchingly. Her theme was the beautiful words of the Master: "Greater love than this can no man show than that he lay down his life for his friends," and it kept sounding in her ears after she had dismissed her congregation.

Suddenly an awful cry burst out upon the air. It was caught up by hundreds of voices and Marion's ears were filled with shrieks of excitement and yells of terror. Glancing at the rotten row of tenements across the way, she beheld a black cloud of smoke rolling up from one of the old roofs, while a little tongue of dark-red flame came curling up from the midst, and even as Marion gazed it was caught by the boisterous wind and went sweeping along with mad vengeance over the whole line of dry roofs.

Established 1780.
DORCHESTER, MASS.

Birdie Webb sat all alone in her little second-story hovel. Her mother was away at work, and her father as usual in Mike Donnelley's saloon, dead drunk.

Already the rotton timbers of the dingy little room were beginning to crackle in the hissing flames. She thrust her head from the window, ringing the little bell violently and shrieking for help. She felt herself growing hot—she seemed to be choking—then all grew dark around her and she fell fainting to the floor with one poor little arm hanging over the window-sill, as though imploring help.

"Great God, men! will you try to save this rubbish while yonder child burns to death! Carry this ladder to that window! Quick! Quick! or it's too late! That's it, that's it! well done! God bless you!"

It was a woman in black, a sister of charity, who spoke thus to the men in front of Mike Donnelley's saloon, and as she saw her commands executed she drew from her bosom a beautiful gold watch.

"This to the man who rescues yonder child!"

"And this!" cried another voice.

It was Rev. Barnes who had just appeared on the scene and was holding out a purse filled with coin.

No one stirred.

"There's no use a burnin' two lives fer one," said a desperate looking fellow. "Don't yer see! The hull thing's a startin' ter fall now!"

The next moment and the woman in black was scaling the ladder like the wings of the wind. Up, up, she went—higher, ever higher! Now she seizes the child and commences her descent.

There is a cry of applause. A shriek of wild, deafening, mad delight from the spectators below—and then there comes a crash, one awful crash—the old structure has fallen in and the ladder with its precious burden is reeling with the mass. The cry of delight changed to one of horror and the maddening throng dashed forward to save the helpless victims from the burning mass.

Strong arms delivered them, but not before both had been considerably burned, though not fatally.

As they carried the woman in black to a place of safety, her head-gear had fallen off and Rev. Barnes uttered a cry of horror as he recognized the pale face and unconscious form of Marion Clifford, the beautiful curls all charred and burned.

She had taken the nun's dress along to wear as a protection in visiting certain vile quarters of the city and had put it on on this occasion, as its woollen fabric was less liable to catch fire than her thin summer dress.

On hearing Birdie's cry for help she felt that this was to be the great Siloam of her life and that God would give her strength to meet it. It was a partial sacrifice of physical beauty but a gain of spiritual power.

Marion Clifford is now Rev. Mrs. Barnes, and with her husband is accomplishing wonderful work for Christ in the stockyards of L.

Her sacrifice won from them both love and confidence. "For greater love than this has no man shown, that he lay down his life for his friends."

THE HOME DEPARTMENT.

Great attention is now being given to the Home Department of the Sunday-school. It is intended for all persons who for any reason cannot attend the regular sessions of the school, yet who desire to study the International Bible Lessons, and keep pace with the great Sunday-school movement.

The Supplies.—The supplies necessary for the Home Department, in addition to the Lesson Annuals, Quarterlies or Papers that may be used in the school, are as follows:

1. Application Blanks for membership in the class to be signed by the applicant and filed with the Secretary of the Department.

2. The Home Register, containing full explanations for conducting the Department, with ten Test Questions on each lesson of the quarter, followed by blank spaces for writing the answers.

3. Certificates of Proficiency, to be given to members at the end of the quarter, signed by the Superintendent and Secretary, based on the written answers to the questions on the lessons of the quarter.

Price List.—The prices of these necessary supplies are as follows: 1. Application Cards, 10 cents per dozen; 50 cents per 100. 2. The Home Register, 5 cents per copy, or in packages of not less than ten copies, 3 cents each. 3. Certificates of Proficiency, 25 cents per dozen, or $1.50 per 100.

The Two Words.

One day a harsh word, rashly said,
Upon an evil journey sped,
And like a sharp and cruel dart
It pierced a fond and loving heart;
It turned a friend into a foe,
And everywhere brought pain and woe.

A kind word followed it one day,
Flew swiftly on its blessed way.
It healed the wound, it soothed the pain,
And friends of old were friends again;
It made the hate and anger cease,
And everywhere brought joy and peace.

But yet the harsh word left a trace
The kind word could not efface;
And though the heart its love regained,
It bore a scar that long remained;
Friends could forgive, but not forget,
Or lose the sense of keen regret.

Oh! if we would but learn to know
How swift and sure our words can go,
How would we weigh with utmost care
Each thought before it sought the air,
And only speak the words that move
Like white-winged messengers of love!

Don't Get Discouraged.

HATTRESS H. SHICK.

Don't get discouraged. Whoever gained anything by drawing down the corners of his mouth when a cloud came over the sun or letting his heart drop into his shoes like a lead weight when misfortune comes upon him? Why, man, if the world knocks you down and jostles past you in the race, don't sit whining under people's feet, but get up, rub your elbows and begin again. There are some people who even to look at, is worse than a dose of chamomile tea!

What if you do get a little puzzled on the dollar-and-cent question? Others beside you have stood in exactly the same spot and struggled bravely out of it, and you are neither halt, lame, nor blind that you cannot do likewise. The weather may be dark and rainy; very well, laugh between the drops and think cheerily of the blue sky and sunshine that will surely come to-morrow. Business may be dull; make the best of what you have, and look forward to something more hopeful. If you fall down, don't lament over your bruises, but be thankful that no bones are broken. If you can't afford roast beef and plum pudding, eat your codfish joyfully, and bless your stars for the indigestion and dyspepsia you thereby escape. The moment you begin to groan over your troubles and count up the calamities, you may as well throw yourself over the docks and be done with it! The luckiest fellow in the world might have woes enough, if he would set himself to hunting them up. They are like small particles of dust—you do not see them without close inspection.

Don't get discouraged, wife! Life is not long enough to spend in inflaming your eyes and reddening your nose because the pudding won't bake, and your husband says the shirt you worked over so long "set like a meal bag." Make another pudding, begin the shirt anew. Don't feel "down in the mouth" because dust will settle and clothes will wear out and crockery get broken. Being a woman does not procure you an exemption from care and trouble any more than your husband. Take things as they come, good and bad together, and whenever you feel inclined to cry, just change your mind and laugh. Keep the horrors at arm's length, and never turn a blessing round to see whether it has a dark side to it. Always take it for granted that things are blessings unless they prove false. Preachers, don't get discouraged, even though some one robs you of the honor justly due you; there is One that will give you the honor justly due you—Jesus Christ the Righteous.

Personal Charm.

The charm of manner consists in its simplicity, its grace and its sincerity. A gracious presence and a well-modulated voice have more power than one can well estimate. Training accomplishes much, and a mother or teacher makes a great mistake in not correcting those faults in children that will make them grow up to be ungraceful and unlovely. Children can be transformed by careful and correct training. One of the most disagreeable and unlovely schoolgirls of my acquaintance became the most charming and popular of young matrons in society. She instinctly felt her lack of power to win friends, and it made her unhappy. She had often spoken of it to me. Her faults were mostly due to overindulgence of parents, she being an only child. She heard an eminent lecturer on the subject, "Beauty in the Home," who argued that it was one's duty to cultivate tact, which he said embraced all the virtues, and to try to overcome the faults which created discord in the home. From being unlovely both in manner and person, she became the most loved and sought after where sympathy and a real friend were needed.

Some of the requisites that are needed to become a well-bred woman are not so hard to practice. A famous French woman was asked how she had acquired such perfect elegance of bearing and ease of manner, and she replied: "By always behaving when alone as if others were present." Ah, there is the true secret of thorough breeding! It consists in the small, sweet courtesies of every-day life. First of all, cultivate a well-modulated voice—a pleasant manner of laughing. Nothing can atone for a high-pitched, loud voice. You may have the face of an angel, but if you talk loudly and laugh boisterously, you can never appear well-bred. I call to mind one instance where a lady came to a city to live in a handsome home. Her husband became a club man; they had handsome traps and horses, were fond of entertaining, and they were rich enough to do so on an elaborate scale; but the people never gained a foothold in good society. The difficulty was that the wife was considered unrefined, and yet those who knew her intimately said it was her loud voice and laughter which stamped her as inelegant and debarred her from the circle she most desired.

Thoughtful attention to a few rules adds greatly to one's personality. We all like appreciation and commendation, even praise and love—they are the spirit-flowers that exhale sweet odors about the souls of every human being.

Let us cultivate them and extend our influence. We hear men and women say: "I don't care what people think." This is a mistake, for we all care something for the estimate that is put on our efforts, our abilities and our characters.—Sarah A. Henton, in the Sunny South.

KIDNEY TROUBLE.

The Most Prevalent, Dangerous and Deceptive Disease.

THOUSANDS HAVE IT AND DON'T KNOW IT.

Pains and aches come from excess of uric acid in the blood, due to neglected kidney trouble. Kidney trouble causes quick or unsteady heart beats, and makes one feel as though they had heart trouble, because the heart is over-working to pump the thick, kidney-poisoned blood through the veins and arteries.

Soreness or uncomfortable feeling in the back indicates kidney trouble of no small importance.

The passing of scanty or profuse quantities of urine is a warning of kidney trouble. If you want to feel well you can make no mistake by first doctoring your kidneys.

The famous new discovery, Dr. Kilmer's Swamp-Root, is the true specific for kidney, bladder and urinary troubles. It has cured thousands of apparently hopeless cases after all other efforts have failed.

Sold on its merits by all druggists in fifty-cent and one dollar sizes. A sample bottle sent free by mail to any address. Also a book telling all about Swamp-Root and its wonderful cures. When writing, address Dr. Kilmer & Co., Binghampton, N. Y., and mention that you read this generous offer in the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST.

THE SON OF GIDEON.

In Six Chapters—1.

"Caleb!"

"Here I am, father."

"Hush! not so loud. The air is full of ears!"

"Has anything happened?" asked the boy, drawing near. "But father, how pale you are!"

"I have much to tell you, my son, and but a moment to speak. Yes, something has happened, everything has happened, or is about to happen, that makes the blood run cold!"

Tola passed with rapid strides toward the great stone gateway of Shechem, followed by his perplexed son, a boy of about sixteen years of age. The sun was setting and the watchman was about to close the massive gate. "Whither away?" the watchman inquired.

Tola caught his son's hand and drew him rapidly through the gateway. When they were outside the city walls he called back, "Peace be with you!" The valley that lay below the hill upon which Shechem stood was strewn with great rocks. Tola led Caleb among these as if he wished to escape observation, yet apparently these two were the only living beings in the valley. The sun had set now, and darkness began to settle upon central Palestine.

At last, after looking keenly about him in all directions, Tola dropped behind one of the rocks that rose from the grassy plain to a height of perhaps ten feet; he bade Caleb follow his example.

"Now we are safe for the present," said Tola. "Listen well, my boy. I am about to explain what has happened, and then I shall send you on a most perilous journey. You are not afraid?"

"I will give myself no time to be afraid," returned Caleb. "Perhaps I shall be afraid after it is over. But I wish I had my good steel bow that Gideon gave me just before he died."

"Hush! Do not speak that name, my son."

"And why not? Was not he the best friend we ever had? And his son saved my life, as you know. Israel never had so great a judge as he."

Tola rose cautiously to his feet and then looked around his natural barricade; but the desolate appearance of the valley, now growing quite dark, reassured him. He addressed Caleb: "Then you will be the more ready to risk dangers when I tell you that it is to save the life of that very boy who kept you from drowning."

"What! How can I save Jotham? For how can he be in danger? And if he were, how could you know, being so far away, in another town?"

"I will tell you all I know. When the news came a week ago that Gideon the great judge was dead, the people said, 'Let his sons be judges over us, each in a certain district of the land.' For you know Gideon has many sons, and Jotham is but the youngest. But this very day one of the sons came here to Shechem."

"Yes, I saw him," said Caleb; "it was Abimelech; I never liked him, his eyes are so dark and fierce. I asked him about his half-brother, Jotham. He only scowled and strode away."

"It is that man we are hiding from," said Tola; "it is that same Abimelech who seeks my life. When he came to-day to Shechem, he called a council of the elders of the city. One of them told me of it only half an hour ago. Abimelech addressed them in his smooth, crafty manner: 'Which is better for you?' he said, 'that you should be ruled over by so many different men, or that only one person should rule over you? Remember that my mother was a woman of Shechem; but the other sons of Gideon are children of foreign women. So I am your bone and flesh. Let me be your ruler. Then Shechem shall have a king, and the city shall become mighty in Israel!'

"When the elders heard this, they were moved with a desire for greatness and glory, and they cried out, 'Abimelech is our brother, let him be king!' Then Abimelech told them if they would furnish him money, he would make himself strong against the other sons of Gideon. The elders ran to the temple of Baal and took from the treasury seventy pieces of silver, which they handed over to the wicked son of Gideon. Have you not noticed how busy Abimelech has been all day, hurrying hither and thither, stopping those men who are always ready for violence, and entering into mysterious bargains with them? What was he doing? He was hiring men to go with him this night to Ophrah to murder all of his brothers!"

On hearing these words Caleb sprang to his feet. "And you wish me to go to Ophrah to warn Jotham and the rest?" he cried in great excitement. "Well; I will go!"

"You are Tola's son!" cried the father with beaming pride. "But a few words more: Abimelech, knowing how I loved Gideon, will seek to destroy me. I go to Thebez, where I will take your sister. There you must come, with as many of Gideon's children as escape. I would not send you to Ophrah if I could go myself. But your sister must be cared for and a secret place got ready for the coming of the refugees. Be valiant, my son. Be cautious. No, you do not need your steel bow. You could accomplish nothing against Abimelech's soldiers. You must match his might with cunning. Hide in the shadows, run without noise, watch always!"

"I am ready," said Caleb. "But how are you to get into the city again to my sister? For the gates are all shut."

"The soldiers are yet to come forth. When they do so, I will slip in unnoticed. Now away like a bird, Caleb! Farewell."

They embraced, and when Caleb would have rushed away, Tola still held him in his arms. The boy heard him whisper, "Into thy care, O God!" Then the strong arms relaxed, and Caleb darted from the protection of the rock and sped toward Ophrah.

His way lay between two mountains, on one side Mount Gerizim, upon which Shechem stood, and upon the north the frowning height of Ebal. It was a warm night and presently the rising moon cast a white light down the valley. The air trembled deliciously to the trills of countless nightingales. It was difficult to understand that the spirit of murder was abroad in so fair a world. But Caleb, never pausing to think, ran, ran, till his breath came fast and his feet grew heavy.

He knew the way, although he had never traveled it alone, and everything looked strange in the moonlight. His heart leaped with joy when in the distance he saw the great walls of Ophrah, white and dreamy in the silvery light. At the same moment his ears caught a sound behind him. He paused to listen, and in that instant recognized the thud of many galloping hoofs. Abimelech and his party were coming, riding the swift Syrian mules, for in those days horses were not used in Palestine.

Caleb after that one moment of listening sped on, and as he ran, he looked about him for a place of concealment. But there were no friendly rocks strewn before Shechem. The light of the moon showed a broad, level plain, which stretched away to the very foundation of the city walls. The boy hoped to gain these walls, and hide on one side while the party of Abimelech entered at another. The thunder of the hoofs rang in his ears, and above them arose a shout, for his form had been discovered by the riders. Caleb was near the city now. He had forgotten his weariness. Yet he felt helpless before the men of blood, for since he had been seen, how could he hope to escape by crouching in the shadow of the walls? They would sweep around the city and hunt him out.

Suddenly a low groan escaped his lips. He was close to one of the gates when it swung noiselessly back, and there in the threshold stood a soldier, armed with complete armor, while behind were to be seen the shadowy forms of other soldiers. Caleb recognized the man in the gateway. It was Zebul, a man Shechem and an intimate friend of Abimelech. The boy stood for a moment as if petrified. Abimelech and his company were rapidly sweeping down upon him in the rear, while Abimelech's friend opposed his further flight. In that same moment of cold despair came the sudden remembrance of the danger that hovered over the sons of Gideon. He remembered his mission and his father's proud confidence. The destiny of many men rested upon him.

He dared not throw himself upon the mercy of Zebul, for he knew the soldier to be inflexible in his plan of conduct. Since he had consented to be Abimelech's allay, no mercy was to be expected from him. But even as Caleb remembered this, he ran forward, and paused before the gate.

HERBERT L. WILLETT.

The Prophet Ezekiel is one of the most picturesque figures in Old Testament history, although perhaps less studied than most of the other prophets. At the time Jerusalem was first besieged by Nebuchadrezzar he was taken to Babylon in that group which included King Jehoiachin. The residence of this band, or of that particular part of it to which Ezekiel belonged, was Tel Abib (Corn-Hill), on the banks of the Chebar, probably one of the irrigating canals of Southern Babylonia. Ezekiel was of priestly family and seems to have been familiar with the temple ritual of Jerusalem to an extent which indicates that he was old enough to have served in the priestly capacity before his departure. Some five years after his arrival in Babylonia he received his prophetic call as narrated in the opening chapters of his book, and from that time on discharged the office of pastor or shepherd to his countrymen who were with him in the far land.

The first of the book contains the sermons and tracts of Ezekiel, spoken and issued in the period between his call and the destruction of Jerusalem, which occurred in the year 586 B. C. It was the universal feeling among the Jews both in Judah and in Babylonia that the present distresses were only temporary, and those who had been deported would soon be permitted to return to Jerusalem. Ezekiel in Babylonia, like Jeremiah in Jerusalem, emphasized the approaching destruction of the city, a message which was not only disbelieved by the people, but which brought the prophets themselves into personal disfavor with the people. But time demonstrated the truth of the predictions, and at last there arrived in the circle of the exiles at the Chebar a messenger who brought the fatal tidings that Jerusalem had fallen. This message and its reception are recorded in Ezekiel 33:21. The shock produced was instantaneous and universal. The confident hopes of the people were blasted. They saw that nothing but a long period of exile was before them. Despondency succeeded assurance, and gradually the interest in Jerusalem and the true religion was slackened.

From this time the prophet changed the whole plan of his preaching. When the people were indifferent to their sins and confident of return he had proclaimed deeper calamity. Now that hope seemed gone and the capital itself was in ruins, he preached a gospel of confidence. Israel should return; the nation should be purified of its sin; the land should be cleansed of its enemies; the temple should be rebuilt; a relation such as had never been possible between God and the people should henceforth be realized. Of course, the first element in this reconstruction was the change which must take place in the people themselves. Their sins had brought this calamity upon them. They were not reaping the fruits of their ancestors' guilt, but of their own. One of Ezekiel's greatest doctrines is that of personal responsibility. Therefore a new nature must take the place of the old one. The people must be cleansed. This is the theme of the present lesson.

Upon the nation defiled by contact with idolatry and the superstitions of Babylon there must be sprinkled the water of purgation. This was not so much clean water as cleansing water. The reference is to that custom of the Levitical service described in Numbers 19:9-18, in which water mingled with the ashes of a sacrificial beast was sprinkled upon whatever object or person had contracted defilement.

*Sunday-school Lesson for Aug. 6, 1899—The New Heart (Ezekiel 36:25-36). Golden Text—A new heart will I give you. Lesson Outline—1. A New Nature (25-27); 2. A New Relation with God (28-32); 3. A New Prosperity (33-36).

So the nation is to be cleansed, the prophet declares, from its moral pollution and from its idolatry. Its present indifference to the divine will and carelessness concerning its own religious duty to the world must give place to an enthusiasm for its divine mission. Its heart is now like stone, heavy with despair or indifference; a heart of flesh must take the place of this. By this figure of speech the prophet emphasizes the new nature and purpose which the exiles must receive. Only in a cleansed nature can the Spirit of God take its place, and this change was absolutely essential if Israel's great task was to be accomplished.

The remainder of the lesson is taken up with the prophetic encouragements in the form of promises of return to Canaan, of renewed fertility to the land that has been stripped by the invader, of immunity from further famine, of the rebuilt and reinhabited cities, of the tilled soil, and such beauty in the vision of the repeopled country that men who were formerly astonished at its desolation shall declare that it has become like the garden of Eden. All this the prophet declares is not to be so because the nation is worthy, but because the honor and the love of God demand it. God is pledged to the fulfillment of his purposes. Those purposes can only be realized through Israel, therefore Israel must meet the responsibility.

That which was true of Israel in the days of its exile is equally true of the individual and of the church to-day. No effective work can be done except by a prepared instrument. The man who would serve the Master efficiently must be himself a prepared man, consecrated to the work to which he has set his hand. His heart must be renewed. His past life of sin must be abandoned. His soul must be indwelt by the Spirit of God. Then alone is he clothed upon with power for divine work.

TOPIC FOR AUGUST 6.

DRIFTING.

(Eph. 4:14; Jas. 1:1-8.)

It is a poor craft that only drifts. Even a boat propelled by the wind does not drift. It makes head against current and tide and wind itself by tacking. More powerful and dignified still is the steamer that in the very teeth of all storms plows its way. The canalboat, poor, slow thing that it is, does not drift but is drawn by mules. Almost the only craft that merely drifts, in this country, is the shantyboat on our great American rivers, which lazily drops downstream with the current and is owned by some worthless trader, fisherman, or water tramp, many of whom do not stop at thieving and worse.

So the lives of men, the more they are governed and controlled by current, wind and tide, the less are they admirable; and the more they make head against all opposition and shape their own course, the more do they deserve credit. Not your Micawbers, but your Savonarolas! The drifter, Paul says, is a child whose attention is caught for a brief moment by every new bubble of doctrine, sleight of men, craftiness, or wile.

This is not saying that one should run counter to all currents. There are tides in the affairs of men which should be taken and used. There are influences to which we should give ourselves up. Lincoln sought to find what the people wanted, and execute that. He followed popular currents. Yet no one would accuse Lincoln of merely drifting. But there are politicians who, seeking to find the strongest currents, for gain, and not for God, become mere drifters. A current is good so long as it does not lead to a fall. There are those who are not sensitive enough to new movements, and there are those who are too sensitive. These latter, the Savior says, are like rich soil thinly strewn over stony ground, which is a hotbed for every new seed that falls. Do not lock up your heart from every good influence that may sweep over society. Neither open it so wide that all things flow into it and carry it away.

James applies the principle to temptations and doubts. He counts it a joy to fall into temptation. We, most of us, count it a sorrow. A temptation is not necessarily a sign of weakness. It may be a sign of strength. There are some natures so powerful, so tempestuous, that they endure heavier tests than others can understand. Their temptation may be indication of their strength. But yielding to temptation is the weakness. A ship that shivers resolutely through mountain waves may even be all the stronger for the test. Read Kipling's story of the steamer finding herself, in the "Day's Work." It is the ship that goes to pieces in the test—all to pieces—that is worthless. She may sometimes stagger beneath the shock, as tons of water are hurled upon her deck. So may men and women reel under the weight of temptation. Yet to endure such triumphantly, and come off more than conquerors through Christ that strengtheneth, this is "to find one's self." Thou wilt keep him in perfect peace whose mind is stayed on thee.

Intellectual temptation James also deals with. When we are foolish and unwise, let us not drift in our unwisdom. Ask of God. He supplies mind for those who lack. But O, we must believe in him and not be forever questioning. Have we given our hearts to him? Then never for a moment let us doubt the irrevocable character of that gift. Suppose we do not understand all his ways, which are past finding out; suppose we do lose something of the joyful exaltation of our first moments of surrender to the Lord; suppose we do sometimes stagger and fall; nevertheless, let this thought forever abide with us: "I am thine, O Lord. There can be no change in that. All my ways, all my doings, all my affairs are in thy hands. Shape thou my life." This is not drifting. This may be anchoring; or it may be battling; but it is never drifting. "Thou wilt keep him in perfect peace whose heart is stayed on thee." No matter what storms, no matter what pains, temptations, trials, doubts, none of these things shall move us. We shall not drift.

New Juveniles

Saturday Talk Series of Biographical Sketches And Short Stories for Children

BY LAURA GEROULD CRAIG.

PUBLISHED IN SIX VOLUMES

Profusely Illustrated

"Queen Elizabeth" — Illustration, Little Queens.

Vol. I. Little Presidents.
Vol. II. Little Kings.
Vol. III. Little Queens.
Vol. IV. Little Orators.
Vol. V. Little Generals.
Vol. VI. Little Statesmen.

The author thoroughly understands the mental wants of the child, and in these volumes these wants are happily met. The biographical sketches of the great men of the world, while they were growing into greatness, are always fascinating to the children.

These stories are presented in such an attractive manner that the mind of the child will retain them all through life. The little folks that will carefully read these stories will be in possession of many of the incidents in the lives of a large number of the greatmen and women who have blessed the world with their lives. These little volumes should be placed in the homes of this country to bless children. The little ones of the family should know the facts given in this series of biographical stories, and thus early in life they can be taught that the "Lives of great men all remind us we can make our lives sublime."

THE YOUNG PEOPLE'S PRAYER MEETING and Its Improvement.

BY CAL OGBURN.

This book is the offspring of experience and observation, setting forth how to make the Young People's Prayer-Meetings most interesting and profitable. It has been written, not for the young people of the past, but for those of the present and future—not for the experienced, but for the inexperienced; "and now, little book, may God bless your mission of usefulness to the young men and young women, to the boys and to the girls who have pledged themselves to be loyal to Christ and the Church."

On The Rock

OR

Truth Stranger Than Fiction

A STORY OF A STRUGGLE AFTER THE TRUTH AS IT IS FOUND IN CHRIST.

By D. R. DUNGAN.

Many editions of this book have been sold, and the demand increases. It is the most popular book on FIRST PRINCIPLES ever published by our people.

This volume discusses no new themes, nor does it present novel ideas upon the old theme of Christianity. Its novelty is found in protesting against novelties in religion, and insisting upon the usages of the primitive Church. It adopts a method for the discussion of salvation from sin which is, it is hoped, adapted to the popular education on the religious issues of the day. It was written for the benefit of, and is dedicated to, the people, with the prayer and hope that it will be widely read, and that it will do them good.

The author has carefully avoided technical expressions and obscure phrases, in order that it might meet their wants. He has endeavored to take these questions from the exclusive hands of the theologians, and place them in the hands of the people for their own adjudication. Will they, like the Bereans, examine the Scriptures to see whether these things be so?

Chips from our Workshop.

BY D. H. PETREE.

A friend of God is no friend to the liquor saloon.

Love is the sweetest flower that grows in God's garden.

Free grace does not mean a free pass into heaven unless you have done the will of God.

It is not right for churches to exalt rites over righteousness.

When you lose your money, be sure you don't lose your religion.

When you decide to do right you fire an effective shot at the devil.

If you have a grudge against your neighbor, and wish to be rid of it, get down on your knees and pray.

Whenever you see a shadow, remember there is sunshine somewhere.

The man who walks with God will not walk into a barrroom to take a drink.

A man is rich without money and strong without strength if he has God on his side.

A preacher should not hesitate to cast a dart at sin, even if a rich man is hiding behind it. —Christian Tribune.

Literature.

SCIENCE AND PEDAGOGY OF ETHICS. By H. W. Everest, A. M., LL. D., Dean of Bible College of Drake University. St. Louis, Christian Publishing Co. $1.50.

The work is just what one would expect from its title, who has read the writings of the author in other books and on other subjects. It is thoughtful, scholarly, crititcal, condensed, clear, careful, conclusive. And I might have added, conscientious, but that is taken for granted. Indeed, the author has a larger conscience than any other writer on moral philosophy. I have found authors troubled to make conscience equal the uses made of it in the Bible, but so far as I now see Bro. H. will succeed with any clear and authentic use of the word.

The work as a whole has two excellencies rarely found together: it is precise and closely critical, and yet will be read with great interest even by those not accustomed to the consideration of such topics. Not for its lightness, but for its clearness and elegance we would recommend it even for summer reading. While it will be a most admirable work for the class room (really the best I have seen) it would be a splendid work for a correspondence course, as one could follow it without the daily presence of a teacher; that is to say, the reader and student will not find difficulties which the book itself does not unlock. I predict for it a large sale and a record of great usefulness.

D. R. DUNGAN.

LITERARY NOTES.

Fredrick A. Stokes Co., 5-7 East 16th St., New York, are soon to issue a book entitled "The Life and Letters of Sir John Everett Millais," late president of the Royal Academy, by his son, J. G. Millais. In these two volumes is contained the authoritative biography of the most distinguished and popular painter of the last half of the century.

"The United States Army and Navy" is the title of a new book of elegant design to appear from the press of the Werner Co., Akron, Ohio, this month. There seems to be a demand for just such a book, and we predict a wide sale for this new, down-to-date, elegant book.

LESSONS IN SOUL-WINNING, by E. H. Kellar, is a work containing many valuable suggestions in soul winning, and will be very helpful to those who wish to aid the pastor in personal work. 184 pages. Cloth, 75 cents. Christian Publishing Co.

ALLEN.

Mrs. D. M. Allen, of Baldwyn, Miss., recently passed from earth to heaven. Sister Allen was nearly 83 years old. She was a woman rich in faith, a conscientious Christian. She moved to Mississippi from Virginia 62 years ago. She was the mother of a large family. J. H. Allen, of St. Louis, Mo., and John M. Allen, of Mississippi, are her sons well known. The writer, her pastor, was unable, on account of sickness, to attend the call to preach her funeral, but the services were conducted by Bro. G. W. Archer and Rev. J. S. Berry. The remains were interred at the Masonic Cemetery in her home town. Mother in Israel, farewell, till we join thee in "the upper day!" "In that land, surcease of sorrow, we shall spend a bright to-morrow."

JAMES H. BROOKS.

Corinth, Miss., July 14, 1899.

BALDWIN.

Chas. Milton Baldwin "fell asleep in Jesus" June 29, 1899, aged 30 years, one month and 29 days. He was a son of Mr. and Mrs. Samuel Baldwin, of Plevna, Mo. At the age of 15 he became a Christian, and had ever since been a loyal and zealous follower of his Master. Always alert to the advancement of the cause of Christ, the church at Plevna had no member more faithful than he. Besides the saddened father and mother, he leaves two sisters and a large circle of relatives and friends to mourn his death. Funeral conducted by the writer, June 30th.

THE EXILED PROPHET

By J. G. ENCELL

For 60 Days We Offer This Book For $1.00, Postpaid

This book is of especial interest to Sunday-school teachers just now. Some of the Sunday-school lessons for the third quarter of 1899 are taken from the Book of Daniel, and the first seventy pages of "The Exiled Prophet" contain an Essay on the Book of Daniel, written by the well-known author and Bible scholar, Dr. D. R. Dungan. This essay will explain the Prophecy of Daniel, and should be read and studied by the Sunday-school teachers of to-day. Having read this they will be prepared to present the Sunday-school lessons in the present quarter to their classes in an acceptable manner. In addition to Dr. D. R. Dungan's explanation of Daniel the book is an able treatise on Revelation, the author of which has devoted many years of study and investigation to what many think is a "Sealed Book."

The book embraces 245 pages, neatly bound in cloth and profusely illustrated. Send orders to CHRISTIAN PUBLISHING CO., ST. LOUIS.

Publishers' Notes.

Remember

That the price of "The Exiled Prophet" has been reduced for sixty days from $1.25 to $1.00. This reduction is made in order that the book may go into the hands of as many Sunday-school teachers as possible while they are studying the present quarter's lessons. The first seventy pages of this volume are devoted to an explanation of the Book of Daniel, prepared by Dr. D. R. Dungan, of St. Louis. This part of this Book should be carefully studied by the Sunday-school teachers, and all students of the Bible. The book is sent postpaid on receipt of $1.00.

Books on Bible Characters.

As the Sunday-school lessons for the last half of the year 1899 are taken from the Old Testament the workers in the Sunday-school would be greatly benefited by reading our recent Bible characters. A careful reading of such books as "In the Days of Jehu" and "King Saul," written by Breckenridge Ellis, and "Queen Esther," written by M. M. Davis, will throw much light on a proper understanding of these Bible characters. The interesting features in the lives of these historic characters are given to the readers of these books by men who have long been close students of the Bible. The price of In the Days of Jehu and Queen Esther is 75 cents each, and "King Saul" is $1.00, postpaid.

Men of Yesterday.

T. W. Grafton's late book gives short biographical sketches of Walter Scott, Barton W. Stone, John Smith, Isaac Errett, Barton W. Johnson and O. A. Burgess. This work gives the essence of the lives of these religious heroes, and is the book for the busy man of these busy times. The book contains 291 pages, printed on clear type, bound in neat cloth, and the price is $1.00, postpaid.

Aunt Maria's Saturday Talk Series

Is complete in six books, and the titles are "Little Kings," "Little Queens," "Little Presidents," "Little Orators," Little Generals," "Little Statesmen." These books contain true stories in the lives of many great men and women of the past. They are told in such a manner as to attract and instruct the young mind. Appropriate illustrations are found in each volume. The stories are interwoven with many important historic facts that should be known by the young of to-day. The price of the entire set is $2 50, postpaid, or any one volume will be sent, postpaid, for 50 cents.

A Call to Prayer.

In view of the great importance of the varied interests before the churches in this Jubilee Year, and that the cause of Jesus Christ our Lord might be advanced, the acting board of the American Christian Missionary Society, at its meeting Friday, July 21st, voted to suggest to the brethren that the second Lord's day in [illegible] be set apart as a day for special prayer [illegible] their homes and in the churches for the presence and blessing of God upon our Jubilee Convention; upon the American Christian Missionary Society; its plans and its missionaries that they may be fruitful to the glory of God; upon the Board of Church Extension and its offerings; upon our work of Ministerial Relief and upon the effort to advance our home work by an offering of $100,000 in this the Jubilee Year of the American Christian Missionary Society. As the disciples took their five loaves and two fishes to Jesus and came back with the increase, sufficient to feed the multitude; so we should take our resources to the Lord, and with his blessing we may become an army that cannot be defeated.

We urge our brethren to earnest prayer to the Head of the church for his blessing upon our work this year.

What We Plead For

The Christian-Evangelist pleads for:

The Christianity of the New Testament, taught by Christ and his Apostles, versus the theology of the creeds taught by fallible men—the world's great need.

The divine confession of faith on which Christ built his church, versus human confessions of faith on which men have split the church.

The unity of Christ's disciples, for which he so fervently prayed, versus the divisions in Christ's body, which his apostles strongly condemned.

The abandonment of sectarian names and practices, based on human authority, for the common family name and the common faith, based on divine authority, versus the abandonment of scriptural names and usages for partisan ends.

The hearty co-operation of Christians in efforts of world-wide beneficence and evangelization, versus petty jealousies and strifes in the struggle for denominational pre-eminence.

The fidelity to truth which secures the approval of God, versus conformity to custom to gain the favor of men.

The protection of the home and the destruction of the saloon, versus the protection of the saloon and the destruction of the home.

For the right against the wrong;
For the weak against the strong;
For the poor who've waited long
For the brighter age to be.
For the truth, 'gainst superstition,
For the faith, against tradition,
For the hope, whose glad fruition
Our waiting eyes shall see.

CURRENT EVENTS.

The speech of Sir Wilfred Laurier, Prime Minister of Canada, in the Canadian Parliament, a few days since, in which he declared that nothing but war or arbitration could settle the boundary dispute between the United States and Canada, has created considerable feeling in that country, though there seems to be no excitement in Washington and no expectation of a war. It will be remembered by our readers that the British Government conceded Alaska to Russia in 1825, and that in 1867 Russia sold Alaska to the United States. There was never any boundary question between England and Russia, or between the United States and Canada, until 1884. The maps of Great Britain up to that time indicated the boundary to be accordidg to the present claims of the United States. The disputed territory, according to the statement of the matter now before us, extends in the form of a pan-handle down the Pacific Coast. The Canadians contend that this pan-handle should end at the Behm Canal. The Americans hold that it runs to the Portland Canal. There is some dispute also as to the width of this pan-handle. The discovery of the value of Alaska, it is believed, has led Canada to make its present claim, and this claim has become a political issue in Canada. The motives of the Canadians is to secure an outlet to tidewater, from which they are excluded by the boundary line as it is now recognized. It has been suggested that the United States grant Canada the outlet which they desire without changing the boundary line elsewhere. Great Britain is not supporting Canada very warmly in its contention, and it is believed that a compromise can be reached between the mother country and the United States. If not, then according to the precedent we have set in the case of the Venezuela boundary dispute, we should agree to submit the question to arbitration, and this will be agreed to, of course, before any resort to force. It may be regarded as certain that these two great nations are not going to war over so insignificant a question as this Canada boundary dispute.

The Peace Conference at the Hague is pronunced by those in a position to judge to have been a great success, despite the fact that it failed to accomplish what was specified in the original call, or all that was anticipated by the more sanguine. Commenting on the conference, after an interview with the American delegates, W. T. Stead, of London, says:

The conference achieved a great success—much greater than the delegates anticipated—and the result was achieved largely by the amour propre of capable men from all parts of the world, determined to accomplish something worth their assembling. The result surprised all of them and the magnitude of the gains is imperfectly understood even by the conference. The establishment of a permanent court of arbitration on the American principle of revision, plus the French dealaration of the duty of neutrals to recommend disputing powers to resort to the arbitration court rather than to war, represents vast progress in the evolution of human society. The recognition of the duty to represent to disputants the desirabillty of resorting to the arbitration court entails no obligations on the Americans inconsistent with their traditional policy. This is made absolutely clear by the declaration signed by the American delegation, read in full at the conference to-day and entered on the records.

Aside from the substantial progress thus indicated, the very fact that the leading nations of the world have met in council, through representative men, to consider the question of how to avoid war, is an immense gain, and establishes a precedent which is sure to be followed in the future. The United States has a right to congratulate itself upon the part it has played through its able representatives in the results of this conference. It is an event that is destined to hold an important place in the future history of mankind.

From the report of the Bureau of Immigration for the year ending June 30th last, it does not appear that this country is losing its popularity abroad. The report shows that 311,715 immigrants arrived during the year, against a total of 229,299 for 1898, and 230,832 for 1897. This shows an increase of more than 70,000 over the last fiscal year. The causes assigned for this increase are the successful war with Spain and American prosperity. The official figures show that of the total number of arrivals, 195,277 were males, and 116,438 females. In only one case, that of the immigrants from Ireland, does the number of females exceed that of the males. Italy takes the lead in the number of immigrants, having sent us the last year, from both North and South Italy, 78,730. Ireland sends us 32,345. Our Jewish population, representing, of course, different countries, was increased last year 37,415. The Chinese immigration decreased during the year, there being 1,638 arrivals, only 11 of the number being females. Every race of people on the face of the earth furnished immigrants except Wallachian. A glance at the table showing the different countries represented in this immigration affords striking proof of the heterogeneous character of the population that is pouring in upon us. It will require strong influences to mold these various peoples into a homogeneity of sentiment so that they may be helps and not hindrances to our national development.

The Commissioner of Internal Revenue, Mr. Wilson, has completed the tabulation of the returns of the various collecting districts of the United States up to the close of the fiscal year, June 30th, showing the receipts of war taxes. According to this report, says a dispatch from Washington, "the total is $272,876,850.25. The revenues for the preceding year were $169,993,322.18. Tae difference between the two amounts, $102,983,528.07, can be fairly credited as the proceeds derived from the war taxes. Chairman Dingley, of the ways and means committee, estimated that the proceeds from the war measure would average at least $10,000,000 a month, and that it would yield more than $125,000,000 for the year. The Commissioner of Internal Revenue expects Mr. Dingley's prediction to be verified during the coming year. The shortage for this year is explainsd on the ground that the full force of the law was not felt throughout all of 1898-'99. As an instance of this, the tax on the legacies is cited The total amount realized from this source was but $954,000, although something like $10,000,000 was due the government from the amount of money which was involved in legacies last year. Tne great bulk of the estates affected by this part of the law have not yet been settled, and consequently the payment of taxes has been deferred. The receipts from the sale of documentary and proprietary stamps formed nearly one-half of the entire revenues raised by the war taxes, the proceeds from this source being over $40,000,000. Wall Street furnished $11,000,000 of this sum. The increased tax on fermented liquors added $26,000,000 to the treasury. The taxes on theaters yielded $50,000. That bowling is popular in the United States is shown by the fact that the total amount realized from the tax on bowling alleys is more than the amount realized from theaters, being $51,596. The tax imposed upon opium manufactured for smoking purposes has resulted in the discontinuance of the use of opium in smoking supplies.

The Rennes correspondent to the Globe-Democrat, this city, reports a riot in that city at an early hour on July 30th. An anti-Semite meeting was interrupted by Dreyfuards and blood flowed. It is claimed that the anti-Semites intended to march to the apartments of Martre Labori and make a demonstration there. This is an unfortunate affair, coming as it does from the side of the revisionists. Had disorder been precipitated by the anti-Dreyfus men it would not have been so unexpected and so alarming. But as it was the incident reveals the intense feeling that exists on both sides, and the great danger should a conflict occur during the trial. The incident has caused the authorities to increase the military protection of the city, and severe orders for the punishment of misconduct on both sides have been issued. It will take a strong hand to prevent a state of anarchy at Rennes during and succeeding the trial, but the indications at present are that France has that strong hand in her present Minister of War, Gen. Gallifet.

It is now assured by recent elections in Australia, on the subject of the Commonwealth Bill, drafted by the representatives of the Australasian Colonies of Great Britain in 1898, and revised by the premiers last January, that there is to be a federation of the Australian Colonies. Victoria and New South Wales have recently voted large majorities in favor of this bill, and the decision of these colonies assures the union of the Australian States in a Commonwealth of Australia. This question has been under discussion since 1852, when it was proposed to establish a general assembly to legislate on the questions of common interest in the various colonies. This assembly, to which the British Parliament gave its permission, was purely deliberative, but it served as a stepping-stone toward colonial federation. In 1890 there was a conference of delegates from the seven colonies of Australia—New South Wales, Victoria, South Australia, Tasmania, Western Australia, Queensland and New Zealand—which authorized a convention to be held in the following year, to take the necessary steps to effect this union. The work of this convention did not prove to be satisfactory, and in 1895 the premiers of five of the colonies made another effort. Again, in 1897 and in 1898 representatives of all the colonies but one met to draft a federation bill. The legislatures of the colonies passed enabling acts providing for referendums. On the first vote the majority was not sufficient to accomplish the end in view, but a conference of the premiers removed some of the difficulties which kept the colonies apart, with the result that in a more recent vote the bill has been approved. Under this bill the supreme authority will be vested in a governor-general appointed by the Queen. He will be assisted by a federal executive council, and the laws for the entire federation will be made by a parliament of two houses—a senate and a house of representatives. Each original state will have six senators, and a representation in the second chamber in proportion to its population. The capital will be in federal territory within one hundred miles of Sydney in New South Wales.

A few of the papers, especially in the East, have been devoting considerable space for several months in printing letters from soldiers in the Philippines, alleging the most barbaric cruelty on the part of our soldiers in their treatment of Filipino prisoners and noncombatants. Almost everybody, except the editors of these newspapers, knew these reports to be false. Any one who knows Americans, and the character of the American soldier, his bravery and magnanimity, knew that these editors were being supplied with what they wished for their purposes, by a set of conscienceless falsifiers, misnamed soldiers, who were disgracing the American uniform by their slanders on their fellow-soldiers. The chief offender among this class of papers, the New York Evening Post, has been compelled to acknowledge that it has been duped by these reports, for its own correspondent repudiates and disproves these false and slanderous charges. It is known to all the world how our soldiers in Cuba divided their last ration with starving Cubans and Spanish prisoners, the latter of whom testified of their own volition to the generous and humane treatment they had received at the hands of American soldiers and sailors. We have precisely the same kind of men, and many of the very same men, in the Philippines that were in Cuba, and it is not to be believed for a moment that they have been guilty of any barbarism such as has been charged against them by an unscrupulous press. This is not a question of politics: it is a question of veracity and of justice to the men who have hazarded their lives for the American flag and the American honor.

Admiral Dewey has reached Trieste, on his homeward voyage, and was given a hearty reception by the booming of Austrian guns from forts and warships. He is reported as being in good health. In an interview he said he would remain two weeks at Trieste to permit his men to recuperate and go on shore. Pointing to the hills in the distance he said, "I think I shall get among them." He announced his purpose to touch at Naples, Leghorn, Gibraltar and Madeira. The committee in charge of the preparation for his reception in New York has given out the following partial program:

Admiral Dewey is to be met in the lower bay by the mayor and committee, with the guests of the city. The mayor will call on the Admiral on board of the Olympia and will arrange with him the hour and place for his formal reception by the municipality and the formal presentation to him of the freedom of the city, invite him on board the citizens' boat, and sail up to Staten Island to receive the compliments and visits of governors of states and those of the city's guests who may be on board to meet him. Salutes will be fired by the batteries and vessels along the route. The Admiral will return to his ship at Staten Island and the naval parade will begin in the afternoon, proceeding to Riverside Park and One Hundred and Twenty-fifth Street (Grant's tomb) in time to arrive before dark. The night parade and fireworks will commence there and be continued down the North River. On the second day there will be formal presentation of testimonials, and a procession through the city to give the people an opportunity to see the naval hero.

A battle in Northern Mexico between the Yaquis and the Mexican troops is just reported, in which one hundred persons, including several Americans, are said to have been killed. It seems that the Indians of the Yaquis river have revolted and are on the warpath. The latest news from Sonora is that the Mexican troops were surprised by the Yaquis on last Friday and put to flight. In this battle General Torres, the officer in command, was among the killed. The dispatch to the Globe-Democrat, of this city, says:

This outbreak is a surprise to the state and army officials. When the Yaquis at Torin, their capital, signed a perpetual treaty with Gen. Torres, two years ago last May, and surrendered their arms to him, they were given several hundred square miles of magnificent land in the Lower Yaqui River Valley, to be theirs and their children's forever, if they remained at peace. At the same time the General warned them to dig up the hatchet meant not only a confiscation of this land, but a war of extermination. The Yaquis, desperate fighters, are superior in bravery and marksmanship to the average Mexican, and maintain that the territory they inhabit was a legacy from their forefathers long before the present race of Mexicans claimed it. It is probably for their claimed inheritance they are now battling.

A PERVERTED LIFE.

The recent death of the great American agnostic calls for more than a passing notice. No one can deny his splendid powers of imagination and oratory. He had a strong natural endowment. His heart seemed naturally responsive to the finer sentiments and the nobler ideals of life. His love for his wife and children, and their love for him in return, shows that his heart had the capacity both to love and to win affection from others. There were in him, in other words, the elements for a noble manhood and a useful career. Born and reared in a religious family, it would seem that his life should have been turned into the right channel. No one can contemplate his career, in view of these possibilities, without a feeling of sadness.

Robert G. Ingersoll was a notable instance of a perveted life. It would be interesting, and perhaps profitable, to investigate the causes which influenced his life and turned it in the wrong direction. It might not be possible to ascertain what all these influences were, for the forces that control a life, in its beginnings at least, are very subtle. But evidently, at some time, by some means, he formed a false conception of Christianity. His whole public career, so largely devoted to infidelity, showed that he was hostile to the Bible and to the religion which it teaches, through a misconception of the nature of both. He conceived of the Bible as a book containing stories and teaching arbitrary doctrines and making unreasonable demands upon men, and as revealing a God who inflicts arbitrary punishment and whose anger against men can only be be appeased by sacrifice. He thought of Christianity as a system consisting of dogmas and doctrines and rites and ceremonies, which have no necessary relation to life and character. He regarded the church as composed of either deceivers or the deceived, and apparently took comfort in pointing out the superstitions, cruelties, false doctrines and immoral practices which have marked the history of the church in the past instead of looking for the pure and the good, the piety and the devotion, which have never been wanting in the lives of some of those who have professed the faith of Jesus.

With such false conceptions controlling his mind, he became an aggressive infidel. The term agnostic hardly befits one who devoted his life to an attempt to overthrow the faith of others. But all of Mr. Ingersoll's eloquence against Christianity has had no appreciable influence upon its progress. It has gone right on in its majestic course, winning new victories, asserting its claims over an ever-widening domain of of life, and becoming increasingly the regnant power that controls the civilization of the world. Never was Christianity so potent as it is to-day. Never was infidelity so impotent as at the present time.

The Bible which Mr. Ingersoll ridiculed never commanded a wider influence than it does to-day, and was never read and studied by so many people as at the present time. God still reigns. His love and mercy are still extended toward the children of men. Even Mr. Ingersoll basked in the rays of His goodness and lovingkindness. Mr. Ingersoll's life, therefore, so far as it was devoted to opposing the Christian faith, was abortive. It was a failure. It might have been a glorious life, full of Chritian heroism, consecrated to the uplifting of the kingdom of God on earth and a source of public inspiration to thousands of human beings. He might have been remembered by the oncoming generations as one who gave himself for the highest interests of humanity, and lived for the things that are eternal. But how different is the reality!

But whatever responsibility the church may have for such a blasted life she may well tremble. The church has had too many faults. It has been slow to keep up with the progress of the world. It has been devoted too much to the building of creeds, and too little to the building of character. It has often loved superstition more than the truth. It has sometimes been influenced by the partisan spirit and the sectarian pride more than by love for humanity and love for God. The time has come when in must put away these inconsistencies, surrender its superstition, subordinate its denominational zeal to the higher claims of the kingdom of God, lift up a higher ethical standard, and teach a more rational and more vital Christianity, and practice it too. It is sad to think how many lives are being perverted through the unfaithfulness of the church to her sacred trust.

This is the lesson that we would draw from this event for the benefit of the church. The moral which we may draw from such a life for the world is plain enough. We can do nothing against the truth. We cannot cope with the Almighty. We cannot overthrow the foundations of truth and righteousness. Infidelity does not feed the hunger of the human heart. That which does feed it will continue to be in demand as long as the human heart is what it is. Christianity lives because it meets this demand. Christ lives and reigns because he both fills the measure of the highest ideal of manhood and ministers with divine potency to the enduring needs of the human soul. Forms of infidelity may come and go, but Christ and his religion will go on forever, until the world is redeemed and there is a new heaven and a new earth wherein dwells righteousness.

"THE QUESTION OF THE HOUR."

The question of the hour is, Shall the state take over the higher education, or shall the church continue to maintain colleges and universities in order to control public thought?—The Observer.

We beg pardon of our able contemporary, but this is not "the question of the hour," as it seems to us. We do not believe there is any question about the state and the church both continuing in the work of higher education. There is not the slightest probability that the state universities will go out of the business of higher education, nor is it less unlikely that the great universities, colleges and seminaries, built and endowed by Christian people, will ever cease to do the work for which they were established. That the state and the church should co-operate in the work of education seems to us entirely proper, seeing that both alike are dependent upon the enlightenment of the people. It may be and is a question as to whether the church is doing its part of this work, and doing it as well as it ought. There is a certain part of higher education—and the most important part—that the state cannot teach. Here the church is without any rival. But this is no reason why the state may not lend its aid in teaching such branches as fall legitimately within its sphere. In this work it should have, not the opposition, but the encouragement of the church, just as the church receives protection and encouragement from the state in its own particular line of education. The question of the hour is whether these two divine agencies, that stand for moral order, shall co-operate to their mutual advantage, or antagonize each other as natural enemies.

SATAN'S THESIS IN JOB.

The devil's thesis in the historic prologue of the book of Job is a popular philosophy and a practical gospel in the kingdom of darkness. It runs thus: Human nature is absolutely and incurably selfish. All attempts to redeem it are useless. The thesis is stated in the form of two propositions supplemented by a challenge. 1. The doctrine of Mephistopheles and Calaban and Napoleon: "Every man has his price." Touch his possessions, take away his property, interfere with his personal ease and individual greed, and he will curse you to your face, is the diabolic proposition. 2. Man is an animal, and being a supremely selfish animal, if physical health, comfort, ease and enjoyment are taken away he will throw off all disguises of religious hypocrisy and renounce God to his face. Selfishness cannot endure reverses and remain faithful, even in pretense, to an unselfish ideal. The historic prologue demonstrates both of these propositions to be lies. Job stands the test, and the higher humanity is vindicated.

The drama that follows the prose introduction is an abstract discussion of the justice and wisdom of God's dealing with Job in the demonstration of the patriarch's integrity. The problem of the book of Job is this: Is God justified in permitting the righteous to suffer, and to what end is such a permission given? The wisdom and goodness of God, no less than the moral integrity and spiritual dignity of man, are at stake. Job opens the drama in the third chapter and openly questions the possbility of vindicating the righteousness of God in the instigation or at least the permission of the calamitous suffering that had befallen him. A pessimistic howl went up from the afflicted man, in which he cursed the day of his birth. This is Oriental pessimism of the gloomiest type, in which life is the curse, existence the calamity and death the blessing.

When Eliphaz comes in with his philosophy of Job's condition, and his justification of God's part in the transaction, God was justified because the suffering of Job was penal. It was retributive justice in the patriarch's experience. Job suffered, therefore he had sinned — the Eastern dogma of penal suffering in a nutshell. All calamity, all misfortune, all suffering, the penalty of sin. Job's friends said many wise and comforting things, but they were wrong in their fundamental philosophy of suffering, because pain is not monopolized by the wicked, who render themselves obnoxious to law by violating its precepts.

The burden of Job's plaint at the beginning was the vindication of himself, the assertion of his innocence. He cried out in the bitterness of his soul against the fearful dispensation of suffering and loss through which he was passing, not seeming to realize that the justification of himself was the condemnation of God. Notwithstanding the divine commendation of Job's perfection as a man, he was doubtless in danger of self-righteousness. He was on the way of becoming so built up in his own excellency of character, and the universal deference paid to his greatness, that God thrust in the hand of discipline to bring the great man to his bearings.

When God speaks, toward the end of the drama, he asserts his sovereign majesty, his absolute prerogative to rule over men. He contrasts his sovereign greatness, his creative energy, with the littleness and insignificance of man. His universal Creatorship gives him the title of universal sovereignty. God does not assert his supremacy as the justification of arbitrariness, tyranny or cruelty in his dealing with men. It is the basis and vindication of his right to rule. His wisdom and goodness enable him to see what is best, and his righteous power brings it to pass. Job began to see, toward the last, that wisdom and goodness might inflict pain for some ulterior good, greater than the suffering necessary to obtain it.

The solution of the problem of the book and the purpose of the Lord is at last apprehended by Job. "I know that thou canst do all things, and that no purpose of thine can be restrained." "I had heard of thee by the hearing of the ear, but now my eyes seeth thee; wherefore I abhor myself and repent in dust and ashes." The book of Job is a twofold vindication: the vindication of God's goodness and grace in the existence and uses of suffering; the vindication of the moral integrity and spirituality of human nature under the power of God. The devil had slandered both God and man. He had asserted, in his brazen impudence, that God was base enough to buy and man was base enough to sell. It is shown in refutation of this slander, so often repeated by the children of Satan, that the suffering of the righteous did not cause them to renounce their righteousness, but was the means of lifting them to a higher and a more enduring righteousness. God is justified in allowing the righteous to suffer, and righteous man is vindicated in showing himself capable of being controlled by the highest motives.

The poem has also a national application in the refutation of the diabolic thesis. Taking prologue and debate together we can see that it was at least one chief object of the book to enlarge men's ideas of God's ways by giving them a new view of suffering, as a trial of the righteousness of the righteous, not a chastisement for their sins. The Hebrew poet or thinker was never merely a poet or thinker, but always also a teacher, one, too, who looked at men in their relations to God, and at the individual not simply as the individual, but as a member of the family of Israel. So it is probable that the main purpose of the book was practical rather than theoretical, and that it is to be recognized as also having a national scope, the particular view, indeed, that was needed to comfort and uphold the heart of the people in the circumstances in which they were placed at the time of their composition.

Hour of Prayer.

THE KINGDOM FIRST.

(Uniform Midweek Prayer-meeting Topic, Aug. 9th.)

(Matt. 6:33; Luke 9:59-62.)

CENTRAL TRUTH: The supreme interest in this world is the kingdom of God, and to accept its divine sway in our own hearts and lives, and to seek to extend it among men, is the supreme duty of man, to which every other interest, desire or purpose must be subordinated.

Jesus had much to say of the kingdom of God. Its possession constitutes the first beatitude; its coming, with ever-increasing power, is made the subject of daily prayer; the seeking of it and its righteousness is the first and highest duty of man.

The question, What is the supreme good? which philosophers have discussed in ages past, is here answered by the world's greatest Teacher. It is to "seek first the kingdom of God." Whatever else one may do or not do, this supreme duty is not to be neglected. Our physical life is not to be withheld for a moment if the sacrifice of it is needed to advance the kingdom of God, much less the sacrifice of our time, our talents, our means.

Such is the teaching of Jesus. Does it not commend itself, hard as it may seem at first, to our reason? If our highest well-being, both in this life and in the life to come, is involved in the kingdom of God, should we not subordinate everything else to it? Why should not the lesser be sacrificed for the greater good? The kingdom of God is an everlasting kingdom, and it has to do with the universal and enduring wants of the human soul. Why, then, should not things merely temporal and earthly give way to the demands of the kingdom?

What is the kingdom of God? It is the reign of God, through Christ, over the hearts and lives of men. It is the divine will made regnant in human affairs. Its righteousness is not that which is outward, but that which is inward; it consists, not in the observance of external rites and ceremonies, but in purity of heart, in right motives and purposes, in joy and peace, which flows from right relations with God and with our fellowmen.

The kingdom has to do with all our human relationships, with all our vocations, with all our plans and purposes in life. Whatsoever we do, in word or deed, should be done in the name of the Lord Jesus, and under the inspiration and guidance of the kingdom of God. This is hard for us to understand or remember. We think of religion too often as having to do with holy days and holy places, and, perhaps, with critical moments in our lives, forgetting that it covers all the days, all places, all human activities and callings in life.

Jesus taught his disciples to pray, "Thy kingdom come; Thy will be done on earth as it is in heaven." We may still pray that prayer until the will of God is the rule of life and conduct among men, as it is among the angels of heaven. The kingdom has not yet come in that wide and profound meaning. Has it come to that extent in our lives even? Let this question come home to every heart. The next question, then, is, Are we doing what in us lies to advance the kingdom of God in the earth? Do we regard this as our supreme obligation?

When one came to Jesus and asked to tarry in order to bury his father before following Him, Jesus said, "Leave the dead to bury their own dead; but go thou and publish abroad the kingdom of God." When another one wished to go back to the house and tell his family and friends farewell, He said to him, "No man having put his hand to the plow and looking back is fit for the kingdom of God." These may be considered as extreme cases, cited to show the supreme urgency of the kingdom of God. If one may not tarry or slight the work of the kingdom in order to perform the last office to a deceased father, or to return home to bid an affectionate farewell to those he loves, surely nothing should be permitted to interfere with the work of advancing the kingdom of God among men.

Alas! how few of us feel the weight of this divine obligation pressing upon us as it was felt by Him who came to establish that kingdom! How many there are to-day procrastinating even their acceptance of the kingdom of God or the Lordship of Jesus until some convenient season! How little do they appreciate the momentous issues involved! Many professed Christians, too, have never accepted any definite service for the advancement of that kingdom, and have made little or no sacrifice in order that God's will may be done on earth as it is in heaven. This lesson ought to startle all such out of their lethargy and lead them to consecrate their lives to the service of God and their fellowmen.

PRAYER.

Our Father who art in heaven, hallowed be Thy name. Thy kingdom come. Thy will be done on earth as it is in heaven. Give us this day our daily bread. And forgive us our debts as we forgive our debtors. And lead us not into temptation, but deliver us from evil. For Thine is the kingdom, and the power, and the glory, forever. Amen!

OR

MACATAWA MUSINGS.

One can hardly go amiss in the country, at this season of the year, if he has an eye for the beautiful in nature. There was always to me a charm about the harvest season of the year, when the fields are full of ripened grain, or thick with golden shocks. 'Tis then that—

"One listening, in the clover fields can hear
The mower whet his scythe; and far away,
O'er lowlands odorous with the new-mown hay,
The rattle of the reaper, sharp and clear.
Across the reedy stretches of the mere
The grazing horses send their greeting neigh;
While, 'mid the silences throughout the day,
The locust's sharp staccato stabs the ear.
Dim shimmering in the heat the violet hills
Call to us vaguely from a realm of dreams;
And from the meadow's smooth meandering streams
Come muffled murmers of the distant mills;
From upland wheatfields, as his barns he fills,
We hear the farmer calling to his teams."

A beautiful little stretch of pastoral scenery lies between Macatawa Park and Holland, through which the electric railway winds its course, keeping us, who sojourn at the Park, in touch with country life and the processes of husbandry. One good, old-fashioned whistle of "Bob White" from the summit of a wheat shock calls up more blessed memories to one who was once a farmer's boy than all the modern sonatas and symphonies. If the feeling of envy was one to be cherished we would not envy the pampered youth, reared in the city mansion, but the brown-legged, sun-tanned farmer's boy, who goes afield whistling, with his heart as light as that of the lark that rises, singing, from the meadow and soars toward the blue.

Some one was telling recently of a person who could not bear to look upon the waters, or listen to the music of its waves. There was something in such sights and sounds to give him the blues. He liked the mountains and could rejoice in their majesty and sublimity. It is fortunate that he can do that. Much more so is he who is able to extract pleasure and enjoyment out of all the works of God's hand. I like the valleys and the far-stretching plains or prairies of the West. I like, too, the crystal current of the winding stream that threads its way through hills and vales, with its deep, clear pools and its shallower rapids, where it ripples over sand and stones, making music as it goes. But there is a blending of the beautiful and sublime in ocean or lake, that to me is especially charming. I love the music of its breaking billows when it is driven into fury by the storm-king, and the lullaby of gentler tones when in quieter mood, its waves wash the sandy shore. I love it in the daytime, when the sunlight flashes over its wide surface; in the evening when the setting sun paints a pathway of gold across its bosom, or at night when it is bathed in the soft light of the moon. Its changing moods seem to fit with those of my own life. There is in its varying phases something which appeals to every part of our nature.

Since our last Musings were written, the editorial study referred to, has been finished, and after an informal opening is now being used. A number of the preachers present came up one night this week, held an informal conversazione on the subject of Religious Journalism. The brethren gave us their ideas of what a religious journal should be in this age. There was beautiful unanimity in the sentiment that the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST was on the right track toward the ideal religious journal. No one claimed, of course, that it had reached the goal, but only that it was pursuing that course which alone can ever hope to attain such goal. The little study, thus consecratnd to religious journalism, sits on the crest of the hill, with two windows looking out over the lake and another to the east, while from the flagstaff above it floats "the banner of the free." This starry ensign can be seen by those on board the incoming vessels, marking the spot where our sanctum stands. Thank God for the flag under whose folds we can exercise the fullest religious liberty without fear of governmental interference—a flag that carries with it, wherever it goes, the pledge of both civil and religious freedom!

If the editorial department of the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST should be lacking in breadth of vision during the summer months, it will not be the fault of this office by the lakeside. It is wonderful what a vision opens before us here through these study windows. Chicago sits out there at the south end of the lake like a queen in her imperial robes, and beyond, fair St. Louis stretches her stately form beside the lordly current, the "Father of Waters!" Still beyond lie the beautiful plantations and the cottonfields and the towns of the fair Southland, stretching to the Gulf of Mexico. Through another window, Milwaukee and the Twin Cities of the great Northwest, St. Paul and Minneapolis, loom up in their magnificence, and beyond, the great wheatfields of the Northwest, and on to the far-away Pacific Coast. Through another window still, New York and Boston, and the great cities and harbors of the East rise to view. So that there is no part of our great country that is lost to our sight, and it only requires a little further stretch of the inner vision to take in other lands and nations. The world is too small, now, for one not to be able to see around it, and know something of the conflicts and struggles that are going on among the various nations that make up the family of God on earth.

Last Lord's day was a good day with us here at the Park. There was a good Sunday-school at 3 P. M. At 4 Brother Richardson, of Kansas City, preached a fine discourse on "The Infidelity of the Heart," based on Psalms 14:1. There was a large audience. Evening service at the beach, conducted by the writer, was one of the largest and best in the history of the Park. This is partly accounted for from the fact that the evening was an ideal one for a beach service. The breeze was balmly, the waves were not large enough to be tumultuous, and the moon was near its full. The theme announced at the afternoon service, no doubt, also attracted many: "Does the Motto of Mr. Sheldon's Book, 'In His Steps; or, What Would Jesus Do?' offer a Practical rule of Conduct?" While the singing was made a prominent feature of the meeting, a number of very interesting speeches were made by such men as Presiding Elder Vaughn, of Missouri; W. F. Richardson, of Kansas City; J. S. Hughes, J. W. Allen and Brother Sorrick, of Grand Rapids. The people listened with most remarkable attention. It afforded further proof that there is no subject which interests the people so much as that of Jesus Christ and his relation to our present life. Brother Hughes sends us his opinion of the meeting to the effect that it was the most profitable one, in his judgment, he had ever attended at the Park. The interpretation given to Mr. Sheldon's question, "What Would Jesus Do?" was, what would Jesus do if he were in our place at the present time, and under our conditions? At the close of the ringing speech by Brother Richardson, the question was put by the leader to the large audience, "Do you believe this practicable?" and a forest of hands were raised in response. It can hardly be doubted that many left the beach that night more resolved than ever to make the example of Jesus and the character of Jesus the rule of their conduct.

The appointment of the second Sunday in August as a special day of prayer in our churches and homes for God's blessing upon our Jubilee Convention, upon the American Christian Missionary Society and its missionaries, and upon all the preparations in progress for a suitable commemoration of the completion of a half century of organized missionary work, is a wise measure and should be responded to universally and heartily. As we have often said, vain will be all our other preparations, if there be no preparation of the heart, no removal of obstacles that hinder our fellowship with God and with each other, and no consecration of ourselves, in a deeper sense, to the advancement of the kingdom of heaven. Let the day mentioned be one of deep heart-searching, of devout thanksgiving, of earnest petition for a special blessing upon our forthcoming convention. We have just cause for thanksgiving in view of the largely increased gifts to our mission work this year, and the new demands that are upon us certainly call us to our knees for new strength to meet these demands. We shall remember the day at Macatawa Park.

Questions and Answers.

1. Will you please explain Mark 16:17: "And these signs shall follow them that believe." What signs are referred to?

2. What do you think of Dowie's position on divine healing? Can one believe in that (divine healing) and still be a true member of the Christian Church?

W. J. Dodge.

Ft. Dodge, Ia.

1. The "signs" referred to are those mentioned immediately following the language above quoted, namely: "Casting out demons, speaking with new tongues," etc. They were such signs as did follow in the history of the apostles and in the apostolic churches, their purpose being the confirmation of the gospel which they preached —"the Lord working with them, and confirming the word by the signs that followed" (verse 19).

2. Dowie's doctrine of divine healing is an abnormal, and, as we believe, unscriptural emphasis on the power of prayer to heal diseases. Healing physical diseases was a very subordinate feature of Jesus' work. It seems to be the main feature of Mr. Dowie's. His claims, in that respect, are also extravagant. As to the church he has organized, and his assumption of supreme power in it, both are absurd. It is amazing that intelligent people will submit themselves to a self-appointed pope, who assumes the right to Lord it over them. It is quite possible, we think, for one to be a true member of the Church of Christ and believe in the possibility of divine healing. We prefer to understand that all healing is "divine," taking place under the operation of divine laws, and that prayer has its place in the divine remedial scheme for diseases of the body as well as of the soul.

1. What Sabbath is referred to in Leviticus 33:3?

2. On what day of the month was the sheaf of the first fruits offered, and what did it typify?

3. Does the word "week" in Acts 20:7 come from the singular or plural word in the Greek? If plural, why is it translated singular?

4. Were any people ever commanded to observe every seventh day for any purpose?

5. What caused the split between the Eastern and Western churches?

6. Does the Greek Church observe any day of the week, month or year as Sabbath or Lord's day, and if so, how do they observe it? Disciple.

1. We take it that the weekly sabbath of the Jews is referred to in the passage cited, as it reads: "Six days shall work be done, but on the seventh is a sabbath of solemn rest and holy convocation."

2. The sheaf of the first fruits does not seem to have been offered on any set day of the month, but "on the morrow after the sabbath;" that is, after the seventh sabbath in the Feast of Weeks, which would be the fiftieth day.

3. In the absence of our Greek Testament we can only speak from memory. We think, however, the phrase, "The first day of the week," is the rendering from the Greek numeral for the first, and the Greek word sabbaton, the plural form of the Greek word for sabbath, used in the sense of the week, a use of the word not uncommon in the New Testament.

4. The Jews were commanded to "remember the sabbath day to keep it holy," and the seventh day was sanctified and set apart as the sabbath day.

5. There were a number of causes that entered into the first great schism in the church, namely, that between the Eastern and Western, or Roman Catholic and Greek Churches. Prominent among these, however, was the claim of supremacy on the part of the bishop of Rome. Ecclesiastical rivalry between Rome and Constantinople was an important factor, but there were doctrinal differences as well. One of these, as we remember, related to the question as to whether the Holy Spirit proceeded from the Father alone, or from the Father and Son.

6. They observe the first day of the week, we believe, as does the Western church, by their public assemblies and regular order of worship, though in a manner less strict, no doubt, than prevails among Christians in Protestant countries.

NO MAN has a right to make a recluse of himself, even for religious purposes. The way to gain sanctity is to trust Christ and do good. Not via isolation, but via association, are we made better. Man is a social being, and cannot develop his God given powers without service to his fellowmen. To live a selfish, secluded life is to violate one of the fundamental principles of the Christian religion, which bids us love our neighbor as ourselves. Neither the vertical nor the horizontal principle of Christianity ought to be ignored. The time has not gone by for the cup-of-cold-water religion. Go out and help your neighbor and God will love you.

Reformation of the Nineteenth Century

NINE DECADES OF HISTORY

THE FOURTH PERIOD.

T. W. GRAFTON.

I. A General View of the Situation.

The year 1866 was a crucial year in the history of the Disciples. The death of Alexander Campbell in the early spring of that year removed a figure, the charm and magnetism of whose personality had given strength and unity to the cause of restored primitive Christianity. As the unconsecrated bishop of the church all his brethren looked to him with an admiration akin to reverence; and if his views on questions of doctrine and administration were not accepted as final, they at least had great weight, and while he lived no serious disagreements disturbed the counsels of the brotherhood.

It had been confidently predicted by the enemies of the movement that the religious institution built up under the leaderhsip of Mr. Campbell was only held together by the "force of his great name and his powerful personality; so with his death it would speedily disintegrate and come to naught." The fierce controversy inaugurated by ultraconservative leaders about this time did what it could to make such a fate possible; and without doubt the strife and bitterness which continued through the next decade greatly hindered the progress of truth and checked the advancement of the Disciples toward their true place among the forces which are to evangelize the world.

In the early sixties, partly as the heritage of our early failures at religious co-operation and partly as our heritage from the civil war, two questions were beginning to vex the churches. These were regarding plans of missionary co-operation and the use of instrumental music in the churches. In 1866 they took precedence over everything else, filling the columns of our journals, and in many cases engendering such bitterness that had there been any ecclesiastical machinery the church would have been disrupted. As it was the forces of the Disciples were, in reality, two camps—the progressives and the conservatives—the one urging that we go on to perfection, the other that we hold unswervingly to the traditions of the fathers.

The opposition to church co-operation for missionary purposes and to the use of modern expedients in religious worship had its origin much further back than the date with which we begin. To appreciate the situation that confronted those upon whom the mantle of Alexander Campbell had fallen, we need to keep in mind the intense hostility to everything that pertained to the popular religious systems which had characterized the early stages of the movement.

In 1830, when Walter Scott and his colaborers dissolved the Mahoning Association in opposition to the more practical judgment of Alexander Campbell and men like William Hayden, they gave a blow to organized religious co-operation from which we have been slow to rally.

"It was at a juncture," wrote Isaac Errett almost fifty years later, "when the condition of numerous infant churches and the widening fields for missionary work required more than ever the combined wisdom and resources of the churches. But in a moment of rashness this system of co-operation was dissolved. The infant churches were left to struggle through the perils of infancy or to die. The inviting fields of labor that opened on every hand were neglected, or irregularly occupied by any preacher that could spare the time and labor, and the work that had gone so gloriously forward under the association suffered seriously. We have been trying now for over thirty years to recover lost ground; and to this day we reap the unhappy consequences of what I cannot help regarding as the folly of that hour."

The organization of the American Christian Missionary Society in 1849 was the first tardy attempt to undo the mistakes of these early disorganizers and to put the churches once more into touch in their missionary efforts. While its work was carried on under the leadership of Mr. Campbell there had been but little outspoken opposition. The watch-cry against "man-made plans" had not yet been taken up, but the latent hostility was apparent in the widespread indifference which interfered very much with co-operative efforts. In 1851, with Isaac Errett as corresponding secretary, Benj. Franklin, the later champion of anti-missionary effort, urged the claims of the society in the columns of the American Christian Review against the opposers of missionary effort in this characteristic appeal:

"Cannot any man, with the least discrimination, see as clear as sunbeams that on the part of all that class of men who build up nothing, do nothing in any way, have no success in anything, but are simply, as far as they think prudent to risk it, eking out their inharmonious feelings, it is mere cant? Who are the men that encourage the people of God? Who are they that strengthen and inspire the churches with love, zeal and harmony? Who are they that restore peace, order and good will among the saved and increase their numbers? Who are they now that are gethering men into the fold of Christ? Look over the land, brethren, and you can see who they are. They are the men who are doing the work in the churches at home and all around on every side. They are the men who are pushing our state missions, the Foreign Missions, Bible Revisions and every other good work. These are the men to whom we must look for the promotion of the cause."

A series of circumstances now gave strength to the opposition and led to its open and unrelenting conflict against all forms of religious co-operation. These were the final abandonment of the mission in Jerusalem, after an expenditure of thousands of dollars, the passage of resolutions of loyalty by members of the convention during the Civil War, and lastly, the removal of its venerable president by the hand of death.

Parallel with the controversy about plans which now centered in an attack upon all forms of missionary co-operation, though not always dividing on the same lines, was the discussion over the use of expedients in worship, which was ultimately narrowed down to opposition to instrumental music.

With many, whatever has prevailed among the practices of the fathers during the fifty years previous, had all the weight of divine authority. Every change in method or expediency was denounced as apostasy. Instead of going back to Jerusalem men stopped at Bethany, and that which Mr. Campbell had taught in bringing order out of the chaos of 1830 was regarded as equally essential in adjusting the church to its environment at the close of the war.

The question of the use of expedients in worship had occupied no place in the plans of the Disciples during their earlier history. They had learned to be content with the barest necessities, both in their homes and in their churches. Life had been too hard a struggle with most people to allow them to give attention to the cultivation and gratification of refined tastes. Having never enjoyed in their homes they did not miss in the house of worship that which contributed to their comfort and pleasure. But a new spirit of progress and new conditions had followed the war. The old, cheerless cabin gave place to the home of comfort. The bare floors were hidden by cheerful carpets. The hard bottom chair was cast aside and rich upholstery installed in its place. The children were sent to the seminary and college and came back with awakened minds and cultivated tastes. Instruments of music added to the cheer of the home. Everything had suddenly changed—everything but the old, square, unpainted meeting house, with its cheerless walls, uncomfortable seats and uninviting service. An unprogressive, unobserving leadership had accepted these as essential and regarded them almost as indispensable to soundness of faith as belief in the Son of God or obedience to his expressed commands. In 1864 we find the first note of alarm over threatened innovation along this line.

"In the early years of the present reformation," writes a contributor to the Harbinger of that year, "there was entire unanimity in the rejection of instrumental music from our public worship. It was declared unscriptural, inharmonious with Christian institutions and a source of corruption. . . . More recently congregations have been found who are almost if not altogether in favor of instruments, and upon the principle of church independence they have assumed the right to make use of them without regard to the wishes of others."

It thus happened that the beginning of the period with which we are dealing witnessed an outburst of the pent-up spirit of opposition, both as regards our missionary movements and the progressive spirit which characterized many of our growing churches.

There is no better index of the restive spirit of the times than the number of periodicals which suddenly sprang into existence, each to supply a long-felt need and to unerringly solves the problems which were perplexing the churches. During the year 1866 we have at least nine new journals, monthly, semi-monthly and weekly, asking the support of the brotherhood. As given in the Millennial Harbinger they were the Messianic Banner, published in Baltimore; the Northwestern Christian Proclamation, from Waupun, Wis.; the Bible Class Visitor, from Wabash, Ind.; the Young Ladies' Friend, from Buffalo, N. Y.; the Evangelist, from Oskaloosa, Ia.; the Christian Standard, from Cleveland, O.; the Herald of Truth, from De Soto, Ill., and the Little Sower, from Indianapolis, Ind. To adequately appreciate the volume of our periodical literature there must be added the titles of those already established: The Mellennial Harbinger, of Bethany; the Christian Herald, of Eureka, Ill.; the American Christian Review, of Cincinnati, and the Gospel Advocate, of Nashville, Tenn.

Above the smoke of the conflict in which they were then engaged rise the colossal figures of Isaac Errett and Benj. Franklin, the champions respectively of the progressive and the conservative sentiments in the church; the one through the Christian Standard, seeking to rescue the church from the bondage to the unwritten traditions of the elders, the other through the American Christian Review, seeking to restrain the churches from what he regarded as ruinous innovations.

THE CALL OF THE PIERCED HANDS.

BY S. S. LAPPIN.

The evening shadows of the first Lord's day begin to gather in Jerusalem. Ten discouraged apostles are assembled in secret session and for fear of the hostile Jews have locked the doors. Their Lord whom they adored and trusted has fallen victim to the perfidy of the Jewish leaders. It is a solemn gathering; as the twilight settles without the gloom deepens within; what can be said? Who of all that group can lift a voice of comfort to cheer the others? There is no comfort—the Sun of comfort has not yet risen. Suddenly every bowed head is raised and every eye fixed on a common center. That strange thrill that warns us of the approach of some unseen person has roused them all. Alarm, wonder, joy follow each other bewilderingly through their minds. Can that be Jesus standing in their midst? There is no mistaking that face and form—and yet Jesus was crucified—no, this must be a spirit. But see, he stretches forth his hand! Hear, he speaks! "Why are you troubled and why do thoughts arise in your hearts? Behold my hands and my feer that it is I myself; handle me and see, for a spirit hath not flesh and bones as ye see me have. And when he had thus spoken he showed them his hands and his feet." Thus ten of the twelve were convinced that Christ had risen from the dead, and at the gathering the next Lord's day Thomas looked on the Master's wounds and cried, "My Lord and my God!" They had seen the winds and waves obey his voice on Galilee, they had heard the Father from on high own him as divine, they had been present when the widow's son was restored to life at Nain, but no argument was so convincing as a look at the nail-scarred hands held out to them that night. They were willing to believe on him and ready to die for him when once convinced that he had risen from the dead. He might have worked a miracle or argued eloquently, but he wisely chose to let the wounded hands and feet bear testimony that the Son of Man had triumphed over death.

Let the church on earth learn well this lesson of the pierced hands. The world longs for the tender aid of a sympathetic Savior and will gladly welcome him who clears their doubts away and satisfies the hunger of their hearts. Ours is such a Savior and he alone can still the tempest of the soul; to us he leaves the task of bearing witness that he came to save the lost; his hands reached out in answer to enquiring minds point out the course the church must choose before his reign can cover land and sea. Arguments are good in their place for some, though but few will feel their weight; evidences will reach another few, while great unnumbered multitudes sit in doubt, desiring but to see hands scarred by toil for others, and feet made tired by willing sacrifice. How eloquent is such language! How convincing such proof!

Hear, then, the call of the pierced hands; they call to faith. As long ago his wounded hands declared him to be the Son of God, so still the hands that serve the needy in his name bear witness to his church. We point to the past and seek to trace an unbroken chain to the apostolic age or pride ourselves that great reformers or holy men of old held fast the doctrines of our sect; but all the while the world that Jesus came to serve and save goes on in sin, nor cares a whit for all our learned talk. The Church of Christ is not an arsenal for arguments of war, nor a strong castle with unyielding sides—not a batileship with portholes out of which tremendous guns look forth and frown upon the foe. Rather let her be a home with comfort, rest and peace inside, and doors that stand ajar—a lifeboat with heroic crew who work and risk and dare and die to save their fellows from a death of woe. The bewildered world say, "Where is the church?" and we cry out in medley, "Lo here" and "Lo there." The world then cries, "But where is Christ, with the healing touch and sympathetic hand?" and we point in vain to high spires and deep-toned organs. The church that does the work of Christ, to the world and God at least, will be indeed the church of Christ.

Hear again the call of the pierced hands; they call to sacrifice. Foretokens, were they of what the soldiers of the cross would have to bear. Peter, called from peaceful life by sparkling Galilee to live a life of tumult and die head downward on a cross at Rome. James, quiet, faithful, wise, called to serve with faithful loyalty to die by violence a martyr of the cross. John, enlisted in his youth, for years the apostle of love, to spend his closing years alone with God in Patmos' rugged solitudes. Saul of Tarsus, learned and zealous in the Jewish faith, called to learn the truth about the Nazarine and bear the story of his life across the seas and die at Rome in testimony to the truth. "Saved to serve," is the message of the nail-pierced hands to those who own his cause to-day. If he, a prince to heaven's throne, could stoop to save from sin, shall we, poor sinners saved by grace, account ourselves too good to serve? If he, a peasant long ago, could touch the world's great heart and "turn the tide of centuries from its course," shall we, a host with wealth and learning at our beck, plead weakness and refuse to serve? It's the business of the church and every soul within her gates to serve in Jesus' name. When Christ was twelve years old he said, "Wist ye not that I must be about my Father's business?" and at the close his hands and feet bear witness how his task was done. The church is not a colony of past masters nor an asylum for the rescued ones; whatever we have made it out to be, the Master meant it for a working force. And think of it: the world he came to save is yet in sin, the work he left to man is still undone. Can we blame the world for doubting our own faith in the gospel when we move with lagging pace to tell the world that Jesus came to save? The church has no right to say, "Take my yoke upon you" until she is seen to bear the yoke herself.

Hear yet again the call of the pierced hands; they call to penitence. Eloquently as they speak to doubters and loud as they call to faltering saints, the tenderest plea of all is to the penitent soul that seeks to be at peace with God. Peter had denied his Lord and felt, no doubt, unfit to look upon his face; and yet forgiveness shines in every feature as he breathes his benediction, "Peace be unto you." And as those hands so fresh from Calvary's sacrifice are held before the erring one the way of penitents is opened to his view. And long as this gospel shall be preached; yea, long as man shall go astray, so long shall Jesus stand with outstretched hands of mercy. Let no man think himself unfit, because of sin, to call upon the name of God; his very unfitness is a sure guarantee that God will hear his cry. Have the people of God forgotten the call to penitence? Has the sympathy of the Good Shepherd who sought the one lost sheep on the bleak mountain side become a lost virtue? Who made us a crowd of critics that we should set ourselves to judge the penitent and ofttimes make him feel unwelcome in our midst? The Lord said seventy times seven, but we have forgotten the multiplication table of love. Sometimes the ark of salvation is closed to those without because they are drowning in sin. Certain classes of society are tabooed to-day for no other reason than they are sinful. And yet, according to the philosophy of Jesus, the one who gathers his robes of righteous pride about him and passes on the other side is nearer the unpardonable sin than the vilest one that cries to God for mercy. The hand of mercy and pardon extended lovingly to a sinful man is the most powerful incentive to righteousness yet known. Until the church can say, "Neither do I condemn thee," it will be of little use to say, "Go thy way and sin no more."

Hear the call of the pierced hands. Doubter, doubt no more, this is the Son of God, believe it for the very work's sake. Faltering Christian, look upon the inspiring scene; he alone can touch your life with the power of a new impulse and send you forth to bless your kind. Penitent soul, far off from God, return to-day, for still he calls to you. There is no excuse; should these hands and feet send forth their tender plea to careless ears there is no argument, no power, no mercy that can save.

A good way to keep the moths away from your clothes, is to give them to the Lord's poor, and thus lay them up where moth and rust do not corrupt.

FACTS AND FALLACIES OF CHRISTIAN SCIENCE.

W. J. LHAMON.

Text:—Be not rash with thy mouth, and let not thine heart be hasty to utter anything before God. for God is in heaven and thou upon earth; therefore let thy words be few.—Eccl. 5:2.

Suppose, friends, I should begin to-night by ruling you all out of existence; suppose I should affirm and prove it that there are no walls around us, no roof over us, no pulpit, no pews, no shoes on your feet, no hats on your heads, no coats on your backs, no bodies to your souls and no souls to your bodies, no brains to fit your "mortal minds" and no "mortal minds" in your nonexistent brains; suppose I convince you that you are nothing but dreams, delusions, nonexistent effects of your nonexistent "mortal minds," nobodies, nonentities, not even will-o'-the-wisps—what then would be a consistent thing for me to do? Why, shut my mouth, of course, and keep it shut. For why should I be talking to bodiless, brainless, soulless nobodies, I myself, according to my own hypothesis, a brother nobody to you all, and just as bodiless, brainless, and soulless as the rest of you. Why should I, who am only a delusive dream of "mortal mind," presuming to exist when really I do not, and presuming to talk from a brainless cranium to folks, not one of whom amount to so much as a respectable nightmare? Would I not be exceedingly rash with my mouth to go on talking after such a disposition of my auditors and of myself? However, I have an example of just that sort of rashness, mouth-rashness, before me in Mrs. Mary Baker Eddy's book entitled "Science and Health." Mouth-rashness it surely must be, for one cannot conceive that such a mass of inaccuracies, incongruities, contradictions, absurdities, tiresome iterations and reiterations, audacities, self-assertions, and blasphemies ever came for a soul gifted with a high degree of reason. Time and again, in turning over the pages of this book, one is compelled to question the sanity of the author, and one must sadly confess that the reading of the book has not improved his opinion of Mrs. Eddy. Either she knows or she does not know that she is constantly affirming contradictory propositions; if she knows it, she is morally unsound; if she does not know it, she is mentally unsound; in either case she is an unsafe guide, and exceedingly rash with her mouth.

Take a few examples of her rash and contradictory statements. I quote from the 110th edition of her book:

"Human experiences show the falsity of all material things." On the contrary, nine hundred and ninety-nine thousand, nine hundred and ninety-nine out of every million of human beings are constantly affirming that their experiences do no such thing. And even Mrs. Eddy, with all her rashness in setting herself up as the one against the million, hasn't convinced us of the inerrancy of her own experiences in this respect, for though she denies the existence of all material things she goes on talking about them all the while just as though they did exist; moreover, we are told that she lives in palatial houses, charges some hundreds of dollars for a course in her school, and sells her fifty-cent book at from three to six dollars.

Again: "Since matter is nonexistent, the human body is, of course, nonexistent." This she affirms positively, that the body is but the effect of "mortal mind." Yet, she goes right on talking about the human body and its organs just as though she had never suspected their nonexistence. Take a quotation selected almost at random: "Because the muscles of the blacksmith's arm are strongly developed, it does not follow that exercise has produced this result, or that the less used arm must be weak." Now that sounds very much as though Mrs. Eddy really believed in real blacksmiths, with real arms and real muscles in them. Or take this bit of information from her: "I was called to visit Mr. Clark in Lynn, confined to his bed six months with hip disease caused by a fall upon a wooden spike when quite a boy." Now that sounds as though there are really such things as beds and hips and wooden spikes and boys and men and cities, Lynn being one of the latter. It is marvelous how many realities crowd themselves into the language of one who stoutly denies their existence.

Again: "Science shows that what is termed matter is but the subjunctive state of what is here termed 'mortal mind.'" But "mortal mind" itself is, says the author on the same page, "a solecism in language, involving an improper use of the word mind. As mind is immortal, the phrase 'mortal mind' implies something untrue, and therefore unreal, and as the phrase is used in teaching Christran Science, it is meant to designate something which has no real existence." Now the phrase "mortal mind," which is confessedly a solecism in language, and a thing which has no real existence, it is one of the essential parts of this whole theory; it is a working factor in Christian Science. We have, therefore, a science built on a solecism, presumable wisdom springing out of acknowledged absurdity, and a something calling itself science asking for our acceptance upon an acknowledged basis of unreality. Still further, since matter is the subjunctive state of mortal mind, it is, therefore, the subjunctive state of a solecism, i. e., of a contradiction, i. e., of an unreality. That is, if we are to be Christian Scientists we are to get it into our nonexistent mortal minds that matter is the subjunctive state of our own nonexistent solecism, the false production of something that is truly nothing!

This reasoning, however, if it may be so dignified, is precisely on a par with much else to be picked up on almost any page of the book. It is said, for instance, "The metaphysics of Christian Science, like the rules of mathematics, prove themselves by inversion. For example: there is no pain in truth, and no truth in pain, no matter in mind, and no mind in matter; no nerves in intelligence, and no intelligence in nerves; no matter in life, and no life in matter; no matter in good, and no good in matter." Now what is all this, aside from its high-sounding tone of scientific dogmatism, but a conglomerate of inconsequential absurdities? They can be easily matched with a whole list of similarly framed statements equally startling and equally meaningless. Let us try: There is no pain in gravitation, and no gravitation in pain; there is no matter in centrifugal force, and no centrifugal force in matter; there is no copper wire in electricity, and no electricity in a copper wire—which latter one might be inclined to doubt if he came in contact with a live specimen, just as one is compelled to doubt some of Mrs. Eddy's inverted propositions. But this inverting of propositions that are put side by side with the exactness of mathematics—isn't it an amusing procedure? Suppose we say of a man just after he has finished his dinner: There is no man in the dinner, and therefore no dinner in the man! How would that work? Such statements have only to be glanced at to see that they must come from an ill-taught or an erratic mind.

Sin, sickness and pain are likewise nonexistent, being the creation of this same solecism, this nonexistent mortal mind. "You say a boil is painful; but that is impossible, for matter without mind is not painful. The boil simply manifests your belief in pain through inflammation and swelling, and you call this belief a boil. Now administer mentally to your patient a high attenuation of truth [sic!] on this subject, and it will soon cure the boil. The fact that pain cannot exist where there is no mortal mind to feel it, is a proof that this so-called mind makes its own pain; that is, its own belief in pain." This illustrative boil of Mrs. Eddy's contains the core of her whole system of teaching. You have only to get rid of your nonexistent mortal mind and you shall inevitably be rid of your nonexistent boil and the nonexistent place where it is, and all contiguous nonexistent places and organs where hypothetical boils might seat themselves to your hypothetical and nonexistent discomfiture.

Take as another example your lame foot. Now the lameness is not in your foot, for in reality you have no foot; both your foot and your lameness are in your mind. But neither is it really there, for your morta mind is only a solecism. Get, therefore, your nonexistent lameness out of your nonexistent mortal mind, and then you will walk admirably upon your nonexistent foot which, having been made whole of its nonexistent lameness by the action of your nonexistent mortal mind, is now a mate for your other nonexistent foot, which latter nonexistent foot never gave your nonexistent mortal mind any sort of imaginary trouble!! Now this is orthodox Christian Science and no solecism, unless that science is itself a solecism!

Jubilee Headquarters.

The mail of the Jubilee Headquarters last week contained many applications for homes during the convention, and all wanted to be near headquarters. That's right, brethren; get as near the old Central as you can. I used to live on the hill, but moved down just to be near. Bro. C. A. Freer, of Columbus, O., writes that 14 of his members are coming, and if the same percentage were continued Ohio alone would send 14,660. There are other Ohio churches that expect to send a larger percentage, however. You can address Geo. A. Miller, our secretary, hereafter at Central Christian Church, Ninth Street, near Central Ave., Cincinnati, Ohio. This is headquarters now for all committees. Bulletin No. 2 is already printed. The secular papers at Washington, Penn., have sent, one for the cut of Music Hall and the other of Central Church. Who will be the next?

A. M. HARVUOT, Chairman.

Our Budget.

—Talk up the Jubilee Convention.

—Do not forget Church Extension.

—The first Sunday in September is the day.

—The offerings on that day should reach $15,000.

—Fine conventions reported at the Eureka Assembly last week.

—The Macatawa Assembly next week will be a spiritual feast.

—Outdoor meetings have the lead now, but churches should not forget the importance of holding the fort until the hot season is over.

—The trial of Dreyfus at Rennes, France, to begin next week, will mark a new epoch in the history of France. The nation, and not an individual, is to be tried.

—New light is breaking in upon the Alaskan boundary question, and a settlement will probably be reached between England and the United States independent of Canadian politics.

—England has recently taken a firm stand toward the Transvaal and President Kruger is said to now enjoy the privilege of yielding either before or after war. There is now no other alternative.

—Archbishop Ireland recently landed in New York from a long sojourn in Europe, but he refused to talk to reporters about the Pope's condemnation of certain tendencies in the Catholic Churches of America. He says that those matters have all been amiacably settled. He might have added, "Except the sense in which the Pope used the term 'Americanisms.'"

—The 25th anniversary of the founding of the Chautauqua Assembly will be celebrated August 1st and 2nd, at Chautauqua, N. Y. We are under obligations to the board of trustees for their very kind invitation to be present on that very noted and interesting occasion.

—In this paper will be found the report of the committee appointed by the C. W. B. M. of Missouri to ascertain the cause and merits of the action of the official board of the church at Cameron, Mo., toward Mrs. Alice Williams, one of its members and president of the C. W. B. M. of Missouri. The names of the men who composed that commit.ee are above suspicion on the score of ability and honor, and what they have said will carry weight with the brotherhood of the state. It would be wise, therefore, for the official board of the church at Cameron to reconsider its action and to put itself in harmony with the finding of the committee.

—The Chicago Record of recent date contains correspondence from Wm. E. Curtis, dated "At sea in the South Pacific, July 2nd," calling attention to certain spurious documents relating to the Savior which have been published from time to time. One of these, Mr. Curtis states, was originally published in 1884 by the author, "Rev." W. D. Mahan, of Booneville, Mo., under the title, "Archæological Writings of the Sanhedrim and Talmuds of the Jews." "In 1887," Mr. Curtis states, "a similar volume, from the pen of the same author, appeared from the press of the 'Christian Publishing Company' of St. Louis, now purporting to be translated from manuscripts in Constantinople and records of senatorial documents taken from the archives of the Vatican in Rome, being the official documents made in those courts in the days of Jesus Christ." Mr. Curtis gives an account of the same book under different titles, issuing from different places, until the attention of our Minister at Constantinople was called to the matter, investigation was made, and it was ascertained that no such documents existed in the library there as Mahan claimed to have copied. It is due to the Christian Publishing Company to say that we were not the publishers of this work. We simply did the printing for Mr. Mahan. The book was reviewed in the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST at the time, in which it was stated that the work was in all probability a fraud, as we never for a moment doubted that it was, although the author had buttressed his documents with certificates of genuineness which were well calculated to deceive the unwary.

—One of the great addresses of the International Epworth League convention at Indianapolis, Ind., was delivered by "Rev." Chas. A. Crane, pastor Saratoga St. M. E. Church, Boston, Mass., on the evening of July 22nd. It was on "The Saloon in Politics." The practical attitude of Methodism and the official silence of President McKinley were severely condemned and the condemnations were loudly applauded by the large audience. We are glad to see this inexcusable apathy on the part of professed Christian churches exposed and condemned. Perhaps the churches will get ashamed and arouse themselves from this pitiable submission to politicians and to the abominable liquor traffic.

—Last week the Foreign Society received $600 on the Annuity plan. There is a steady gain also in the regular receipts. The receipts to date amount to $126,226.09. We are only $23,773.91 short of the $150,000 mark. Two full months yet to reach that amount.

—At the request of the editor of the Coming Age, one of the leading magazines of the day, published in Boston and in this city, the editor of this paper gave his reasons for being a Disciple, and the same appears as an article in the August number of this magazine. While these reasons might not be new to the readers of this paper, they will doubtless be to many of the readers of the Coming Age, and thus will the knowledge of our plea and people be extended in the world.

—The total attendance of the Nebraska Normal School, last year, was 903. The attendance at this popular educational center has increased rapidly during the last four years. J. A. Beattie is the president of the school, in which he is supported by a strong faculty. The catalogue of this State Normal School, located at Peru, Neb., for 1898-'99, is out, and clearly defines its efficiency and popularity.

—Last week we received a letter from Iowa, enclosing one dollar for Church Extension and signed simply "A Friend." We have forwarded the same to G. W. Muckley, corresponding secretary of the Church Extension Board.

—The catalogue of Kentucky University, Lexington and Louisville, for 1898-1899, has appeard with full announcements of department courses of studies, faculty, matriculates, graduates and explanatory literature. It is evidently not the purpose of the trustees, faculty and friends of this historic institution to permit its splendid record for efficiency in higher education to be in any way impaired in its future career. Nothing is to be lacking in the way of an efficient equipment at the opening of its next collegiate year, September 11, 1899.

—The receipts of the American Christian Missionary Society for the week ending July 29th are $1,992.90. The gain of $1,526.77 is in harmony with the jubilee movement. Christians all over the land are working as never before to bring Home Missions to the front. Two weeks ago it was double, last week almost three times, now it is four times gain over same period last year. Our secretaries tell us that in all their mail so far since the cry for $100,000 in the Jubilee Year has been raised, not one discouraging word has been received. Everybody says it must be raised. Do not weary in well doing. Send all offerings to Benj. L. Smith, Cor. Sec., Y. M. C. A. Building, Cincinnati, O.

—The Kentucky State Missionary Convention assembles at Shelbyville Aug. 7-10, and all intending delegates are requested to send their names to Hugh McLellan, Shelbyville, Ky. The church there extends a cordial invitation to all who are interested in the cause of Christ in Kentucky to attend. A fine convention is anticipated.

—Tract number 5 of the Christian Tract Series, published by the Oracle Publishing Co., Chicago, is devoted to music. Tract music strikes us as something novel in the tract line. But why not?

—The size, neatness and illustrations of the catalogue of the Nebraska State Normal, at Peru, strongly reflect the efficacy and popularity of this institution of learning, of which J. A. Beattie is the president.

—The catalogue of Louisville Christian Bible College for 1897-1899, just out, is a strong testimonial of the value of this institution in the work of Negro Education and Evagelization. This catalogue shows that the college, considering the support it has had, has made a splendid record. The fall term of this college will open September 7th.

—The committee on ministerial standing, of the Christian Ministerial Institute of Central Illinois, having been called to investigate certain charges against B. C. Black, late of Winchester, Ill., has sent us a report of its findings. The committee finds the aforesaid Black guilty on several counts, such as maligning members, duplicity and misrepresentation, tattling, etc., and closes by saying: "We regard him as unworthy of fellowship in the church, and of a place in the Christian ministry until cosfession and reformation take place." This report is signed by the members of the committee, R. H. McGinnis, M. P. Hayden and C. B. Dabney.

—Through the entire day of Friday, Oct. 20, the guests at the Jubilee Convention will find the reception committee at their service as guides to visit the various parts of the "Queen City on the Banks of the Beautiful River." Sightseeing, excursions, trolley rides and the like will be the order of the day. In the Christian Endeavor Convention the tide rises as the days go by and the last session is expected to be the best. If the convention thus maintains, as we believe it will, its strength and spiritual power with rising tide to the very last, then the social features of Friday will be a happy conclusion to this never-to-be-forgotten occasion.

—Wherever we have several churches in easy reach of each other they should begin at once to plan for jubilee rallies. Send for a suitable speaker. Send to Miss Mattie Boteler, Cincinnati, O., for a copy of her convention song, "Cincinnati, Ninety-nine." Advertise the meeting from the pulpit, in local papers and by personal letter and have such a meeting that every one present will want to go to Cincinnati in October. Several of these rallies are already planned, but their number should be legion. If preachers will do their duty the Jubilee Convention will enroll 20,000 delegates.

—The article by A. B. Jones, of Liberty, Mo., on "Actual and Formal Remission of Sins," which appeared in our issue of July 6, has called forth a number of replies. As these replies practically apply to the same things in Bro. Jones' article we publish but two of them, which we think will be satisfactory to the others who submitted replies. As Bro. Briney and Bro. Shepherd have presented about all of the objections that can be made to Bro. Jones' article we give them a hearing this week and leave Bro. Jones to reply. These replies to Bro. Jones' article would have appeared sooner but for our two special editions, previously arranged for. In the meantime, give Bro. Chamberlain's article on this subject in last week's issue of the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST a careful reading.

Jubilee Rallying Song, Cincinnati, '99.

MATTIE M. BOTELER.

Air: "Banner of the Cross."

[DEDICATED TO THE TEN THOUSAND.]

There's a joyous song that's floating out to-day;
Hear, it echoes o'er and o'er.
Come, my brothers, all, and rally for the Lord
On fair Ohio's shore.

CHORUS.

Ninety-nine! Ninety-nine!
For Cincinnati, '99.
The hosts combine,
And fall in line
For Cincinnati, '99.

Like Zion fair, she is girt about with hills,
Queen City of the West.
Come with joyous hearts and keep the jubilee
In fellowship most blest.

Half a hundred years have swiftly passed away
Since our fathers joined in hand
And purposed here to send the gospel out
Through the borders of the land.

On Ohio's banks, come pitch your moving tents,
Oh! happy hosts, once more,
And praise our God who has grandly led us on,
While we tell our victories o'er.

Ten thousand strong will join us here to lift
Loud the song of jubilee;
While "The World for Christ," our watchword evermore,
Sounds aloud from sea to sea.

—The editor of this paper may congratulate himself that his articles on the "Hour of Prayer" are being reprinted in a religious journal published in Paris entitled, La Cloche d'Alarme.

—The picture on our first page this week is that of Randall Faust, of whose life and work L. L. Carpenter in another place in this paper writes. The missionary labors of this devoted servant of God, especially among the negroes, well deserves fitting tribute to his memory, written by Bro. Carpenter, to which, for further information, we respectfully refer our readers.

—The 33rd annual convention of the Tidewater district, Va., of which a program appears in this paper, will be held with the Independence Church, Hanover county, Aug. 8-11. This convention last year appropriated $250 for preaching and $200 for the new building in Fredericksburg. We are pleased to note in the report to be submitted to the next convention an item of $2,502.35 in cash and notes in the educational fund. A good convention is anticipated.

—John S. Sweeney, who for many years has been the pastor of the Church of Christ in Paris, Ky., has permitted the use of his name for state auditor upon the Republican ticket, and if he concludes to tour the state in the interest of his ticket, inclusively, the chances for his election are by no means "slim." But few men, probably, are better known by the more substantial citizens of Kentucky, and his respect for "divine authority" will be to them a guarantee of the faithful performance of his duty as a servant of the state, regardless of party lines.

—J. B. Briney, of Moberly, Mo., has announced his purpose of launching a religious journal under the name, Briney's Monthly. The apology for the enterprise is the alleged decrease of spirituality in the church and increase of moral evil in the world. Special emphasis is to be given to the defense of the Bible and of New Testament Christianity. If reasonable assurance is guaranteed beforehand that the magazine will be supported, Brother Briney proposes to devote the rest of his life to it. That there is room for the magazine within the scope of the things named in the prospectus will not be questioned, and none will more heartily welcome the presence of such an aid to the cause of truth and righteousness than the CHRISTIAN - EVANGELIST. And yet, we are sure that Brother Briney is shouldering a heavy burden. However, if the brethren rally to his support he will give them a vigorous, emphatic journal. Brother Briney is a man of pronounced views, commands strong language, and will be a strong opponent to all things that to his mind hinders the truth. The time for the appearance of the first number of this monthly is to be announced later.

—The faculty of Christian College are well educated Christian men and women, all members of the Church of Christ, and chosen with special reference to the fitness for the work of the college. This fact, together with the location of the college at Harper, ought to command the most liberal patronage from our people in the Southwest.

—The 40th anniversary of the Equitable Record is celebrated by a special number dated July 26. Aside from the history of the formation and marvelous development of the Equitable Life Insurance Co., the Record is illustrated and highly ornamented by cuts of their fine buildings in the larger cities of the world. The Equitable is among the most substantial life insurance companies of the world.

—I. J. Spencer, pastor of the Central Christian Church at Lexington, Ky., preached a ringing sermon recently, which was reported in the Lexington Leader, in which he calls attention to some dangers ahead in our national political life. He refers in no uncertain terms to some recent legislation in Kentucky, which looks to the perversion of the purity of the ballot box. "What we need," he said, "is heart-felt and thorough repentance on the part of the whole people on the question of politics. Let the word no more signify artful and dishonest management to secure party measures, or advantage, or the spoils of office; but let it mean what it meant to Kossuth, the Hungarian patriot, who defined it as the application of true philosophy to the government of men." This advice is needed not only in Kentucky, but in every state in the United States.

—A. McLean and F. M. Rains, the secretary and treasurer of our Foreign Missionary Society, speak a good word in this paper for St. Louis. And while St. Louis is increasing her offerings for missions abroad, it must be remembered that she is also doing the same for missions at home. The amount stated in Brother McLean's report only states what the St. Louis churches have done for Foreign Missions. Without seeing the report we think the St. Louis churches have done as much for Home Missions, besides attempting to raise twelve or fifteen hundred dollars for our city mission board and work. It must be remembered also that many of the St. Louis churches are under heavy debt, and some are almost dependent mission points. We are not apologizing for any weakness or deficiency, but only giving due credit for our feeble efforts in this city. The St. Louis churches have room to grow, and are growing, but they have also done heroically under their present burdens.

—W. H. McClain, chairman of the Missouri Jubilee Convention committee informs us they expect to close negotiations with two of the largest hotels in Cincinnati in a few days for the thousand or more delegates from this state, and also that two special trains will be provided for their transportation from this city. It is now reasonably assured that the Western Passenger Association will grant a rate of one fare plus two dollars for the round trip. The committee will issue a bulletin soon containing all the information wanted on this subject and will also appoint a Sunday on which all our preachers will be asked to preach on the Jubilee Convention and the fifty years of missionary work for our people. If ministers are wanting data for this sermon we refer them to the facts stated in our Jubilee Convention number of July 20th. And now that things are getting under way, let everybody join hands, hearts and prayers for a great convention. That it will be the greatest in our history is already assured, but let us not stop with that. Let it be great according to our ability to make it great, God being our helper.

—We begin this week the historical articles by T. W. Grafton, covering another interesting and important period of our history. We bespeak for these articles the careful reading which we are sure their character and value will warrant. We are receiving a number of expressions of approval of this historical series by our readers who are making it the occasion of a fresh study of the history of our religious movement.

—A copy of the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST was sent to go under the corner stone of the new church building in Corrydon, Ia. The corner stone was laid July 31st. The building is to cost $5,000. To be a frame structure and modern throughout. Auditorium will seat 500 persons. Bible-school room, parlor, dressing rooms and gallery in addition. We are informed that there are 40 members at Corrydon, but no organization. A. B. Cornell, of Arlington, preaches for them and will see that they are set in order in their new house.

—Vernon J. Rose, of Shawnee, Oklahoma, writes us that R. L. Stanley, formerly of Kansas, has no letter of commendation from him, and that if he is exhibiting such a letter it is a forgery. He also states that he sometimes signs his name R. E. L. or R. E. Stanley.

—It is a matter for profound gratitude to every one who recognizes the value of the American Christian Missionary Society, that its receipts have been so materially increased during the current fiscal year. It only requires about $15,000 to complete the $100,000 which we named in the beginning of the year as the mark toward which we would struggle. There are only sixty days in which to raise this amount of money. We sincerely hope that all of our readers who have made no special contribution to this Jubilee Fund, will do so at once. It will be a great stimulus to our home missionary work, and give fresh courage to our faithful workers under its auspices, if this amount can be reached by the first of October. We sincerely hope that no stone will be left unturned that will contribute to this result. The recent gift of Mrs. Oliver, in the form of a memorial fund of $5,000 ought to stimulate a number of others to make a similar offering as an expression of gratitude to God for his great goodness to us in granting us the rapid increase in our numbers, in our resources and activities.

—W. F. Watkins, who has recently accepted the work at Savannah, Ga., says:

While writing let me express my growing appreciation of the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST. Its ability, liberality and spirituality command my hearty assent and admiration. The paper is "doing a great work." May God bless editor and publishers.

—Mr. Comstock's time and ability have been for over twenty-seven years devoted to the suppression of obscene books, papers, pictures, etc., and in this work he has been the defender of thousands of homes wherein his name may not even be known. It is needless to say that in this work he has had to endure not only its unpleasant nature, but the distrust of those who could not appreciate his efforts and the open sneers and enmity of the vile elements of society. Yet he has not faltered, but has prosecuted his work until he has become known as the champion of purity and integrity among the young. The law has its officers, it is true, but who does not realize from experience, how poorly laws that make for good morals are enforced unless conscientious men and women use systematic efforts to compel obedience? Mr. Comstock is an example of this kind of man, and he and his coworkers deserve the heartiest support of the Christian public. Remember that parents may be as watchful as possible, yet unclean literature may time and again reach the eyes of the young folks, without the knowledge of their elders. Every boy and girl is in danger while such an evil exists.—Union Gospel News.

PERSONAL MENTION.

E. F. Keran, of Kansas, Ill., states that he has baptized more than one hundred persons during the last eighteen months.

J. H. Crutcher has accepted the work at Troy, Mo., for half time, and has already entered upon his labors there.

R. W. Linville, formerly a teacher at Fairfax, Mo., has entered the ministry and arranged to attend Christian University.

Chancellor J. W. Hardy has secured some handsome gifts at Canton for endowment of Christian University.

Geo. F. Hall, pastor Tabernacle Christian Church, Decatur, Ill., was on the program of Big Stone Interstate Chautauqua, July 25-31, for two of his popular lectures.

J. D. Greer, Mexico, Mo. and R. M. Shelton, Auxvasse, Mo., who have both been preaching some years, have secured homes at Canton to enter Christian University.

Brother Gillett, of Des Moines, Ia., preached at Tuxedo, Mo., last Sunday morning and evening. He is visiting at the invitation of the church, and he may become its pastor before the courtship ends.

Gen. Drake is on a visit to California with the editor of the Pacific Christian, F. M. Kirkham. Mrs. K. is a sister to the ex-governor. His health continues to improve.—Christian Index.

J. M. Van Horn, of Warren, Ohio, is now at Chautauqua, N. Y. He has spent several vacations at Chautauqua. He says that the entertainment there is of the highest order, interesting and instructive.

President Jenkins, Prof. Ames, Dean Hall, and others are traveling, lecturing and talking in the interests of Butler College, and indications point to a large attendance next year. Mr. Clarence Forsyth has been employed as professor in music for the year 1899-1900.

Samuel Magee, of Nevada, Mo., has a a strongly written letter in the Mississippi Valley Democrat and Journal of Agriculture, published in this city, in which he sharply criticizes some of the men and movements of the day.

B. F. Hill, for four years minister of the church at California, Mo., has been called to Nevada and will begin his work there Sept. 1st. Bro. Hill occomplished a great work for the church and Bible-school at California, and he brethren there regret to lose so good a man. Nevada is to be congratulated.

Prof. H. L. Willett, "Rev." Jas. M. Campbell and Prof. Hiram Van Kirk, are to treat the subject of "Apostolic Christianity" at the Macatawa Park Assembly, August 6-13. Prof. Willett and Prof. Van Kirk will treat the subject historically and Dr. Campbell its spiritual import.

W. H. Matlock, whose letters from Germany and France to the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST were read with interest, has returned to the United States. He visited Drake University, from which place he graduated before going to Europe, and is now renewing his friendships in Iowa and Missouri.

A. Martin, who was recently called to Ashland, Ohio, says: "For business reasons I find it will be impracticable for me to move my family here, and hence I will give this work into the hands of another, and in September will re-enter the evangelistic field, with my home at Muncie, Ind. I will go anywhere in the United States or Canada, either with or without a singer. My first meeting will be with P. Baker, at Colfax, Ill., and the second meeting will be at Winchester, Ind. Until September I can be addressed here at Ashland, O. Bro. S. V. Williams, of Fairfield, Ill., has been called to this pulpit."

"He That Stays Does the Business."

All the world admires "staying power." On this quality success depends. The blood is the best friend the heart has. Hood's Sarsaparilla is the best friend the blood ever had; cleanses it of everything, gives perfect health and strength.

Hood's Sarsaparilla
Never Disappoints

C. C. Hill, who for the past six year has ministered to the church at Montgomery City, Mo., has been called and accepted the work at California, and Eldon, Mo., giving three-fourths of the time to California, at which place he will make his home after Sept. 1st. During his ministry at Montgomery the meeting house was rebuilt and the membership doubled.

I. W. Cameron, of Sioux City, Iowa, has a a unique interpretation of the book of Job. Job stands for the Jewish nation; his three friends for the leading Christian nations; Elihu for Christ; Job's affliction for the present time; his repentance the reconciliation of other nations, etc. His lecture on this theme is illustrated with a chart of his own designing.

Chas. E. Taylor tendered his resignation recently as pastor of the Grant Street Christian Church of Omaha. The resignation, it is said, caused great surprise as well as universal regret. Brother Taylor has become widely known in that city for his earnest and faithful ministry, and his departure is widely regretted. He will probably return to Ohio, his old home.

W. Durban, of London, England, our English correspondent, writes that he will sail for this country Sept. 16th on the steamer St. Paul. He is coming to attend the Jubilee Convention, and will probably spend three months in this country. He will be glad to deliver some lectures for our churches during his stay here. He will receive a hearty greeting from those who have read his letters in the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST for so many years.

Miss Bertha Marshall, second daughter of A. J. Marshall, city evangelist for St. Louis, has completed her studies at Drake University, passed all required examinations, has been accepted as a missionary to India by our foreign board and will sail for her field of labor about October 1st. Sister Marshall comes of a missionary family, having a grandmother and three aunts in India, who are missionaries. Bro. Marshall, her father, is showing the wisdom of a wise missionary in his work in this city, and we know that the knowledge of his daughter going as a missionary to India will deepen the interest of our churches in St. Louis in his arduous work here.

Randall Faurot.

Brother Randall Faurot, one of the most godly and self-sacrificing preachers of the Reformation, was born in Hopewell, near Canadaigua, New York, in 1820. He was the seventh son of Randall and Urena—Doolittle—Faurot, who removed to Royalton, Ohio, when young Randall was 12 years old. In early life he found himself possessed of an intense desire to obtain a good education; so he gladly relinquished his share in the prospective fine farms for a few terms in an academy, and for time to study. Afterwards he entered Oberlin College, where he was a hard-working student for several terms. He then entered Bethany College, and remained there until he graduated.

Fortunately, while a mere boy, he heard the "old gospel," as preached by the fathers of the restoration movement. His young heart was attracted with its beauty and simplicity, and at the early age of 14 we find the boy standing in the presence of God and men and angels, confessing his faith in Jesus Christ as the Son of God, and accepting him as his only Savior and Redeemer. The old veteran, Wm. Moody, leads him down into the waters of baptism and buries him with his risen Lord and raises him up to walk and work until the last day of his earth-life, with and for the Master.

After his graduation at Bethany College he gave himself to the ministry of the Word, and was instrumental in winning many souls to Christ.

While on a visit to Michigan he became acquainted with that natural orator and great evangelist, the sainted Benjamin Alton, whose praise was in all the churches wherever he had labored. Bro. Faurot engaged with him in holding meetings in Stafford, Newville, Caburn's, Cosmas and other points in DeKalb County, Ind. He was also very helpful in building the churches at Waterloo, Newville and Mishawaka, Ind., and at Edgerton, Ohio, besides very many other places through that country, riding on horseback many hundreds of miles, through the woods and new settlements, visiting the sick, comforting the poor and needy, as well as preaching the gospel in private homes, schoolhouses, groves or barns, or wherever he could get the people together. At these meetings many were converted and obeyed Christ, and churches were built up in that new country.

He was always deeply interested in the subject of education, and was largely instrumental in building up the Newville Academy, which flourished for many years.

His memory is held in grateful remembrance by many in different states, who were educated at this academy. He removed from Newville, Ind., to Philadelphia, Pa., where for awhile he was pastor of the Christian Church. While in Philadelphia he wrote a book after the style of Bunyan's "Pilgrim's Progress." In this book he showed the joy and advantage of living a consistent Christian life. The book was exceedingly helpful to all, especially to young Christians. During the war of the rebellion, with his wife, who was ever a worthy and efficient helpmeet to him, he went twice to Tennesee to do what they could to alleviate the sufferings of our brave soldiers. They went first as volunteer nurses, after the battle of Murfreesborough, and again to look after and care for wounded soldiers and friends. Their unselfish work in the hospitals with the sick and the wounded will never be forgotten by those to whom they ministered.

Brother and Sister Faurot were always the friends of the downtrodden and the oppressed. Therefore their great hearts of sympathy went out after the colored people who, by the fortunes of war, were now freedmen. While South they lent so much valuable aid in starting schools for the colored people that he was eventually called to that country to help build up the Southern Christian Institute.

After months of hard work, during which he was engaged in missionary work, he with Dr. W. A. Belding finally located this institution of learning for colored people on an old plantation of eight hundred acres of land, fourteen miles east of Vicksburg and twenty-six west of Jacksonville, Miss. It will take the great day of eternity to tell all the results of this the last and best work of his useful life.

Here, in the midst of the work he builded, and which was as dear to him as his own family, he was called from the sorrows of earth to the bliss and glory of the better world, to live in that land that is fairer than day.

He died October 10, 1882, the day before he was 62 years old. The disease that carried him off was malarial fever.

He sweetly sleeps in Jesus, awaiting the resurrection of the just. He was married May, 1847, to Letitia Hutchings. They had no children of their own, but raised several adopted ones. Sister Faurot's kind administrations to the sick and oppressed endeared her to the hearts of all who knew her.

Their home was often the home of the widow and the orphan, and the weary and oppressed were always given a resting-place beneath their hospitable roof. The writer of this brief tribute to the memory of one he loved most dearly and respected most highly and admired greatly, remembers how much inspiration he received in the beginning of his ministry from being permitted to be a colaborer with Randall Faurot. Farewell, dear brother, but not forever. L. L. CARPENTER.

The Quiet Hour.

DEAR BRO. GARRISON:—I have just read your paragraph in the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST of July 13th concerning the spiritual qualifications which alone can give greatness to our coming Jubilee Convention in the sight of God. I hope we shall go, every one, in the spirit of worship. I think we might have a "Quiet Hour," so profitably used in the Endeavor Conventions. Our "devotional exercises" are not earnest and single-hearted enough. They are not planned and directed with the study and wisdom, purpose and power, which their importance demands. To feel our need as individuals now of the presence and communion of God in our convention work is an essential step toward its realization. God seeks the worshipers, who seek him "in spirit and in truth." To worship him is to exclude, for the time being, every consideration—however commendable—except that of adoration, praise, prayer, illumination and inspiration, to go aside from business to "rest awhile" in full communion with God—for spiritual recreation, for the replenishing of heart and amplification of thought—should be regarded as a fundamental necessity and inexpressible privilege when pressed and perplexed by the responsibilities and broblems of a great convention. We need in such emergencies the fullest assurance possible of the divine presence and guidance. I trust the Jubilee Convention shall be great in every right direction, and especially great in the spirit of loyalty and devotion to God, in faith, hope and love.

Wishing you a pleasant sojourn in Michigan, and with sincere esteem,

Yours truly,

I. J. SPENCER.

Unification of Missionary Societies.

DEAR BRO. GARRISON:—I want to express my high appreciation of the editorial in the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST of the 6th on "Consolidation of Missionary Societies." Whether the time is yet ripe or not, it surely is not far distant when we shall be compelled to take such a step. I speak chiefly from the point of view of the pastor, and from such a point of view I am convinced that the multitude of calls that come from so many boards is seriously affecting many congregations, causing them either to be indifferent to all calls, or to concentrate their efforts upon the support of one board, as upon the Foreign Society. As you say, our missionary enterprises are one, and are of equal importance and should be treated as such. It seems to me that the time has come when the chief business of the missionary secretaries should be to assist the pastors of the churches in educating the membership about all our evangelistic work, and in securing from every member of the churches a regular contribution, monthly or quarterly, for the support of mission work. These contributions could then be sent to the general society to be used as a fund for world-wide evangelization, or the official board of the local congregation could indicate what use they wished made of their contributions. Concentration and systematization should be the watchwords for the new movement in general and in the congregational work as well. Will any action be taken at the Jubilee Convention looking in the direction of your editorial? CARLOS C. ROWLISON.

Indianapolis, Ind.

[There should be appointed at a joint session of the societies, during the Jubilee Convention, a committee of wise brethren, not less than seven in number, to consider this whole problem of the readjustment of our missionary organization to present condition, and report at the next annual convention the result of their year's study and investigation. This much, at least, we hope may be done.—EDITOR.]

The Spiritual Benefits of the Great Jubilee Convention.

The coming meetings in Cincinnati are to mark the high tide of our missionary offerings and work, and of our spiritual development as well. They are not to be a mere aggregation of people, a display of numbers and of material force. God forbid there should be aught of boasting or glorying in our achievements. In the fear of God and in humble thanksgiving for his great grace to us, in the spirit of confession and consecration, in hungering and hoping for larger things, in paayer, in a sense of our deep unworthiness and yet of the unspeakable exaltation to which our Lord has brought us, in devout and heartfelt recognition of the fact that it is "not by power nor by might, but by my Spirit, saith the Lord of Hosts," and in love and loyalty and lowly reliance upon our God for his blessing we should come up to Jerusalem to the feast.

For such a season, then, we should religiously prepare our churches and our hearts. From every pulpit and in every prayer-meeting supplication should be made unto the Lord for his presence and the guidance of his Spirit. Mention should be made of God's goodness to us, of our failures as well as of our successes, and of our sincere desire to be worthy of the great trust imposed in us. Earnest prayer should be offered, not only for our missionaries and their converts, for our givers and helpers, but especially for the multitudes that have no part in this work, for those that oppose themselves, for the many that fail to see clearly their duty to the cause of world-wide evangelization. What a blessed meeting indeed if all our Zion could come up as one man with the prayer: "Thy kingdom come, Thy will be done on earth as it is in heaven!" What a triumph if this Jubilee Year of rejoicing and reconsecration could witness the thorough union and cooperation in every good word and work of all those who are pleading for the union of all God's people on the basis of New Testament Christianity!

Whatever we make of this jubilee gathering, let it be one of spiritual power. Let every preacher and every member see that for him it is the mount of communion and transfiguration. Let prayer be supreme. Let this above all things be our petition: "Father, glorify Thyself!" Standing by the grave of Gossner one said of him: "He prayed up the walls of a hospital and the hearts of the nurses; he prayed mission stations into being and missionaries into faith; he prayed open the hearts of the rich, and gold from the most distant lands." We have not yet learned the relation of prayer and missions. We have not yet heard the significant word of the Master: "Pray ye the Lord of the Harvest!"

Let us, then, to Cincinnati on our knees. The Jewish Passover, the first and greatest of the three annual feasts instituted by Moses, was "a holy convocation." With devout and humble service Israel assembled to glorify God for their deliverance. In the same spirit let us praise him. Let the Jubilee be A HOLY CONVOCATION. With the one great purpose to glorify God let his people prepare themselves and come up to the feast. He has a great blessing for us in these jubilee conventions; let us be ready to appropriate it. F. D. POWER.

Will there be a Skeleton at the Feast?

Our Jubilee Convention is rapidly approaching, and expectancy is running high, thousands will be in attendance, our rejoicing will be great, for without doubt we will celebrate a victory over the god Mammon, we will wrest from him $150,000 for Foreign Missions, $100,000 for Home Missions and $90,000 for the C. W. B. M. We must raise all the above; to do less will belittle us—we must raise it. But while we are laboring so arduously to succeed in these three departments, may it not be possible for us to so far neglect some other interests as to imperil them.

Our Benevolent Association is in a distressing condition. Double expense is upon us this year, and so far but one-half the usual income has been received. Did you read the appeal in the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST recently? If not, turn to it and read carefully. See the numbers of June 29 and July 20. Brethren, we must not let this work suffer nor fail. To allow the Benevolent Association to shut the doors of the Orphans' Home at St. Louis to many worthy applications from our own people, as it will be necessary to do, unless we come to their help, will be more than to belittle us; it will be a disgrace—a skeleton at the feast. Let all churches make an offering. The amount asked for is small, but necessary. Send all money to Mrs. J. K. Hansbrough, 5018 Cabanne Avenue, St. Louis. JOEL BROWN,

Are you going to the Jubelee Convention at Cincinnati, Oct. 13-20? If so, it will be to your advantage to send your name to the undersigned at once. The regular rate on all railroads will be one fare for the round trip, but we hope to do better than this by traveling in parties. For all information address

A PRIME MINISTER'S INFLUENCE.

I do not think that there would be any exaggeration in saying that at a very recent period Lord Salisbury was the most powerful man in the world. I say this because for several years, up to about a year ago, all those despotic autocrats who wield the mighty militarism of Europe admired this British statesman as being the only kindred spirit with themselves who has in recent times been at the head of affairs in England. Even the Sultan, that chief of incarnate demons, found in Lord Salisbury a friend and helper, and Lord Salisbury was not ashamed. Seasons occur in the history of a nation when it seems to be bewitched by some fiend of perversity. The evil spirit of mediæval reaction has thus for over ten years possessed this British people. The Marquis of Salisbury has been politically omnipotent, even those people who knew that he despised them as mean commoners, groveling in abject admiration under the spell of this reactionary Toryism. But an uneasy awakening has commenced. Lord Salisbury still does what he likes with the House of Commons, through his clever nephew, the Rt. Hon. A. J. Balfour. But the strange thing is that his own barons have turned round upon him in the House of Lords. He has been twice, during the last month, vehemently slapped in the face. The first occasion was when he was trying, in a fit of unexpected liberalism, to correct the House of Commons, who had decided not to allow women to become counselors or aldermen in the new municipalities into which London is shortly to be cut up. Lord Salisbury astonished the peers when this bill came up to the Lords by making a very lively and amusing speech in favor of allowing this kind of honor to women. But he could do nothing with his usually docile followers. His sheep turned round and rent their leader. The women are snubbed. But now comes another peculiar episode. Another bill in favor of privileges of a far more serious nature has come before the Lords. It is called the Shop Seats Bill for Women. The humane object is explained by the title of the measure. The girls in thousands of our shops are white slaves. Many of them are really young ladies whose fathers are professional men or poor gentlemen. They have to stand from twelve to fourteen hours a day at the shop counters, their employers having no kind of mercy on them, and the reports of medical men have moved the heart of the whole nation to indignation. Against this bill the premier hurled a cruelly cynical speech. But he only repelled and disgusted his friends and followers, who voted against his view by a sweeping majority. It is evident that the reign of Salisbury is passing away, and I, for one, cry, Hallelujah! For this nobleman has for the most part used his immense power for evil—social, political and religious. He scorned the cry of the nation to help bleeding Armenia, and actually, at the Lord Mayor's banquet at Mansion House, joked over the appalling crisis caused by the Sultan, raising a laugh at the expense of the humanitarians who were praying for some light on the infernal darkness of that hour.

A NONCONFORMIST CATHEDRAL.

Time and again have I taken American friends to see, amongst other hollowed spots in this great London, the sanctuary known as Wesley's Chapel, in the City Road. This chapel is the headquarters of the world's Methodism. Thither last week flocked hundreds of Methodists from all parts of this country to celebrate the completion of the restoration of the chapel which was built for ministry in London of John Wesley himself. There the great founder lies buried. There also is the house in which he lived, with all its precious relics. This old building has been completely transformed at a cost of £40,000 ($200,000). I went to see the commemoration and to hear the jubilant speeches. I was both interested and disappointed. I came away with the impression that while Methodism is still a magnificent spiritual force, yet already are not wanting signs that its palmy day is over, and that it will fall behind in the progress of the world. I was disappointed because there was nothing in all I heard which seemed really apostolic. There was a want of the pure gospel accent in the talk. Much was said about Methodism, just as Anglican Churchmen talk everlastingly about their church, and Congregationalists never tire of parrot repetitions of the merits of Congregationalism. As for the religion of the Bible and the Bible alone, that seemed be to unthought of. Indeed, Wesleyans seem to reach finality in Wesley. Where Wesley was silent they are dumb; where he speaks they speak, and what he said they go on saying, "world without end; amen!" But the age needs something which Methodists are failing to supply. It is the ancient, hallowed gospel as it burst out on the world at Pentecost. That is what no sectism will give. So I listened, heard much that was eloquent, and went home sorrowing that clever and pious men should confine their hold on truth to a grip of Wesley's coat tails.

A ROMANTIC STORY.

Although what I next allude to is not a religious incident, it is so singular that it may find a place in this letter at the holiday season as a fragment of literary recreative reading for some of my American friends. It is told in the Cornhill Magazine by a clergyman, the Rev. Canon Staveley, who says that years ago a lady friend of his visited the Island of Mauritius. She was introduced to a lady of great beauty and commanding appearance, who ordered everybody about, and whose features were unmistakably Spanish. Who was this lady? An infant picked up on the field of Waterloo from behind a wagon after the great battle. Her parents were known to God alone. She was found by an ensign, Heiliger by name, perhaps an officer in the king's German legion. He placed her under the care of a soldier's wife, paying for her support, and as she grew up, seeing how beautiful and talented she promised to be, had her educated and finally married her, as Dick Swiveller did the marchioness. He held in his latter days an appointment in the Mauritius, and here follows the extraordinary pendant to this romantic tale. The great-granddaughter of this Waterloo "waif and stray" was the wife of Baron Ferdinand de Lesseps, the originator of the Suez and the unfortunate designer of the Panama Canals. At the age of seventeen she fell in love with the Baron, then above seventy, and proposed to him, according to the Mauritius custom, by a floral offering. The old man was so amazed that he declared she must intend the offering for his son, who was with him, but she insisted, "Non, Monsieur, c'est a vous."

THE HOUSE OF COMMONS GHOST.

I pass on to another matter which comes rather under the category of the gay than the grave. But it has a serious side to it, because it relates to the occult, the unknown and the mysterious, and is setting thinking some of the flippant people who are not given to reflection. Remarkable details are being published in the most respectable journals with regard to the "ghost" which is said to haunt the part of the House of Commons in which lives Mr. Milman, the assistant clerk of the House. This "spook" is creating intense interest in all parts of the land. The apparition takes the form of Mrs. Milman, and acts as that lady's double. Strange to say, it is always seen in her absence, and she herself has never seen it. But she says, "The funny thing about the story of this ghost is that it is perfectly true, and that the movements of the phantom have been going on for years People are constantly telling Mrs. Milman that they have seen her in all sorts of places where she has not been. One of her governesses left her just because of meeting this strange sight so often. Here is a strange case. Mrs. Milman is a lady of proved integrity, whose movements are within the knowledge of a number of people, who is living with her husband under the roof of the British House of Commons, and yet she solemly testifies to the repeated manifestation of one of the most extraordinary phenomena ever heard of. Even sceptical people are admitting that they are staggered by this goblin. There are more things in this universe than have hitherto been thought or dreamed of.

THE SUMMER SIESTA.

The lovely English summer has fairly set in. It is just hot enough to make us forget how recently winter was lingering with us. It is cool enough to make July delightful. Dear July! Queen of the months, sandaled with fern, mantled with bracken, girdled with honeysuckle, crowned with roses, tearful with dewdrops, musical with the full signal notes of the cuckoo, the rapturous final anthem of the nightingale and the early matin chant of the lark, echoing in every home the siren call of the gently heaving summer sea—who would not come to old England's shores to feast on the loveliness of our landscape in July? All this Island of Britain is now one paradise. It is God's garden. Americans sometimes repeat to me their dictum that their land is God's country. Then this is his garden. I am proud to read that more American visitors are landing on Albion's Coast than ever before. This is a little island, but still we can make room for such welcome friends in any numbers

"You will find enclosed thirty-one one-cent stamps for one of Dr. Pierce's Medical Advisers, cloth bound," writes James E. Crampton, Esq., of Sharpsburg, Washington Co., Md. "This book is for a friend of mine who is using your 'Golden Medical Discovery,' and I cannot praise your medicine too highly. I was in business in Baltimore and had rheumatism for three months; couldn't walk at all. I tried the best doctors I could get, but they did me no good. I took three bottles of Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery and it cured me sound. I came home to Sharpsburg, and there were three cases of different diseases. I advised the patients to use Dr. Pierce's medicines, which they did, and all were cured."

"Golden Medical Discovery" contains no alcohol, cocaine, nor other narcotic.

Texas Letter.

Our state mission work was never fuller of promise than now. We have in the field for their whole time the following strong men: B. B. Saunders, A. J. Bush, D. A. Leake, Emanuel Dubbs, Tom Smith, Geo. Van Pelt, John Logan and E. W. Douthitt, the last as singing evangelist. Besides these eight strong men we have about as many more for a part of their time. We warn the older and stronger states to look out for their laurels, and to remember that we have only about 30,000 members engaged in this work.

"The Purpose of Baptism" is Vol. 1, No. 5, of the Courier Tract Series, Dallas, Texas. The author is John Logan. And if you have been thinking that this old theme could not be dressed up in a new and becoming garb, you only need to read this tract to find out your mistake. It is in my judgment the best thing on this subject for a long time, if not superior to anything ever written on it. The language is simple enough for a primer, and compact enough for a telegram, and the argument rests solely on the Scriptures.

R. F. Carter, our pastor at Orange, has called to his aid an assistant pastor in the person of Miss Nora Lawrence. They were married at Cedar Bayo, July 2. We extend hearty congratulations, and henceforth will look for even better work at Orange than ever before.

The killing of Prof. William Lipscomb in the First Church of this city, on the 10th inst., was one of the saddest things I have ever known. A meeting was in progress at the church, and Prof. Lipscomb, an officer in the church, as was his custom, was on the front seat. The sermon was over, and the invitation song was being sung when John F. Carlisle came into the house through a side door in rear of the pulpit and approached within a foot or two of Prof. Lipscomb, the people thinking he had come to join the church, when, quick as a flash he drew a pistol and shot him. His faithful wife was standing by her husband when he was shot. There was intense excitement, but the assassin was not injured, but was quietly turned over to the officers. Prof. Lipscomb was a nephew of David Lipscomb, of the Gospel Advocate, on excellent gentleman and a successful educator. He had just been elected for the sixth time as a principal of the High School. Mr. Carlisle failed to be re-elected as janitor of this school, and believing Prof. Lipscomb was the cause of his failure, shot him. Bro. Lipscomb made a strong struggle for life, but after a conflict of fifty hours he passed triumphantly up into the presence of God. But for bad whisky this awful murder would never have been, and but for good (?) men's influence the bad whisky would not be.

Vol. I, No. 1, of Add-Ran University Bulletin is bright and breezy. The editor, Chancellor Buxton, is full of hope and enthusiasm, and as you read after him you partake of his fullness. If all indications do not fail, the school will be better than ever before. The doubt and delay as to the future of Add-Ran have served as a dam to pile up the waves of influence for a little while, only that they might be the stronger when released. This number contains spledid cuts of the college buildings, one of the finest in the land, of ex-President Clark, and of the new chancellor.

J. B. Boen's great camp meeting, near Graham, is a success. Two thousand people are camped on the ground, and there were 3,000 in the audience the first Sunday and 5,000 the next. Many of our strongest preachers are in attendance. While spiritual good is the great aim of this vast gathering, still creature comforts are not neglected. They have a fine commissary, large eating house, plenty of ice water and a long-distance telephone connecting them with the rest of the world. But best of all, there have been many conversions. This campground is in the cattle region, where the people are not numerous, and many of them travel a hundred miles to attend it. They have few church privileges, and being a warm-hearted and grateful people, with money in their pockets, they thus show their appreciation.

First Assistant Attorney General P. H. Ward has decided that palace car companies cannot sell intoxicating liquors in Texas, and this old prince of demons gets another black eye.

Texas is always doing something big. I am reminded of this by a huge watermelon just sent to the Dallas News, by the Fruit Growers' Association, of Mineola. It weighed 79 pounds; about as much as an eighteen-year old boy.

When the negro porter of the News saw the melon his eyes sparkled and his mouth watered, and he said with much feeling, referring to the Mineola folks, "Dem people's my kind o' people." M. M. DAVIS.

Iowa Letter.

I have written Iowa at the head of this letter, on this 23rd day of July, although I am on the Atlantic Coast, and have not seen Iowa for twenty days. I write in Swampscott, Mass., in the study of pastor E. F. Randall, for whom I preached this morning. Our headquarters are on Prescott St., Cambridge, only a block from the old home of Louis Agassiz. There are ten of us, mostly from the Hickory State. I. N. McCash preached this morning for Pastor Mohorter, in Roxbury. T. W. Grafton, of Rock Island, had an invitation to preach for pastor Flinn, of Arlington, but felt that he could not in justice to himself accept. The ladies of our party, Mrs. Haggard, Mrs. Grafton, Mrs. Rogers, of Oskaloosa, Ia., and Mrs. McCash, have divided, part going to hear Geo. F. Pentecost and part to hear Bro. McCash. Of the two juniors, Allena and Barton, the latter is with me to-day. Enroute to the East, we tarried three or four days with the Endeavorers at Detroit, and spent one day at Niagara Falls, and another in New York City. Our two weeks here will end next Tuesday, when we expect to leave for Mr. Moody's Summer School. After a week there we will turn toward home, journeying by stage. You can easily see that a dozen letters might be written about the persons, places and things seen and heard.

Pastor McCash and I have been attending the Harvard Summer School, which closed on Friday. This is Harvard's first attempt to hold a summer school of divinity, hence we are charter members. One hundred and four enrolled, which was twice as many as the sanguine ones expected. This state furnished 58, New York 11, Maine 7, New Hampshirer 4 and Iowa and Pennsylvania each 3, the Episcopal rector of Ft. Dodge, Iowa, being the third one of the Iowa group. Denominationally the members are distributed as follows: Congregationalists, 27; Unitarians, 17; Episcopalians, 15; Universalists, 14; Baptists and Methodists each, 5; Presbyterians 3, and Disciples 2. A number did not register their position among the religious bodies.

Among the dozen men whom we have heard and learned in a measure to know, no one is more widely commented upon at present than Professor McGiffert. I should say he is not far from his 38th year. In stature he is not large; dark hair and beard, which he wears full and neatly trimmed, adorn an earnest, kindly face. He impresses me as a man who had adopted a new theory, which he follows with deep religious earnestness and devotion at all cost—even rejoicing at the sacrifices it demands of him and the persecution it brings upon him. If you are inclined to sympathize with the under dog in a fight, you will certainly fall in love with McGiffert, even though you reject his theories. Some men have met stubborn facts, have wrestled like Jacob with them, have been broken by them and made over. To one with such an experience, I imagine Prof. McGiffert will appear as having made his theories, not to fit facts, but to fit his inner self, no matter what the facts are or may be.

Comments on the summer school are of all kinds and all more or less true. A careful and thoughtful Disciple, out of a half dozen who visited our lecture hall, noted the absence of Bible study. It was as he saw it philosophizing about man and God, time and eternity. In the eyes of a member it was a gratifying manifestation of unity and relegation of denominational differences. At the closing banquet with its speeches this sentiment was admirably expressed by Prof. Clarke, of Bowdoine, and Prof. Palmer, of Harvard. However, all were not of this type, for Dr. Lindsay, of St. Paul's, N. Y., declared that he enjoyed it greatly because into so much of it he could read an Episcopal interpretation. And Pastor Rose, a Universalist, was carried to a haven of ecstacy because it was a triple demonstration of the final triumph of Universalism. In his ecstacy he eulogized Universalism at the expense of everything else, especially of the Baptists, telling the story of the pup, yesterday a good Baptist pup and to-day a good Universalist pup, because its eyes opened during the night. And as you might expect, the Methodist speaker went out of his way to praise Methodism. I would not so much have blamed him if he had spoken after the Universalist man. I prized the lectures because so large a part of the material was such as I could use. I did not expect so rich a harvest. I account for this on two grounds: first, I have no theological corns, inherited from the church councils and church fathers, hence the temptation was not strong for any one to step on my toes. Secondly, I have for years trained myself on the principle, never reject a known truth from any quarter. I believe the New Testament Christianity is built broad enough to hold all truth—all the Spiritualists have, all that the Papists have, all that the Mormons have, all that any ism or philosophy has. Of course, I heard much that to me is not truth. This was happily expressed by one of the attendants of the school, Mrs. Eastman, of Elmira, N. Y. She said at the banquet, "We were taught that divine omniscience originated revelation to guide the children of men, but since coming here we find none there, but we do find it greatly needed at the other end, so that we can tell by its help which of you professors is right." She added, "We came to find men who knew, but instead we find men who charmingly tell us what they do not know."

"Why did you come to the Harvard Summer School?" So said a good Disciple of Chelsea to me one day last week. Let me answer some of you instead of him. For five years as Iowa secretary I could no keep up the reading and study which was formerly my wont. In these years I had saved up almost one hundred book reviews. Early in last winter I decided to camp this summer close to a great library where I could see these books and prepare to bridge those five years. What better place than Boston for such work? Accidentally I learned of the Harvard Summer School and found that I could devote part time to it; why not? And last, but not least, this region is the cradle of American history; why not kill three birds with one stone? The weather has been delightful, our party is in the best of health and our stay has been more than pen or tongue can tell.

For Dyspepsia

Take Horsford's Acid Phosphate.

Dr. T. H. ANDREWS, late of Jefferson Medical College, Philadelphia, Pa., says: "A wonderful remedy which gave me most gratifying results in the worst forms of dyspepsia."

New York Letter.

In the going of Bro. Lowell C. McPherson to Cuba, the Empire State loses one of its very best pastors. We cannot say that Bro. McPherson should have declined the call to go to Havana, but we shall miss him from the state. Poor old New York is drained of money and men, it seems, to supply the needs of so many places. If our cause in the state were strong we could more readily rejoice in this honor that comes to Bro. McPherson and his most excellent wife, but the fact is, the heathen in New York need the labors of this godly man and hundreds of others like him. The record of his work in Buffalo is a splendid one. When he came to that city the Jefferson St. Church was just out of a mission with 80 members; now it has almost 500. The pastor has been honored by election to the presidency of the City C. E. Union for one term, and pressed to accept it for the second time. Their Sunday-school has the largest Chinese class in the city, which this year gave $85 to the Foreign Christian Missionary Society. Bro. McPherson has been the efficient and tireless secretary of our state missionary board for several years, and his wife is now president of our state C. W. B. M. Their home is blessed with three children, aged eight, five and a half and three years. They both are natives of Illinois, and attended Eureka College and afterward Garfield University. Their labors in Atchison, Kan., were as signally blessed of God as they have been at Buffalo. They are splendidly equipped for their new and arduous duties, both by education and experience, and will, no doubt, do a great work in the redemption of Cuba.

Dr. Russell H. Conwell, the great Baptist preacher of Philadelphia, in a recent symposium, in the Ladies' Home Journal on the question, "What We Go to Church For," gave expression to these forceful and true words:

We go to church to worship God; and his attributes include all that is noble in life, all that is hopeful in death and all that is beautiful in thought or in nature. What a man worships determines what he is. To sincerely adore and appreciate goodness, wisdom, power, loveliness and intelligence, as exhibited in the character of the Christ of the Bible, is to be inspired with the highest thoughts and become partakers in an increasing measure of that grand divine nature. We go to church to reform evil, to secure strength in our weakness, to revive our hope, to obtain comfort in grief, to elevate our thinking, to purify and intensify our feelings, to preserve and restore our health, to increase our knowledge, to arouse our love for all that is good, to make our home more sweet, to make society more brotherly and peaceful, to get rest from care, to be better fitted for business, to secure enthusiasm for heroic deeds and to find pure, permanent happiness.

Do you, thoughtful reader of these lines, find yourself growing in the things here mentioned? If not, perhaps you do not go to church regularly, or if not this, it may be you do not go with the right motive or make proper preparation for the worship of God before going to the services.

On Friday last, the 21st, at noon, while sitting in his chair talking with his wife, in their summer home at Dobbs' Ferry-on-the-Hudson, the noted agnostic, Robert G. Ingersoll, suddenly died. Thus went out of life the celebrated blasphemer and infidel without a moment's warning. It is reported that formerly Mr. Ingersoll expressed the wish that he might die slowly and fully conscious of approaching death, that he might tell his feelings, hopes or fears in this struggle; but of late he had often said he hoped he might go suddenly, without a moment's knowledge of death's nearness. Many stories are told of his human sympathies, tenderness of heart, integrity and uprightness of character; but the awful fact remains that Ingersoll's influence on society was bad, wholly bad. He would rob sinning, suffering, perishing men of the only help proffered them, leaving them in hopeless despair. As a result of his teachings—his ribaldry, sarcasm and ridicule—many despairing souls have sought relief in self-destruction, and have gone on before him to the judgment bar of God. It was the fool who said in his heart, There is no God. But some fools bleat it out, and many fools pay a dollar to hear them talk for two hours concerning that about which the speaker professes to know nothing. What fools some mortals be!

The secular press, every now and then, seems to glory in what it often states as a certain fact, the decadence of the pulpit and the Church of Christ. Though it is not true that the church is dying or the true preacher is losing his power, yet the fact cannot be questioned that much of the so-called preaching of to-day is without power. And why? This, simply this: The pulpit is giving utterance to too much "advanced" thought, and the "new church" and the "new theology" are paraded instead of preaching the old gospel and re-establishing the Church of Christ as in the apostolic times. In the thought of many, Luther, Wesley, Calvin, Lyman Abbott, etc., stand on the same level with writers of the sacred Scriptures; that Shakespeare, Tennyson and Kipling rank with David, Isaiah, Jeremiah and Paul, and that the works of these men as sources of theology are of equal authority with the Word of God. This all comes from leaving the Word of God and serving tables, treating the temporal interests of men as of greater moment than those which are spiritual and eternal; attempting to conciliate men by amusing them, and adopting unauthorized methods to make them so comfortable that they may forget their sins and sorrows, without repentance toward God or faith toward our Lord Jesus Christ. We need more of the preaching that will convict men of sin and lead them to Christ, the only Savior.

Kansas City Letter.

The great Christian Endeavor Convention of 1899 is now a matter of history, and will add not a little to the annals of this wonderful movement toward a deeper spirituality and more efficient service on the part of young Christians throughout the world. The high mark set by former conventions was not lowered by this one. While the attendance was not so large as at two or three of the most notable gatherings, such as at Boston and New York, it was much above the average of former conventions. Detroit entertained handsomely, the only complaint being that their accommodation far exceeded the demand. Others will doubtless report the convention in detail. I desire only to make brief mention of a few features of the program that impressed me deeply.

And first I name the Quiet Hour, conducted every morning by Dr. J. Wilbur Chapman. The basis of his talks at these services was the twenty-third Psalm—the "Shepherd Psalm." Those who were permitted to hear his heart-searching addresses and his appeals for a fully surrendered life can never again be utterly indifferent to the claims of the divine Lord, nor content to live a merely professional Christian life. Without a trace of fanaticism, yet with most intense earnestness; disclaiming all pharisaic claims to sinlessness, yet emphasizing the privilege of the Christian to attain to victory over sin through Christ, he stirred our consciences into new activity and made us long for a fuller measure of Christ's Spirit in order to a more complete reproduction of his life.

A new feature of the program this year was the ten minutes of quiet meditation and prayer inserted into the midst of each half-day session. The silent prayer, the humble confession of sin, the tender appeal, the grateful thanksgiving, combined to lift our hearts into closer communion with God. I think I know better what prayer may be made to me, after the wonderful season of meditation and prayer, led by Rev. Floyd W. Thomkins, of Philadelphia. We seemed to stand in the very presence of the mercy seat and were permitted to "handle things unseen." Such power in prayer is a gift to be earnestly coveted, but it can only be acquired by daily travail of soul and constant fellowship with Christ in service.

The third feature of the convention that I wish to mention is the session devoted to Foreign Missions. Three addresses of unusual power were delivered, one of them by our own Bro. McLean. His marshaling of facts concerning the world's great need of Christ was such as is possible only to one whose brain and heart are full of knowledge and sympathy, and whose life is identified with the cause of the world's redemption. But one thing was still more impressive than these missionary addresses, and that was the presence upon the platform of a large number of returned missionaries, many of whom bore the marks of their service and suffering for Christ's sake. Among these were our beloved Bro. G. L. Wharton and wife, and Dr. Jas. Butchart, who have so long and faithfully toiled in the heathen field. Our eyes overflowed with tears of love and sympathy and gratitude, as we looked into the faces of these servants of God, whose abundant labors have made the name of Jesus to be praised and loved in many of the dark abodes of heathendom. Some of these "comrades of the cross" will be at our Jubilee Convention in October, and we ought to be there to greet them, ten thousand strong. Are you planning to go?

I write this letter from Macatawa Park, where I am spending a little time in rest before returning home. Will be again at work by the time this letter is in print.

"Actual and Formal Remission of Sins."

The CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST for July 6 contains an article from the pen of A. B. Jones under the above caption. The article is well conceived and well expressed, as one might expect in an article from its gifted author. But it seems to me that some things in it miss the mark, and should not go unchallenged. The article moves largely on the plane of philosophy, and is characterized by the defects that are liable to attach themselves to philosophical reasoning upon matters of divine appointment. Remission of sins does not depend upon human philosophy, but upon the appointment of God; and human duty ends when the nivine appointments are ascertained and complied with.

Bro. Jones' philosophy strangely ignores a very important factor in the forgiveness of sin, namely, the lifting or removal of the penalty. If a boy violates a parental law to the transgression of which the penalty of ten lashes is attached, and his father, seeing that he is penitent, says, "Kiss your mother and all is forgiven," all parties understand that the penalty hangs over the boy till the injunction of the father is complied with. Any forgiveness that does not embrace the removal of incurred penalty is of but little value. To which article of forgiveness does the removai of the penalty belong in Bro. Jones' philosophy—the actual or the formal? A citizen commits a crime for which he is condemned to the penitentiary for a term of years. When he has served a part of the term the governor tells him that if he will sign a bond to be a good citizen in the future he shall be forgiven. This promise of forgiveness means the removal of the penalty, and no one would understand that the penalty is removed before the condition is complied with. The penalty of sin is condemnation, and forgiveness, to be practicable and valuable, must remove the penalty of condemnation. Does Bro. Jones hold that forgiveness in this sense takes place before the obedience to which the promise is attached is rendered? If so, it seems to me that he nulifies much scriptural teaching.

"Contrition in the child's heart as a moral cause produces compassion and forgiveness in the father's heart as a moral effect." An effect is something that follows its cause as a natural and necessary result. It does not involve choice, but is a matter of inexorable law. Where the cause exists the effect follows as a matter of necessity, and not as a matter of grace. I do not see that God is bound to forgive a sinner and remove the penalty due to his sin, even if the sinner repents. If he is so bound he forgives as a matter of debt. If he forgives as a matter of grace, and not as a matter of debt laid upon him by necessity, then Bro. Jones' law of cause and effect fails.

This cause-and-effect philosophy also destroys the reasoning put forth as regards "assurance." A sensible person needs no assurance that an effect will follow its cause, except the assurance which the cause itself produces. If I thrust a dagger into my heart I do not need to be assured from any external source that the effect of death will follow. When a sinner believes and repents he knows it. "Whoever believes in Christ has the witness in himself." That he does believe and repent is a matter of direct aud immediate knowledge on his part. Now, if belief and repentance constitute the cause which produces forgiveness in the mind of God as its effect, the sinner is assured of forgiveness by his knowledge that he is a penitent believer, and no external matter can strengthen his assurance. Thus the philosophy breaks down at another point.

I am unable to see how "actual remission of sins is a psychological fact and involves psychological experience" on the part of a sinner unless actual remission of sins takes place in the mind of the sinner. If pardon is the act of the mind of God it cannot be a matter of psychological experience on the part of a sinner, unless there is some sort of a system of telepathy between the mind of God and the mind of the sinner. It is far better to rise from this plane of psychology to that of simple faith in the Word of God.

Bro. Jones quotes Acts 10:43 and says: "Our present contention is that this latter text declares the actual remission of sins." This leaves no room for baptism and assurance of remission of sins. If God declares that one's sins are actually remitted before baptism, such assurance cannot be strengthened by baptism or anything else. The sinner knows that he believes, and if God declares to him that his sins are actually forgiven, that is an end of the matter, and there is no room for "formal remission" or any further assurance of remission. A plain declaration from God cannot be strengthened. If this passage assures Bro. Jones that sins are actually forgiven before baptism, why may it not give such assurance to every other person? Does the passage mean one thing to Bro. Jones, giving him assurance that sins are pardoned before baptism, and another thing to the penitent sinner, leaving him without such assurance till he is baptized? Thus the bottom again drops out of the philosophy.

The entanglement into which Bro. Jones has involved himself grows out of the scrap-doctor method of handling the Scriptures. One passage is conceded to teach one thing, and another passage a contrary thing; and then comes the tug of reconciliation. In the case before us the task is accomplished by assuming the distinction of formal and actual remission. "To him give all the prophets witness, that through his name whosoever believeth in him shall receive remission of sins," does not teach that "faith alone secures to the sinner the remission of sins," as Bro. Jones quietly assumes. If it does, repentance is excluded, for the passage says not one word about that. This assumption makes the expression "through his name" superfluous. "Whosoever believeth in him shall receive remission of sins," would fully express the idea of remission by faith alone. "Through his name" is certainly not a meaningless appendage to the passage. It involves the whole gospel system, including baptism. It embraces the commission, "He that believeth and is baptized shall be saved." It embraces the command, "Repent and be baptized in the name of Jesus Christ for the remission of sins." The comprehensive and safe method of interpretation collates all passages that bear upon a certain subject and draws a conclusion that embraces the whole scope of the teaching of all the passages. Interpretation that resorts to the special pleading of drawing a conclusion from one passage, and a contrary conclusion from another passage, involves the Scriptures in endless contradiction and is full of mischief. Get all the passages together and let the conclusion be inductive.

I wish to call attention to a Hebraism that characterizes the writings of the New Testament. When a writer is treating of one item as a whole, he treats it as if it were the whole. If the subject is hope, "we are saved by hope." If the subject is faith, "we are justified by faith." If the subject is repentance, it is "repentance unto life." If the subject is the life of Christ, "we are saved by his life." If the subject is confession, "with the mouth confession is made unto salvation." If the subject is baptism, "baptism doth also now save," or "be baptized and wash away your sins." Any one can see that by isolating these passages a variety of contradictory theories may be established. The passages must be brought together and each one allowed a place in the gospel plan of salvation; and when this is done there is perfect harmony.

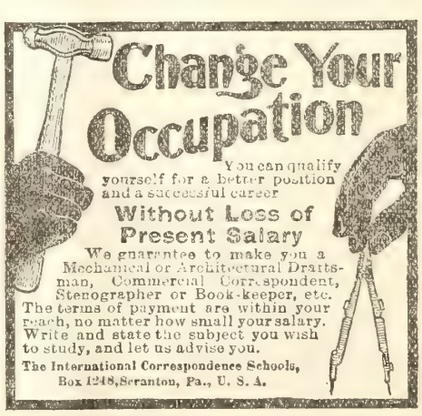
DEAR CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST:—I have now had an experience of over two weeks in this beautiful city, the capital of this new state. I have talked with all the best members of our church here and a finer class of intelligent Christian men and women would be hard to find. But they are discouraged, thoroughly discouraged.

A debt of $2,000 stares them in the face. One of the oldest and most influential members said to me this morning: "We are compelled to let the mortgage take the church property. There is no other way to do." I said: "Thousands of men, like you, have been giving liberally for years to Home Missions, and my idea is for our Home Mission Board to step right in, here and now, and pay off this $2,000 and let you people start anew."



And that is just what ought to be done. No half-way business, but pay the full $2,000, spot cash. We lay members respond liberally to the calls of the church, and we do so for the purpose of firmly establishing the cause in just such fields as Boise. I am not a resident either of this city or state, and never expect to be, but I can see the wonderful possibilities of this new capital city. I can clearly see the necessity of a strong church established here. And just now is the time to do it. $2,000 now means everything to this people. Will not the home board take the suggestion of this letter and come to the rescue? This city will double its population in the next eight or ten years. The county will more than double in population. They have the finest climate in the world, and the valley is exceeding beautiful and productive. All kinds of grains and fruits are produced in abundance. Two new railroads are soon to enter the city, and the population will double. Brethren, I believe in Foreign Mission, Home Missions, Jubilee Year and the high grounds of the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST and the Christian Standard and all the rest of the grand and noble and enthusiastic glories of the Christian Church. But here is a practical proposition—a practical proposition of $2,000 to save to our brotherhood a fine property in a growing city. Will the home board do it?

This letter is entirely unsolicited by the church here, but I have written the facts just the same.

Fraternally,

C. M. PINKERTON.

Mississippi Items.

Our state evangelist has closed a meeting of fifty days at Water Valley. Fifty were added to the Lord. This is a great work for Water Valley. Bro. Stevens led the singing, did the praying, baptizing and preaching. May the Lord spare this man of God to Mississippi for the work whereunto he is called.

W. Graye Harbin and others are making an effort to give "the South a church paper that will not die, and that will fill every one of our 'long-felt' needs, whether the felt be wool or cotton." This would seem to be an enterprise to touch our "bosoms and business." Here is "my hand with heart inside" to the success of this last venture for a Southern religious journal for the Disciples of the Christ.

M. H. Armor is in a meeting at Marietta. He did a similar service for the brethren at M. last year.

Our next state convetion meets at West Point on the second Tuesday in September, D. V. We should go up to West Point this year in large numbers.

Bro. Harbin reports three additions recently at the Leake County mission, at his regular visit.

In our regular work one was baptized in June at Burnsville, one at Booneville, also one came to us at Corinth on Decision Day, from the Missionary Baptists and at Saltitllo one from the Freewill Baptists.

Sister D. M. Allen, of Baldwyn, recently passed away; she was 83 years old. A long journey she had trod, but her life was crowned with good deeds.

There are some things the writer can't do this vacation season. He can't be at Macatawa, he can't have the opportunity of being at any of the great meetings of our ministers, and he can't attend the Chicago University; but there is work we must-stay-at-home may do. An extra amount of evangelizing needs to be done; many under our pastoral care need special attention, and if one don't get too much on his hands and heart of this important work he may have some extra time to spend at home reading, enjoying the pleasures of his own home, and doing for his own household what no other can. Is there a tendency for preachers to neglect their own? The family duties should not be put in danger because of pressing duties in other relations. More than two years ago a Mississippi minister whose good wife had been taken away from her great sufferings, said of her: "My wife was a strong character, always had the courage of her convictions, and impressed herself on all with whom she came in contact. She staid at home and reared and trained our children while I was away preaching the gospel of our blessed Redeemer. I told her on her dying bed that we had been greatly blessed in our children, and that next to the blessing of God, it was mainly due to her care and training. I tell the children that we have the memory of her loving labor, the light of her bright example, and the impress of her strong and original character to help us in the remainder of our toilsome journey to that land of light and love and joy into which she has already entered." Such a wife should every married preacher have. Without such their children would have an unequal race in life, when the father must needs be away from them and home half or most of his time. Such mothers will shine with bright crowns in the "upper day."

From a file of good letters from good men I gather often nuggets of pure gold. In our Southern ministry and pastorates not a few questions arise from time to time that bring confusion and demand adjustment. Study with me this excerpt and gather therefrom the golden nugget: "The chief trouble is this: the brethren are divided over the organ and society, and very few of them are making any spiritual growth. Now if a determined lover of the Christ and his gospel should get into that field and shut his eyes to all things else save the glorious privilege of preaching the unsearchable riches of Christ, I believe he could be well sustained as soon as the brethren could give Jesus room in their hearts, where they now have nothing but strife and division." Do you see the nugget of pure gold? the price that must be paid where schisms exist, in order that all may become of one heart and mind, and of the same judgment, and all speak the same things? "A hint to the wise is sufficient." The minister who fails to love his brethren into unity fails to have them one in Christ.

The Union Church at Waupun, consisting of Baptists, Free Baptists and Disciples who have been working thus together some six years or more, is erecting a new $10,000 building. I assisted in the laying of the corner stone July 7th, preaching on Eph. 2:20: "Christ himself being the chief corner stone." J. J. Hull, of Honey Creek, represented the Free Baptists on the program for the day, and Prof. H. J. Vosburgh, of Beaver Dam Academy, represented the Baptists. The former spoke on "Church Unity the Christian Watchword of the Age;" the latter on "The Value of the Church to the Community." Local ministers of other churches, the mayor of the city and a glee club made up the rest of the program. The formal laying of the stone was conducted by the pastor, F. T. Galpin. A bounteous dinner was served at noon, and supper in the evening, by the ladies of the church.

W. S. Campbell, of Rushville, Ind., is stil preaching to interested audiences at our Oconto County missions.

H. F. Barstow has disposed of his merchandise business at West Line and will give himself entirely to the ministry hereafter. He has just made a farewell visit to Merley, which church he founded, and to Sugar Grove, where he spent his boyhood days and has many friends and relatives. He preached at both places. He started Wednesday, the 19th, to drive through to Hickory where he will locate and have charge of the work there and at Kellybrook and Amanda. It will take about a week to make the drive. This will be a case of a good man and good people, happily united for the work of the Lord.

About a dozen Wisconsin brethren have already signified their intention of going to the Jubilee Convention, Cincinnati, Oct. 13-20. I have been appointed excursion manager for Wisconsin, and it will be important for me to have names and addresses of all who are going. Send me a card at once. Reduced rates on all railroads will be secured. Half rate is already secured from Chicago on. I will try to plan so that Wisconsin delegates may all go on same train. This will be the greatest convention of our history. Let us send the largest delegation.

Our state board held its quarterly meeting at the Avenue Hotel, Madison, July 13th, and made plans for our state convention, heard reports of the work done since the February meeting and planned other work for the future. W. B. Taylor, of Chicago, met with the board and gave us the benefit of his voice in our counsels.

Bro. Taylor has been holding a protracted meeting for Pastor Mutchler, of Center, with splendid interest. They have finally succeeded in getting a hearing from among the German Lutheran population, which is so strong there. At last report there had been eight additions with more prospective. Pastor Mutchler was overcome with the oppressive heat a week or so ago, but will soon be himself again.

Claris Yeuell, of Chavies, Ala., will assist Bro. Mutchler with a meeting at Footville, beginning Aug. 6th, under direction of the state board. A. M. Laird goes to Amanda at the same time.

F. N. Calvin has several candidates awaiting baptism at Milwaukee. There was one confession last Sunday. Bro. and Sister Calvin are taking their vacation of six weeks in Chicago, but he returns and preaches on Sundays. A number of students from Drake University are spending their vacation in Milwaukee.

The program committee is at work on our state convention, which is to be held at Richland Center, Sept. 13-17th. There will be three missionaries from foreign lands on the program and probably four other speakers from outside the state. We are trying to make this in every way the greatest convention we have ever held in the state. There will be full announcement of program, entertainment, etc., in my next letter. Let every church send delegates. Our state board now has a debt of near $300. Many churches have not yet paid their apportionments. Let these be paid in full before the state convention, so that we may come up to Richland Center owing no man anything, and loving one another.

IS IT A TRIFLE?

That Common Trouble, Acid Dyspepsia, or Sour Stomach.

Now Recognized as a Cause of Serious Disease.

Acid dyspepsia, commonly called heartburn or sour stomach, is a form of indigestion resulting from fermentation of the food. The stomach being too weak to promptly digest it, the food remains until fermentation begins, filling the stomach with gas, and a bitter, sour, burning taste in the mouth is often present. This condition soon becomes chronic, and being an every-day occurrence, is given but little attention. Because dyspepsia is not immediately fatal, many people do nothing for the trouble.

Within a recent period a remedy has been discovered, prepared solely to cure dyspepsia and stomach troubles. It is known as Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets, and is now becoming rapidly used and prescribed as a radical cure for every form of dyspepsia

Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets have been placed before the public and are now sold by druggists everywhere at 50 cents per package. It is prepared by the F. A. Stuart Co., Marshall, Mich., and while it promptly and effectually restores a vigorous digestion, at the same time is perfectly harmless and will not injure the most delicate stomach, but on the contrary, by giving perfect digestion strengthens the stomach, improves the appetite and makes life worth living.

A Statement.

At a meeting of the Board of Managers of the C. W. B. M. of Missouri, held in Kansas City, May 10th, 1899, the following letter from Mrs. Alice Williams, president of the board, was read:

CAMERON, MO., May 9, 1899.

To the C. W. B. M. of Missouri:

DEAR SISTERS:—I have been trying for several weeks to have a called meeting of our board, and would myself have called one last Friday, but I was not well enough to attend the meeting, and am not now.

I received notice, a few days ago, that there would be a meeting of the board on the 10th inst. I was not advised by whom this meeting was called, nor of its purpose. I regret very much my inability to be present with you in the meeting, and consider it my duty, as best I can in writing, to place before you some facts which it is important for you to know and to consider at this time—facts which I could present in a much more satisfactory manner, both to you and myself, were I present with you.

The officers of the Cameron church, or a part of them, have formally announced, through printed notices sent through the mail, that they have withdrawn fellowship from me. Their action was taken without the usual forms of procedure in our churches. They gave me no hearing, no opportunity to refute the charges or to meet my accusers. The matter was never presented to the congregation by the officers for its consideration and approval. I have earnestly protested and prayed for a hearing before any competent tribunal, but so far my prayer is unheeded. I stand ready and anxious for an investigation. This unfortunate state of affairs can only embarrass you as the representatives of the C. W. B. M. of Missouri, and embarrass me as the president of your board and of our state convention. I am grieved and pained beyond expression over this humiliating affair, and in my present prostrate and helpless condition I can only turn my eyes to God and to my brethren and sisters in Missouri for consideration and justice. I deem it the part of wisdom in this crisis to tender to you my resignation as president of the Christian Woman's Board of Missions of Missouri, to be disposed of in such manner as you think best.

And now, praying the Father of lights and all wisdom and grace to guide us each and all in the way of truth and duty,

I am sincerely and truly your sister,

ALICE WILLIAMS.

After due consideration of the foregoing letter the following resolutions were unanimously adopted by the board of managers:

Whereas, Information has been received by the board of managers of the C. W. B. M. of Missouri, that the official board of the Christian Church at Cameron, Mo., has declared Sister Alice Williams unworthy of the fellowship of that congregation:

And whereas, Mrs. Williams is the prsident of our board of managers, and also president of our state convention, and the highest representative of our missionary work in Missouri;

And whereas, This board of managers feels impelled by a sense of duty to take proper notice of the foregoing facts and their consequent complications—

Therefore resolved, That in order that we may proceed intelligently and advisedly, a committee be appointed by this board of mangers to visit Cameron, and in such manner and methods as in their wisdom may appear wise and appropriate, ascertain the facts in this case and report the same to this board of managers, together with their suggestions and recommendations.

Resolved further, That said committee be, and is hereby appointed, and shall consist as follows: T. P. Haley, Kansas City, chairman; M. M. Goode, St. Joseph, and D. R. Dungan, St. Louis.

At a subsequent meeting of the board, held in Kansas City on the 25th of July, 1899, the report of the above-named committee, which follows, was presented for consideration:

To the board of managers of the C. W. B. M. of the state of Missouri:

Your committee appointed to visit Cameron and to ascertain the facts in the reported exclusion of Mrs. Alice Williams from the fellowship of the Christian Church, and to report the same to the board of managers, together with their suggestions and recommendations, would respectfully report as follows:

Your committee, through its chairman, advised the pastor at Cameron of their appointment and requested a meeting with the officers of the church. After a correspondence with the pastor and secretary of their official board, as well as a personal interview with the pastor, the said official board declined to receive your committee, or to give it any information on the subject saying, "We recognize the right of no committee to sit in judgment upon the actions of our official board and the Cameron church."

2. Your committee must, therefore, make their report upon such information as has been accessible to them. They believe, however, that they are able to report every material fact in the case.

3. Your committee finds that Mrs. Alice Williams was charged by the said official board of the Cameron church as follows:

Whereas, We believe Sister Alice Williams is now, and has been for many years, a frequent, persistent and aggressive disturber of the peace of the Christian Church at Cameron, and by all means in her power has endeavored to control the pastor, official board and church, and when she could not so control the pastor she has not hesitated to use unfair and unchristianlike means to drive him from the pastorate of the church."

They also add:

"And believeing that only harm can result to the church from a continuance of this conduct on her part, and the cooperation in some measure of her husband, R. N. Williams. Therefore be it resolved, That the said Alice Williams and Robert N. Williams be required to make the following pledge to the official board of the church through its special committee as provided in the second resolution.

Resolved further, That a special committee of three members of the official board be appointed, whose duty it shall be to wait upon them and deliver to them a copy of these resolutions and receive their pledge.

A refusal to make the committee a pledge, as provided in the foregoing resolution, shall be considered good and sufficient cause for withdrawing the fellowship of the church from them, and shall be deemed to have been accomplished upon the report of the committee to the president of the board of such refusal. Whereupon, the president and clerk shall cause their names to be stricken from the roll."

The pledge required of Mrs. Alice Williams:

We hereby promise, declare and say that in all the future we will desist from all acts or statements of whatsoever kind that in any manner tend to disturb the peace and harmony of the church, and we specially promise that we will in good faith acquiesce in the judgment, decisions and decrees of the official board of the church upon all questions of church upon all questions of church policy; that we will never by a personal canvass of the members of the church, directly or indirectly, seek to influence them on any question, the determination of which properly belongs to and is vested in the official board. To the faithful observance of the above promise we plege our sacred honor.

The pledge was sent Mrs. Williams with instructions to sign and return to the committee within a given time; failing to comply with this demand she was declared excluded. After the alleged withdrawal of fellowship a printed circular letter was sent to the membership advising them of their action and calling for written objections to same if any.

This is briefly the history of the case from the evidence before us.

Your committee would, in view of the above facts, record the following judgment:

1. That in the New Testament churches the discipline of the members was committed to the elders, and certainly not to any body of men called an official board, for no such body is known in the New Testament Scriptures. The jurisdiction of this official board in the case of Mrs. Alice Williams is therefore denied on this ground.

2. The jurisdiction of the official board in the case of Mrs. Alice Williams is further denied for the reason that, even if the "official board" had been composed of elders exclusively, it was in this case the accuser—no other person appearing. The "official board" was, therefore, a party to the controversy, and thus disqualified to act in the case. In such case where the eldership is involved, or in any case a party to the controversy, other elders or arbitrators should be called in.

3. Your committee further objects to the procedure in this case: Mrs. Williams is charged by the "official board" with disturbing the peace of the church, and by unfair and unchristian means seeking to displace the pastor. Under this general charge no specifications are given. No case is cited in which she did either of these unlawful things. Not a single witness is called to testify to these charges. The charges were denied the accused until she pleged her word of honor she would not show them (a pledge she afterwards retracted when hundreds of the official circular were sent out announcing her exclusion without giving the reasons). The charges were also denied her friends and she was given no opportunity to refute the general charges. Mrs. Williams had secured and was prepared to present letters from the pastors exonerating her from these charges, reaching back to the time of B. U. Watkins, Dr. A. M. Collins, T. J. Williamson, F. G. Tyrrell and J. T. Ogle, vehemently denying the general charge that she had disturbed the peace of the church, or had attempted to effect their removal; that on the contrary she had co-operated faithfully and efficiently with each and every one of them. But she was not given the opportunity to introduce this testimony. Such proceedings is without precedent and cannot be condemned in too strong language.

Your committee further finds that the action of the "official board" was not submitted to the church for ratification, but a printed circular letter, referred to above, was sent to the members stating, "If you would know the reason of such action on the part of the official board, or if you have any personal objections to the above action of said board, you will present such objections individually, in writing, to the official board of the church."

Such a subterfuge cannot be accepted in lieu of the plain statement of the Scriptures that the punishment should be "inflicted by the many."

Your committee, therefore, finds that in the case of Mrs. Williams there were no specific charges, no witnesses to the general charge, no hearing given the accused, no opportunity for defense. There was no trial, and that Mrs. Alice Williams is still a member of the church of Cameron, and from the testimony before us wholly innocent of any charges preferred against her.

It is, therefore, the judgment of your committee that Mrs. Alice Williams is now, and has beed perfectly competent and worthy to act as state president of the C. W. B. M. and president of your state convention.

D. R. DUNGAN.

After the above report of the committee was laid before the board of managers and duly considered, July 25, 1899, the following resolutions were unamiously adopted:

Resolved by the board of managers of the C. W. B. M. of Missouri, That we have undiminished confidence in the Christian character and the competency of Mrs. Alice Williams, president of the C. W. B. M. of Missouri.

Resolved further, That we decline to accept her resignation as president of the C. W. B. M., which she tendered to us at our last meeting, May 10th.

Resolved, That we extend to Sister Williams our sincere Christian sympathy in her afflictions, and earnestly pray our Heavenly Father for her speedy restoration to health, that we may again have her invaluable services in our C. W. B. M. work.

Resolved, That our thanks be extenden to Brothers T. P. Haley, M. M. Goode and D. R. Dungan for their assistance to us in this unique, unprecedented and remarkable case.

Resolved, That a statement of this matter be published in the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST, of St. Louis, and the Register-Review, of Kansas City.

The church at Mexico, Mo., has just completed a handsome ten-room parsonage. The church is united, happy and prosperous in every department of its work. S. D. D.

Just closed a revival institute at Mt. Sterling, Ill., which I think was very successful. The church has been without a pastor several months, but called A. D. Veach last Sunday.

Mexico, Mo., July 27.

A special dispatch to the St. Louis Republic, July 26th, says that the old Christian church building at Sullivan, Ill., which has served 48 years of usefulness, and which is one of the old landmarks of Sullivan, is being torn down and moved away. An elegant and beautiful brick and stone church building will take its place. Work will begin August 1. Until the new building is completed the congregation of over 300 members will hold services in the courthouse.

E. W. Thornton writes from Kansas City, Mo., that the South Prospect Church is keeping up all regular services during the hot weather; that up to the fourth Lord's day there had been fourteen additions—eight by confession; that the Bible-school average is right at 900; that Miss Effie Keller, whom the the foreign board recently elected to go to China, is a member of that church; that the Endeavor Society will contribute $30 per year toward Miss Keller's support, and that the preacher's family are rejoicing over the arrival of a new boy!

Last evening the Junior C. E. gave a delightful entertainment in our church and realized $18.50, which will go into the Bungalo fund for India. Mrs. Louise Rahrig is the best Junior Endeavor superintendent I ever saw. Our Sunday audiences, especially at night, fill our large auditorium, notwithstanding the hot weather. Several of the churches have closed their evening services because so few attend, while our problem is to get seating room for all who wish to come. Baptisms are frequent and the debt on the church is being gradually reduced. W. S. PRIEST.

Church Extension.

On the first Sunday in September will be taken the last general offering for missionary purposes by our people before the Jubilee Convention, and that will be for Church Extension. At the last convention it was recommended that $100,000 be raised for Home Missions this year and the Church Extension Fund raised to a quarter-million dollars before the close of the year 1900. It is a grert pleasure to us to be able to announce that both of these recommendations are in a fair way to be realized. The Home Mission offerings are now nearing the $100,000 mark and at the beginning of this month there was $192,000 in the Church Extension Fund. But to reach the mark set it will be necessary to raise this fund to $210,000 by the time of the Jubilee Convention. That means that the offering in September must not fall below $15,000 still leaving $40,000 to be raised in 1900. But in view of what has been done by this society and the gains realized by the home and foreign boards there will certainly be no difficulty in raising the $15,000 in September. It will require energetic work to do this, of course, but that ought to characterize all that we undertake to do.

Church Extension has already helped 450 churches since the beginning and 125 of these have paid back their loans in full. Over $108,000 has been returned to the board in loans and interest since this good work began. But the work is only begun. We have 2,700 homeless missions, 1,800 of which have applied to the Church Extension Board for help in the last ten years. All of these could have raised from two-thirds to three-fourths of the money needed on the ground if they could have gotten a loan from the Church Extension Board to have helped them out. Here, then, is a great loss of funds to the church just for want of a larger Church Extension fund.

There have been 950 churches organized in the last two years; 400 of these were able to build homes without outside help, but 450 were not. And yet of these the board could help but 100. The rest had to go without help, and without homes. A larger fund in the hands of the Board of Church Extension would greatly relieve this condition of things. The board has already made 50 loans this year, aggregating over $38,000, and have promised over 50 other churches loans conditioned on the September offering. Shall they be disappointed?

Remember that we have 127 home missionary societies, district, state and national, sending out evangelists to organize churches and only one Church Extension fund. The gain in this fund over last year up to August 1st has been over $13,000. This is a fine increase, but it should be more than doubled by the September offering one month hence. The time is short and will require active work to make this offering what it should be. Let preachers and churches take hold of this at once and roll up a grand report for Church Extension at the Jubilee Convention.

Gethsemane Gleanings.

Children's Day contribution amounted to about $92.

The Ninth Annual Convention of the Baptist Young People's Union assembled in Richmond last week. About 4,000 delegates were present and a choir of some 800 singers occupied the platform of Convention Hall. In welcoming the delegates to the historical convention of the Confederacy, Mr. J. G. Pollard, a Richmond attorney, said:

It is said of Virginians that they live in the past. . . . We of Virginia have some excuse for living in the past. Every man, woman and child that you meet in our midst is a direct descendant, not only of Washington, but of Jefferson, Monroe, Madison, Marshall and Henry. If you could trace yourselves back to men who were better than you are, you, too, would live in the past. As I stand here this morning to welcome this vast army of Baptists, and turn to greet you of the North, I am reminded of the Confederate version of the description given in Luke of the great heavenly gathering: And they shall come from the East, and from the West, and from the South, and some few from the North, and sit down in the kingdom of God.

From the following list of themes which were discussed by able speakers, a person could imagine he had strayed into one of our meetings: "Disciples Indeed," "The Work of the Disciples," "The Disciple and the Church," "Literature as an Aid to the Disciple," "The Disciple's Power," "The Life of the Disciple—Presented, Yielded, Furnished, Used," "The Disciple's Position."

Sunday morning, Cornelius Woelfkin, of Brooklyn, N. Y., a leading Baptist minister, preached at the Seventh St. Christian Church, presided at the Lord's table and partook of the broken emblems. This beautiful act was much appreciated and will have its influence in breaking down the wall which separates two mighty religious bodies.

The Dover Baptist Association met in Richmond this week in its 116th session. This Association made itself famous in the early days of the "Current Reformation" by its promulgation of the "Dover Decrees." It is still a conservative body, but is steadily (if slowly) advancing toward New Testament conceptions.

Missouri Bible-school Notes.

After a month's happy, restful recreation, we are now ready for a great year's work for Christ and the children in all sections of the state.

Will the county superintendents see that there is a good Bible-school rally held in connection with their county meetings and normal work interspersed?

Mt. Zion, Marion County, was not at the Plattsburg convention, but no matter, say C. S. Brooks pastor, and L. C. Hendren, superintendent; we will do just the same by and for the work. Their school was so much better than when I last looked in on them that it seemed as if new life must surely have come to all departments of the church, and at the morning service a house full of people demonstrated that it was so, while the patient hearing given your servant and the ready co-operation of the Hendrens, Whaleys, Hillers and my good friend, Creighton Brooks, sent me away happy, but it has always been so with those friends of God.

By the way, F. M. Rains, who always comes to our help, sends good word of the Missouri schools and their giving on Children's Day, but many have not yet sent in any word as to their offering on that day. Let no Missouri school fail in it.

At Ocean Wave, on short notice, we had an audience that gave the best of attention to the Word. This is a hard work and it takes patience and perseverance to make the work succeed, but R. D. Chinn is doing the best he can for the faithful, and may God bless him in it. The school is friendly to us in their want.

John Giddens at the Powell Schoolhouse has seen that the brethren have a house of worship, and they will be in it before winter. Tell your schools of it, brethren, for it will do them good. Henry County will have another church building for the Master's service, and this began with an insignificant Bible-school in a district schoolhouse, resulting just as it should, a house of God.

So, with our evangelist, M. H. Woods, at Clark's Creek, in Wright, where the brethren will soon have a good and creditable house for worship and work. That is what results from the Bible-schools organized, then followed up with meetings by such faithful men as now work for us.

Bro. W. D. Cree was hindered in attendance at Plattsburg by his dear wife's sickness, but sends in the Beulah school pledge of $12 for the work, while schools like Marshall, Plattsburg, Antioch, Clay, Missouri City, Mrs. Georgie Clark, Mrs. Nannie Krauss, Auxvasse, did not wait for the notice, but have remitted us in advance, all of which are good indications for this year's promptness in the offerings to our work.

By the way, watch these Notes; we mean to bring you some good news shortly, hoping thereby to increase the efficiency of all the Missouri Bible-schools. Will you please see that your county meetings continue the old or appoint new county Bible-school superintendents? In most instances hold the old, if possible, but if any changes are made, please notify this office as soon as done.

Miss Nora Kiernan, one of our most efficient county superintendents, has sent in $5 from her class for this year. It was she that carried home one of the county awards, and one of her pupils that received a gold medal. Pretty good.

W. S. St. Clair is not often at our convention, but he never fails in the offering, and has just sent in the Olivet (Boone County) apportionment in full, and it will be so from all his other congregations.

Must tell you that W. F. Mayhall, busy as can be, never forsakes this work and this year by an error did not get the Bowling Green $25 in time for the Plattsburg convention, but it was not his fault.

The Jubilee Convention is arousing such interest as never known before, and now it seems as if all were going. But are you going to help the work before doing so? Surely, all our Missouri Bible-schools will. "Children's Day for America" is to be as the great day of the feast, and the sooner your school begins its preparation the greater will be the day. Are you going to keep it? Of course.

A Profitable Beach Meeting.

I think the beach meeting last Sunday evening at (Macatawa Park) was the most effective for good I have witnessed in the years I have been here. Near the close of the meeting I stood between two Jews who were intensely interested even to the point of enthusiasm. One of them remarked to me that that kind of Christianity was pleasing to him and a kind that all can accept.

It seems to me the great lesson of that meeting was that walking "In His Steps" is the most interesting, profitable and inexhaustible theme ever offered for editorials, and for lectures, and most of all for experience meetings. It would be a magnificent triumph if at the beginning Christians would face each other and honestly profess the sincere motive that governs their actions in daily life.

What a revelation and what a surprise it would be to hear Christians profess their real motives and experiences with their fellowmen!

J. S. HUGHES.

Macatawa Park, July 24th.

A Reunion.

A word to all who have worked and to all who are working under the direction of the F. C. M. S. in the English field.

I have had correspondence with several of the above described with reference to a reunion of all who at any time have been actively interested in the work in England, to be held at the time of the great convention in Cincinnati next October.

Such a reunion would be of interest to all such, I think, and of special inspiration to many. Those who have written me about it have expressed themselves most emphatically in favor of it.

The reminiscences which could be given by those who were first in the field would be greatly enjoyed by those who are now in it, and the account of the work now going on by those who are now at it would be greatly appreciated by the older evangelists.

Our purpose is to have a meeting at some time and place—to be announced through the papers and in the convention—in which a good many short speeches may be made and to have refreshments served if possible in a manner to remind us of the social English tea. Now will all who are specially interested in such a reunion kindly write me at once what they think and give the writer any suggestions that may occur to them, so that the meeting may be made most helpful and enjoyable?

Kentucky State Convention.

The 59th annual meeting of our brethren will be held at Shelbyville, Ky., Aug. 9th and 10th. Beginning on the evening of the 7th the annual convention of the Kentucky C. W. B. M. will be held. Their meeting continues through the night session of the 8th. The Shelbyville church extends a cordial invitation to the brethren to be with us in these gatherings. If you expect to go send your name at once to Hugh McLellan, Shelbyville, Ky., if you have not done so already. A home will be provided for you during your stay at the convention, free of cost to you. If you go be sure to get a certificate when you buy your railroad ticket. This signed by me will entitle you to return at one-third fare. Remember, no certificate no reduced fare.

A large attendance is hoped for. Many ought to go for the following reasons:

(1) We will have the best report we have had for seven years. This refers to our finances as well as to the work in the field.

(2) We need the counsel and wisdom of the brethren for the plans for the year we are about to enter upon.

(3) Our vigorous president, W. R. Lloyd, has been actively at work selecting his committees before we go to the convention and these brethren will doubtless have reports to make that are well-matured and we need many of our brethren to consider these reports and to decide with reference to them.

This is new in our state work and let us hope that it is a harbinger of larger and better things in our Kentucky state work.

(4) We need you there to rejoice with us, especially if your church has helped us to do this work. If it has not yet helped us we need you to come and bring a generous offering to aid in carrying the gospel to the destitute fields of our own state.

Do not send any money here after the 5th of August. Send to me at Shelbyville, Ky.

Hiram College Jubilee Endowment

It is the plan to have this great endowment movement culminate during the commencement week in June, 1900. Special arrangements are being made to make this jubilee commencement week the crowing occasion in the history of Hiram College. Elaborate preparations have already been commenced. We hope and expect that thousands of people will come to Hiram and celebrate with us this momentous occasion. We publish the arrangements that are already planned for.

COMMITTEES APPOINTED TO TAKE CHARGE OF ALL MATTERS PERTAINING TO THE JUBILEE COMMENCEMENT WEEK OF HIRAM COLLEGE IN JUNE, 1900.

General jubilee commencement committee. Faculty members: G. H. Colton, H. M. Page, A. C. Pierson, E. L. Hall, C. Bancroft, E. B. Wakefield, G. A. Peckham. Board members: Charles Fillius, Alanson Wilcox, Frank Robbins. General chairman: E. V. Zollars; secretary, B. S. Dean.

Special days appointed and persons having the days in their charge: Undergraduate day, Tuesday, June 19th, 1900, A. C. Pierson, E. L. Hall. alumni day, Wednesday, June 20th, 1900, G. H. Colton and H. M. Page. Graduation and reunion day, Thursday, June 21st, 1900, C. Bancroft and E. B. Wakefield. Eclectic and Pioneer day, Friday, June 22nd, 1900, G. A. Peckham, B. S. Dean.

On the night of July 19th a joint meeting of the faculty and board members of the committee was held in Hiram, and it was decided to carry out the days as the faculty had planned and secure distinguished speakers of national reputation for each day; also speakers that would represent in a strong way the various periods of the Hiram history. It was also decided to make the occasion attractive by different kinds of music, banquets and other features. The following committees were appointed by the joint committee:

1. Committee on speakers. Duties: (1) To secure popular speakers of national reputation. (2) To secure representative speakers from the alumni and old students. E. V. Zollars, Chas. Fillius, W. G. Deitz, Alanson Wilcox, F. A. Henry.

2. Committee on jubilee endowment. E. V. Zollars, O. G. Kent, Chas. Fillius, H. E. McMillan, W. G. Deitz, Albert Teachout. Duties: (1) To see that the largest possible success in the Jubilee Endowment work is achieved. (2) To arrange for properly celebrating the culmination of the endowment movement.

3. Committee on entertainment. O. G. Hertzog, Mrs. Churchill, Mr. W. J. Ford, presidend of Y. M. C. A., president of Y. W. C. A., B. S. Dean, G. H. Colton, James Ellis, Mrs. James Ellis. Duties: (1) To send out invitations. (2) To secure lodging and make assignments. (3) To arrange for eating facilities.

4. Committee on transportation. O. G. Hertzog, assisted by such person or persons as he may choose. Duties: (1) To secure railroad rates. (2) To arrange for stopping of trains. (3) To arrange hacks, etc. (3) To secure rates on electric car, if the road should be built and in running order.

5. Music committee. H. M. Page, Mrs. H. M. Page, Eugene Feuchtinger, George Young, H. E. McMillan, B. S. Dean, Allie Dean, Mrs. James Ellis. Duties: (1) To secure brass band. (2) To secure orchestra. (3) To arrange for special vocal and instrumental pieces.

6. Program committee. E. B. Wakefield, G. H Colton, A. C. Pierson, Cora Clark, E. L. Hall. Duties: (1) To prepare a souvenir program containing the special program of all the exercises of the week on the various days, the names of all speakers, the Hiram songs and the popular pieces of vocal music to be sung by the audiences, and if possible, some Hiram pictures. (2) To prepare plain invitations and circular programs to be sent out with the invitations in large numbers.

7. Committee on decoration. E. L. Hall, E. E. Snoddy, Marcia Henry, Kate Parmly, Allie Dean. Duties: (1) To arrange for the decoration of the buildings. (2) To arrange for flags, banners, etc.

8. Committee of arrangements for accommodating large audiences. O. G. Hertzog, Frank Robbins, G. A. Peckham. Duties: (1) To see whether or not the tabernacle can be utilized for that purpose. (2) If this cannot be done, to secure a large tent that will hold several thousand.

9. Committee on finance. B. H. Hayden, H. E. McMillan, F. A. Henry. Duties: (1) To arrange for money to cover expenses of jubilee week. (2) To pay all bills.

10. Committee on necrology. C. Bancroft, G. A. Peckham, E. B. Wakefield, Mrs. Arner, Capt. Henry, F. M. Green. Duties: (1) To secure a complete list of the alumni that have died. (2) To prepare a list of the prominent Hiram students and people who have died. (3) To prepare a list of the most distinguished donors that have died. (4) To write up a report suitable for the occasion to be distributed during the jubilee week.

11. Press committee. E. V. Zollars, E. B. Wakefield, H. B. Hazzard, F. M. Green. Duties: (1) To see that the jubilee commencement week is properly advertised in church and secular papers. (2) To see that all the exercises of the jubilee week are properly reported to the papers.

In order that this Jubilee Commencement week may be really a time of rejoicing, the great endowment movement must be carried forward to success. If $250,000 shall have been added to our endowment, it will indeed be a season of rejoicing, and Hiram College will enter upon its new second half century with boundless possibilities for good. Send your name at once as a volunteer in the great Hiram Jubilee Endowment Army, to Abilene, July 25.—Have just closed a meeting at Brownwood with 17 additions. This was good considering our surroundings. Our house will now be completed. It will be a neat church home, built of brick and stone. They have set Oct., 2nd Sunday, to dedicate. I will be in a meeting at DeLeon, Tex., when this is read; hope to plant a church there. It's hot in Texas now, but the Lord's work must go on to success.—A. I. BUSH.

MISSISSIPPI.

Corinth, July 14.—At Barnsville a splendid railroad man was baptized, in June. Made the confession and was baptized almost immediately, at his own request. Also a young lady at Booneville. The widow of one of our departed brethren came to us from the Msisionary Baptists for fellowship, on Decision Day, in June. At Saltillo, in June, one from the Free-will Baptists came out for primitive Christianity, having learned the way of the Lord more clearly.—JAMES H. BROOKS.

KANSAS.

Kansas City, July 24.—Notwithstanding the heat of the day we had a most excellent service. Our morning audience was above par and Bro. B. F. Clay preached for us, telling us, the need of missionary work, the plans and the assurance of success. All were pleased. At the evening services audience was large, splendid interest with seven additions; four by relation and three confessions. Thursday of this week I go to Northwest Iowa, visiting my old home at Creston; from thence to Webster City to begin evangelistic work.—C. M. WICKHAM.

Rom. 1:19.

Our nights may be dark and worried,
Our days heavy-laden with care—
Some friend will tell Jesus about it
At the evening hour of prayer.

We kneel in the garden shadows,
Without a hope or friend,
But loved ones out in the sunlight
Plead—and their prayers ascend.

To the faith that never faileth
Jehovah's ear shall bend;
To the prayer that "much availeth"
From the lips of a "righteous" friend.

Trust then. Where'er we wander,
God's blessing still attends,
Called down in benediction
Through the prayers of thoughtful friends.

The Missionary Spirit of the Waldenes.

BY JAMES MAIR.

There was nothing more remarkable about the early Waldenses than their missionary spirit. This, we have just said, characterized in a peculiar degree the followers of Peter Waldo, but the same spirit pervaded all the people of the same faith, wherever they lived in those dark ages, and by whatever names they were called, Vadois, Paulicians, Patarins, Cathari, Leonists, Lollards, Albigenses, poor men of Lyons, etc. It was by sending out missionaries, two by two on foot, to visit their brethren dispersed in France, the north of Spain, Flanders, England, Germany, Poland, Bohemia, Hungary, Crotia, Dalmatia and Italy that they kept alive the little piety which existed in the world at that day. These missionaries knew where to find their brethren; they went to their houses, held little meetings, administered the ordinances, appointed deacons and sustained the faith and hopes of the tempted and persecuted ones. It is said that these missionaries could go at one period from Cologne to Florence and stay every night at the houses of brethren. It is on account of the great number of missionaries which those little and poor churches in the valleys sustained that we read of there being sometimes one hundred and forty or one hundred and fifty ministers at the meeting of their synods. But few of them were needed at home, they were mostly engaged in the foreign work. It is also remarkable that all the men whom God raised up from time to time in France and other countries for more than six hundred years before the Reformation seem to have more or less to do with the Waldenses, such as Peter Waldo, Peter Bruys, Henry of Lousanna, Lollard, who labored with such zeal to dispense the truth in England, and who was burned at Cologne.

But not only did preachers go out from the valleys to proclaim the gospel, but humble, pious pedlars, of whom there were many in the middle ages, scattered the truth by carrying some leaves of the Word of life, or some manuscript tracts beneath their merchandise, which they engaged those whom they found to be favorably disposed to secure and read.

The following beautiful verses, descriptive of this traffic of the Waldensian pedlars, were published in the London Christian Observer a few years ago:

THE VANDOIS MISSIONARY.

O, lady fair; these silks of mine
Are beautiful and rare—
The richest web of the Indian loom,
Which beauty's self might wear.
And these pearls are pure and mild to behold,
And with radient light they vie.
I have brought them with me a weary way;
Will my gentle lady buy?

And the lady smiled on the worn old man,
Through the dark and clustering curls
Which veiled her brow as he bent to view
His silk and glittering pearls,
And she placed their price in the old man's hand
And lightly turned away;
But she paused at the wanderer's earnest call—
My gentle lady, stay.

O, lady fair, I have yet a gem
Which a purer lustre flings
Than the diamond flash of the jeweled crown
On the lofty brow of kings;
A wonderful pearl of exceeding price,
Whose virtue shall not decay—
Whose light shall be as a spell to thee,
And a blessing on thy way.

The lady glanced at the mirroring steel,
Where her youthful form was seen,
Where her eyes shone clear and her dark locks waved,
Their clasping pearls between.
Bring forth thy pearl of exceeding worth,
Thou traveler gray and old;
And name the price of thy precious gem,
And my pages shall count thy gold.

The cloud went off from the pilgrim's brow,
As a small and meagre book,
Unchased with gold or diamond gem,
From his folding robe he took.
There, lady fair, is the pearl of price—
May it prove as such to thee;
Nay, keep thy gold—I ask it not—
For the Word of God is free.

The hoary traveler went his way,
But the gift he left behind
Hath had its pure and perfect work
On that high-born maiden's mind;
And she hath turned from her pride of sin
To the lowliness of truth,
And given her human heart to God,
In its beautiful hour of youth.

And she hath left the old, gray walls
Where an evil faith hath power,
The courtly knights of her father's train,
And the maidens of her bower;
And she hath gone to the Vandois Vale,
By lordly feet untrod,
Where the poor and needy of earth are rich
In the perfect love of God.

The above extracts and poem are taken from Robert Baird's (D. D., New York) "Protestantism in Italy, and the History, Present State and Prospects of the Waldenses," published by W. Collins, Glasgow and London, in 1847. When we read of the sufferings and persecutions of these followers of Christ and their zeal to maintain the truth and spread it through Europe, their example may well be a lesson to us when we contrast our condition to them.

Letters of Washington.

The following letter will, we trust, be of interest to our readers as giving some insight into the private life of Washington. It is a letter from George Washington to his nephew, George Steptoe Washington, at the period when that young man was just entering college. It not only contains advice that might be profitable to any young man at that time of life, but gives a better idea of the simple and unassuming character of the greatest American and his careful attention to the small affairs of life than could be gotten in any other way.—The Southern Collegian.

MT. VERNON, 23d March, 1789.

DEAR GEORGE:—As it is probable I shall soon be under the necessity of quitting this place and entering once more into the bustle of public life, in conformity to the voice of my country — and the earnest entreaties of my friends — however contrary it is to my own desires or inclinations, I think it incumbent on me as your uncle and friend to give you some advising hints which, if properly attended to, will, I conceive, be found very useful to you in regulating your conduct and giving you respectability, not only at present, but through every period of life. You have now arrived at that age when you must quit the trifling amusements of a boy, and assume the more dignified manners of a man. At this crisis your conduct will attract the notice of those who are about you, and as the first impressions are generally the most lasting, your doings now may mark the leading traits of your character through life. It is, therefore, absolutely necessary, if you mean to make any figure upon the stage of life, that you should take the first steps right. What these steps are and what general line is to be pursued to lay the foundation of an honorable and happy progress, is the part of age and experience to point out. This I shall do as far as in my power with the utmost cheerfulness, and I trust that your good sense will show you the necessity of following it. The first and great object with you at present is to acquire by industry and application such knowledge as your situation enables you to obtain, and as will be useful to you in life. In doing this two other important objects will be gained besides the acquirement of knowledge, namely, a habit of industry and disrelish of that profusion of money and dissipation of time, which are ever attendant upon idleness. I do not mean close application to your studies — that you should never enter into those amusements which are suited to your age and station. They may be made to go hand in hand with each other, and used in their proper seasons will be found to be a mutual assistance to each other. But what amusements are to be taken, and what is the great matter to be attended to? Your own judgment, with the advice of your real friends, who may have an opportunity of a personal intercourse with you, can point out the particular manner in which you may best spend your moments of relaxation much better than I can at a distance. One thing, however, I would strongly impress upon you, namely, that when you have leisure to go into company, it always should be of the best kind that the place you are in will afford. By this means you will be constantly improving your manners and cultivating your mind while you are relaxing from your books, and good company will always be found less expensive than bad. You cannot offer as an excuse that you cannot gain admission there, or that you have not a proper attention paid you in it. This is an apology made only by those whose manners are disgusting, or whose character is exceptional, neither of which I hope will ever be said of you. I cannot enjoin too strongly upon you a due observance of economy and frugality. As you well know yourself the present state of your finances will not admit of any unnecessary expense. The article of clothing is now one of the chief expenses you will incur, and in this I fear you are not so economical as you should be. Decency and cleanliness will always be the first objects in dress of a judicious and sensible man. A conformity to the prevailing fashion in a certain degree is necessary, but it does not follow from thence that a man should always get a new coat or other clothes upon every trifling change in the mode, when perhaps he has two or three very good ones by him. A person who is anxious to be the leader of fashion, or one of the first to follow it, will certainly appear in the eyes of judicious men to have nothing better than a frequent change of clothes to recommend him to notice. I would wish you to appear sufficiently decent to entitle you to admission into any company where you may be. I cannot too strongly enjoin it upon you, and your own knowledge must convince you of the truth of it, that you should be as little expensive in this respect as you properly can. You should always keep some clothes to wear to church or on particular occasions, which should not be worn every day. This can be done without additional expense, for whenever it is necessary to get new clothes, those which have been kept for particular occasions will then come in as every-day clothes, unless they should be of a superior quality to the new. What I have said with respect to clothes will apply perhaps more pointedly to Laurence than to you. As you are much older than he is, and more capable of judging of the propriety of what I have observed, you must pay attention to him in this respect and see that he does not wear his clothes improperly or extravagantly.

Much more might be said to you as a young man upon the necessity of paying a due attention to the moral virtues, but this may perhaps more properly be the subject of a future letter when you are about to enter into the world. If you comply with the advice herein given to pay a diligent attention to your studies and employ your time of relaxation in proper company while you continue at an academy you will not enter those scenes of vice and dissipation which too often present themselves to youth, and particularly in towns. If you are determined to neglect your books and plunge into extravagance and dissipation, nothing that I could now say would prevent it, for you must be employed, and if it is not in pursuit of those things which are profitable, it must be in pursuit of those which are destructive. Your affec. friend and uncle, (Signed) GEO. WASHINGTON.

"The Dangers of a Great City."

In article number II in the New York Observer on "The Dangers of a Great City," by Augustus, we find the following paragraph which we respectfully commend to the consideration of all parents who contemplate rearing their children in a large city:

"Allied to this evil influence of crowded city life is the reckless and disrespectful life of the young. This is by no means confined to the city, but it develops faster and more viciously there. There are thousands of boys and girls, growing up in such a city as New York, who have no respect for parents, no care for the rights of others in the community, and only that regard for law which fears arrest and the prison cell. They seek a liberty which is vicious license, and which ends in vice and licentiousness. They lie, and steal, and fight, and wantonly destroy property, and if they are forced to spend days in school or labor, their nights are spent in recklessness, which they think pleasure. Among such characters, sometimes in school and shop with them, other youth from decent and respectable homes are growing up, and the dangers which confront their moral and religious natures are great and dreadful. I have known boys come from school with words upon their tongues and girls with behavior which grieved and affronted kind and careful parents beyond expression, and the influences of the streets, and the theatres, and public entertainments upon morals in a great city are only evil continually. I have said before, and say again, that where sin abounds grace does, in some quarters, much more abound; that there are Young People's Christian Associations, and Societies of Christian Endeavor, and Sunday-schools, and Guilds, and Bands, and Brotherhoods, and many other helps to virtue and goodness, but the dangers are multiplied and fearful, and must not be underrated."

Recompense.

NELLIE MCGARVICK.

A few there are so greatly blessed
That they, through speech or song, can find Expression meet for each emotion
Of joy or grief that fills the breast;
And, sailing on o'er life's great ocean,
Their words, or words and song combined,
Win ready love from all mankind.

Others there are whose souls have long
Thrilled to rare joys, with great griefs striven,
Who, powerless to give expression
In fair, clear speech or faultless song,
Lose human love by self-repression:
But to such souls as these 'tis given
To win the gracious love of heaven.

Facts About Pearls.

Although pearls, next to diamonds, rank highest in the estimation of most gem-loving women, there are but comparatively few persons who know much about them. At least 90 per cent. of those fortunate enough to possess good pearls believe them to be hollow crystal globes, breaking with the least grip of the fingers; but it is not so, for pearls are as hard as a piece of granite, and it is an impossibility to break them with the teeth. The reason of this is that they are formed like an onion, skin upon skin, so that when one pearl is larger than another the difference in the size is counted by how many more skins cover the larger gem. These skins, it may be said, are so minute that as many as thirty cover a gem with a depth of an eighth of an inch.

As many people are aware, when a good pearl has been in constant use for many yeary—in a ring, for instance—the incessant usage discolors the gem, and it becomes a dirty yellow that is not prepossessing; but it need not remain so, for nearly every large firm of ring-makers employ one or more pearl "peelers," whose livelihood is gained by taking outer skins off discolored pearls and making them to all appearance quite new, the fresh surface having all the lustrousness of a pearl just probed out of an oyster.

The process is an expensive one, for it involves many hours of careful workmanship, the slightest chip perhaps necessitating the removal of another skin, and lessening the value of the gem; and it is only large pearls of really good value that are ever brought to be "peeled," as the heavy amount charged would be more than purchasing a new pearl, unless the gem is really valuable, and one will not be affected by the removal from off its surface of a two-hundredth part of an inch. — The Catholic News.

Typographical Errors.

The intelligent compositor is something of a humorist, and not always an unconscious humorist, either. Some of his greatest feats have occurred in Philadelphia, where the great editors write a very execrably bad manuscript. In one case a correspondent, who was describing a tarring and feathering scene, at which he was present only in a professional capacity, was made to say "getting the feathers ready for us," instead of "ready for use." The same newspaper office had a printer who turned the expression "from alpha to omega" into "from apples to oranges," and coveyed the impression that somebody had set the Delaware River on fire by calling ferry boats "fiery hosts."

A cooking school called the "New Century" was cruelly made to appear as the "New Cemetery," and doubtless the same pessimistic typo changed the "Masque of Pandora" into the "Morgue of Pandora." A diver who had found two old bells in the Delaware went before the public as a "driver" who had found "two old bills." The Scripture allusion to the leaven that "leavened the whole lump" was perverted into the startling agricultural announcement that the leaven had "leavened the whole turnip."

A foreign editor who wrote that the British lion was "shaking his mane" was edified the next morning with the announcement on his authority that the national animal was "skating in Maine." A more natural error was that which called "a member of the legislature," a "member of the liquorstore."

One of the Philadelphia morning papers, which formely gave close attention to marine news, informed its readers on one occasion that the bark "Betsy Jane" had arrived at Honolulu "with an oil-well on board." Investigation proved that there was nothing in the report except "all well on board." An old-time inn named the "Star and Garter Hotel" was once re-christened by a printer as the "Shoe and Gaiter Hotel." A foreign dispatch about the war between Russia and Turkey contained an allusion to transports convoyed by gunboats, which was turned into the novel announcement that the transports were "conveyed by goats."—Harper's Round Table.

Thank God.

Thank God for joy!
For glad, sweet thoughts that flood the soul and spring,
Larklike, into the sky to soar and sing;
For kindly airs that woo to bud and flower,
Thy dormant being, and awake new power
With each new morn; new purposes that bring
To heart and soul their full and just employ.
Thank God for joy!

And oh, thank him for pain!
That shuts thee in in silence! wait and know
The rain that breaks the blossom, and lays low
The fair green stalk, doth nourish e'en in grief
The being's root, of future bud and leaf
The guaranty; so shalt thou surely grow
To fairer heights; to nobler powers attain.
Thank God for pain!

A Local Romance.

[The following article was clipped from a Des Moines, Iowa, paper, sent to us and vouched for by the hero of the story. It is sufficiently romantic for a place in this department of our paper.—EDITOR.]

A few people in East Des Moines and Highland Park have knowledge of the engagement of Rev. T. W. McDonald, formerly pastor of the Highland Park Christian church, but now located at Jefferson, Iowa, and Miss Julia Dicks, living three miles north of Capital Park, and are now quietly relating a pretty little romance in connection with the courtship which will be consummated by marriage in a few weeks. Evangelist James Small figures prominently in the story. It happened this way: While Rev. Small was yet pastor of the East Side Christian Church he one day, in company with a few of the sportsmen of the East Side, quipped himself to capture some of the small game to be found in the woods to the north and east of Des Moines. After a few hours of more or less successful hunting he became separated from the others and was playing havoc with a flock of quail which he had discovered when a farmer made his appearance and ordered him to get off his preserves in short order. The farmer was mad. He did not know who the trespasser was and didn't care. His language was more emphatic than polite. Rev. Small attempted to apologize, but the land owner would not hear him. The divine managed at last to say that he was not aware that his attempt to bag a little game would be objected to by any one and that he had no desire to trespass. As he turned to go he informed the irate owner that he was the pastor of the East Side Christian Church and would gladly make good any damage that had been done. When the identity of the intruder was made known to the farmer his attitude toward the minister underwent a change. He explained that it was the practice of hunters from the city to visit his farm and to shoot so badly that his cattle and other animals suffered more than did the game. The conversation was continued, growing more friendly all the while, and ended in Mr. Small extending to the farmer a cordial invitation to attend the series of meetings he was then holding. The pastor was not a little surprised to have the offer accepted, and a few evenings later the farmer and his family put in an appearance at the East Side Christian Church. The result was that in a few weeks Rev. Small had the pleasure of receiving the daughter of the farmer into the church. Rev. Small made many visits to the farm from which he had been peremptorily ordered and a fast friendship grew up between the Small and Dicks families. This is chapter No. 1. Rev. T. W. McDonald was sometime ago the popular pastor of the Highland Park Christian Church. Although he had reached the age when pastors are supposed to take unto themselves a helpmate, Rev. McDonald had for some reason remained single. He was a close friend of Rev. Small, and one day the latter asked him why he did not get married. He smilingly replied that he had not yet met the young lady whom he thought would fill the bill, and asked Rev. Small if he knew of one that he could especially recommend. Rev. Small is always prepared to do good in the world and never allows an opportunity to pass. "Come with me to-day," he said in a bantering manner, "and I will introduce you to a young lady so fair, so good and so engaging that you will shortly discover that your life thus far has been a dismal failure." The offer was accepted and that day noon found the Dicks family entertaining Rev. Small and his friend at dinner in their beautiful country home. What had been started partly as a joke soon grew into something more serious, for a warm attachment sprang up between the young minister and the farmer's handsome daughter, and that Rev. Small's predictions are to be literally fulfilled is proved by the announcement that the couple are to be married on the 9th of August. And what is still better, Rev. Small has been asked and has consented to perform the ceremony, although to do so he will be required to leave his church work in a far distant town and come to Des Moines.

Cigarettes and Crime.

The relation of the cigarette to crime was the subject of some startling statistics presented before the National Conference of Charities and Corrections at Cincinnati. Of the boys in the Illinois State Reformatory, between the ages of ten and fifteen, ninety-two per cent. were confirmed cigarette smokers, and eighty-five per cent. so addicted to the habit, at the time of their conviction, as to be termed "cigarette fiends" by the court.

The superintendent who compiled these figures asserts that the cigarette works tenfold more injury to the boy under fifteen than do intoxicating liquors, and more than any other one factor starts him on the road to criminal life.

While it is true that not every cigarette fiend becomes a criminal, the fact remains that the habit is acquired through evil associations; it involves demoralizing deception on the part of the boy at home; and by enfeebling health and will makes the lad an easy prey to temptation.

Professor De Motte, of Bryn Mawr, visiting a tobacco house in Brazil, noticed a black fluid trickling slowly into the vat of tobacco about to be made into cigarettes. Upon asking what it was he was told, "Rum, molasses and opium; to give spice to the cigarette." These are specific facts, which admit of no controversy. Deductions thereupon can be easily made by every reader.—The Youth's Companion.

Saturday Talk Series of Biographical Sketches And Short Stories for Children

BY LAURA GEROULD CRAIG.

PUBLISHED IN SIX VOLUMES

Profusely Illustrated

Vol. I.	Little Presidents.
Vol. II.	Little Kings.
Vol. III.	Little Queens.
Vol. IV.	Little Orators.
Vol. V.	Little Generals.
Vol. VI.	Little Statesmen.

The author thoroughly understands the mental wants of the child, and in these volumes these wants are happily met. The biographical sketches of the great men of the world, while they were growing into greatness, are always fascinating to the children.

These stories are presented in such an attractive manner that the mind of the child will retain them all through life. The little folks that will carefully read these stories will be in possession of many of the incidents in the lives of a large number of the greatmen and women who have blessed the world with their lives. These little volumes should be placed in the homes of this country to bless children. The little ones of the family should know the facts given in this series of biographical stories, and thus early in life they can be taught that the "Lives of great men all remind us we can make our lives sublime."

THE SON OF GIDEON.

In Six Chapters—II.

"Stay!" cried Zebul, drawing his bow, and pointing his arrow at Caleb's breast. "Why do you flee from Abimelech?"

"Sanctuary!" panted Claleb. "Stay me not!"

There were six cities of refuge in Palestine, and if a person could escape to one of these, he could not be harmed, even if he had killed a man by accident. Ophrah was not a city of refuge, but Shechem, the native city of Zebul, was such a place. Caleb hoped that in the excitement of the moment, the trained soldier would forget this fact. Accordiningly, he ran on, paying no regard to the drawn bow.

Now when Zebul heard the familiar cry, "Sanctuary!" which was often heard at the gates of Shechem, he forgot for a moment that the law did not exist in this distant town. Still holding the string of the bow taut, he suffered Caleb to pass through the gate. At the same time one of his soldiers cried:

"This is no city of refuge!"

"True!" cried Zebul, as if awakened from a dream. "Stop him! Shoot him down!"

"Kill him not!" cried Abimelech, thundering up to the gate. "I must question him concerning his father, Tola."

"Do not shoot!" ordered Zebul, at this command from his superior. By this time all the riders had drawn up before the gate.

"But where is the boy?" demanded Abimelech.

"Why, he is gone, in truth," said Zebul. "You told us not to kill him."

"I thought you had him safe!" stormed Abimelech. "Did you let him walk through your ranks, as if he had been a breath of air that could not be laid hold on?"

"Not so," returned Zebul. "He passed as a hare. The only way to stop a hare is to lay him on his back. When I wish to stop a running man I kill him. When you said, 'Kill him not,' I thought you did not want the lad."

Abimelech's eyes blazed with fury. "He will warn the sons of Gideon. Haste to the house. Let not one of my brothers escape. But take them alive. Forward!" The troop galloped down the stone street, while the foot soldiers ran behind them.

In the meantime Caleb had reached the street upon which the great house of Gideon stood. He had almost come to the door when he heard the soldiers advancing. They were at the turning of the corner. With an exclamation of despair the boy fled down a side passage, and came out upon another square. It was a bare possibility that Jotham, the youngest, and his friend, was not in the house of his brothers, for Jotham often passed the night at the home of his old nurse.

As Caleb fled to this small dwelling he was terrified by the sudden screams of alarm that rang upon the night air. The city began to stir. Doors were cautiously opened. Heads were thrust out of windows. Shadowy forms appeared at the parapets of the flat roofs, where the Jews spent the night in warm weather. Now he had reached the door. He beat upon it frantically with his fist, nor did he pause till it was opened.

"Who are you?" demanded a boy's voice from the darkness of the room. "Why do you disturb us?"

"Jotham! Thanks to the God of Israel! Come forth—there is not a moment to linger. All your house is doomed to destruction. This night all the sons of Gideon are to be slain, save the one who leads the infamous conspiracy."

"Is it you, Caleb? Then I know you speak the truth, though what you say is very strange. It must be my half-brother."

"Yes, Abimelech has planned all. But come!"

"A moment. While we talk I finish dressing. Now. But whither shall we go? And I cannot leave my dear nurse to their vengeance."

"Nay, she is not in danger. Abimelech only seeks the lives of his kindred. We go to Thebez. There my father and sister await us."

"Thebez!" repeated Jotham, as he left the house, and they crept cautiously down the street. "Why, that is but half a mile from Shechem, the home of Abimelech's mother."

"True. Hence he will not think of looking for you there. Man overlooks the chance that is under his nose, in trying to see one that is beyond his vision."

The night was becoming horrible with dreadful screams. "O, my dear brothers!" exclaimed Jotham, clasping his hands—"they have always been kind to me, they have shared with me the hunt—we went together to Jerusalem to the feasts. All except Abimelech, who worships the idol of Baal. To think that I can do nothing for them—"

"But you can still do something for yourself!" cried Caleb. "If you stand thus in the street, you are lost."

"I care not!" said Jotham. "Since all of them are to be murdered, let me die also. For why should I, the youngest, the least worthy, escape?"

"Nay," returned Caleb, "and is all my night's journey to go for nothing? And will you have me murdered as well? For if they capture you, I shall be by your side."

"It is true. I will do all you say."

"Then cease thinking of your brothers, and let your legs run a race with each other!"

The city was now in an uproar. All the gates had been thrown open. Men with torches ran here and there, the screams of women mingling with the clanging of spears against shields. Caleb, leading the way, chose a different gate from the one he entered. As these two left the city walls, they saw a great throng rushing toward a stone altar built to Baal. They were soldiers carrying the brothers of Jotham. Abimelech stood beside the altar, surrounded by flaming torches, while behind him was ranked his bodyguard of Shechem. Abimelech held in his mighty hand a sword crimson with blood. As the crowd passed up to him one of his brothers, the arms bound behind the helpless form, the ferocious man siezed the victim, held the head down upon the altar, and with one stroke of the blade, severed it from the body. Then another son of Gideon was pushed forward to meet a similar fate. Then a third. Jotham stared for a moment upon the fearful scene, with fixed eyes, then fell upon the earth at the feet of Caleb, insensible from horror and grief.

Caleb was himself almost overcome by the scene, but the fainting of Jotham caused him to put forth all his efforts for self-control. He looked wildly about him. Behind was the city; in front, the idol of Baal. As yet no one had discovered them, but occasionally an excited form sped by, sword in hand. Every instant they were in danger of discovery. The smooth, level plain offered no hiding-places. One thing was to their advantage. The moon had set.

Caleb threw himself upon his knees and began to rub Jotham's limbs, hoping to revive him. At last a sigh burst from Jotham's lips. At the same time Abimelech uttered a furious shout. Caleb could not hear his words, but they were taken up by the throng, and the cry came nearer. "Jotham has escaped! Twenty pieces of silver for the youngest son of Gideon, dead or alive!"

A Kentucky Prodigy.

Sallie Marvine Demaree is a little miss of Shelbyville, Ky., who at the age of four years found herself able to read and enjoy the productions of our best writers. Before she was nine years old she had read all of Dickens' novels, as well as Scott, Thackeray, Bulwer, Lytton, George Eliot, and the two works of Jane Porter, to say nothing of current literature as found in the best newspapers and magazines She says those that impressed her mos were "David Copperfield," "Oliver Twist,' "Daniel Deronda," "Ivanhoe," and "The Monastery." The only work of Thackeray she likes is "Vanity Fair." Of the latter-day American writers she is very fond of Marion Crawford, Frank R. Stockton, and Thomas Nelson Page. James Lane Allen is her favorite Kentucky writer. She says that she enjoys with all her mind and soul a good play, good music and good books. Her friends predict that she will become a literary star of the first magnitude. She is now a student at that famous school, Science Hill, at Shelbyville, Ky., made famous by the fifty years or more of service of that consecrated teacher, Mrs. Julia A. Tevis.—Leslie's Weekly.

THE VALLEY OF DEATH.*

It will be remembered that the second part of Ezekiel's ministry in the province of Babylon was the reviving of Israel's hopes in its future and the kindling of a new enthusiasm for the return to Jerusalem. So disastrous had been the effect of the news that Jerusalem had fallen in 586 B. C. that when the shock of its reception among the exiles at Tel-Abib on the Chebar had passed away, Ezekiel found that the people who were so confident hitherto of an immediate return to Jerusalem were now absolutely despondent, and set about the work of adjusting themselves to Babylonian conditions to such an extent that the home country and the obligations of their religion were in danger of being absolutely lost sight of. It was his business to arouse them from this despairing indifference with the promise of certain return to their homeland.

In carrying out this program, Ezekiel assured them that Judah was to be purged of its foreign and hostile inhabitants, especially the Edomites, who had gloried in the downfall of Zion, and that such prosperity would return to the country as would astonish those who beheld. But the central point in this series of encouragements was that Israel herself would return from Babylonia to Judah. Of course, the word "Israel" as used by the prophets signifies, not the northern tribes, which had lost their personality, both by reason of the transportation of many of their people to the far east, and also by the admixture of foreign elements in the homeland; but the reference is to the surviving tribe of Judah, which now is recognized as inheriting all the traditions and obligations of the united nation, so that even the words, "Ephraim" and "Israel" as applied to the Jews have their broader significance. The prophets always believed in the restoration of the nation to its ideal unity, and frequently speak of the Twelve Tribes as united and prosperous in the future, as is the case of Ezekiel's great reconstruction of the camp of Israel, which is recorded in chapter 40.

But the serious problem of Ezekiel's ministry was to convince these scattered exiles that there was a possibility of national restoration. All references to this hope fell at first upon deaf ears. They had been in Babylon long enough to understand the policy of the Eastern monarchs towards the conquered. That policy had scattered and wasted nations without number, so that they had absolutely lost their identity. Was Judah to prove an exception to this rule? Already the people were scattered in little groups over widely stretched territory, so that it seemed impossible to hold communication one with another outside these little bands or cantonments. They were saying to each other: "Our bones are dried up, and our hope is lost" (verse 11). It was to such a state of mind that the great vision of this lesson was addressed.

The question as to whether Ezekiel's visions were actual occurrences in his own experience, or whether it was his method to describe to his countrymen as visions those subjective pictures which arose in his mind as a great artist studying deeply the problems of his nation and his period, has been repeatedly discussed. Be that as it may, the pictorial, figurative and illustrative, not to say apocalyptic elements in Ezekiel far exceed those of any previous prophet and approach far on the way towards that masterful use of imagery and apocalyptic machinery which appears in the book of Daniel.

In the lesson the prophet is described as going forth into the valley or plain which stretched beyond Tel-Abib and there seeing masses of dry bones covering the whole face of the ground. They were not bodies recently fallen, in which there might still be breath or the possibility of resuscitation. They were no longer even joined to one another, but scattered, bleached and hopeless, so far as human forms could be. To the divine question as to whether they could live again the prophet, impelled by every consideration to reply, "No," and still hindered from this answer by the very fact that the question implied possibility, could only say, "Thou knowest." The command came to him to prophesy over these same dry bones. It will be recalled that in the Scriptures the word "prophesy" means much more than "predict." It refers usually to that function of preaching, of proclaiming the divine truth, which was the first business of every prophet. It was not a mere prediction that these bones would live that the prophet was to utter, but it was an actual word of urgency to them that they should live. It was the business of the prophet to preach to these same scattered fragments and encourage them with the thought that they were to live again. Thus commanded, he preached; and suddenly there was a noise of rushing fragments, a shock as of an earthquake, and the bones came together, each in its place, while flesh and sinews covered these bony forms and the likenesses of men stood forth, but still inanimate. Once more the divine command came to prophesy—to preach, to exhort. The work was half done, but still the life was not there. So the wind, which is also spirit in the meaning of the Hebrew, was invoked, and presently life came into these forms and a great host of living men was the result.

Then came the application. There was no value in the figure apart from the actual life of the people. They were constantly saying that their condition was just that of dry bones. They had no hope. They were broken and ruined fragments. It was the business of the prophet to encourage them with the assurance that there was yet hope of their return to national life and power. Here the figure changes and the actual promise is made, not that bones scattered on the plain will be reclothed, refleshed and reanimated, but that those buried in their graves shall come forth to new life. Of course, these promises move entirely in the realm of national affairs. The prophet had no thought that the Israelites, the Jews who died in Babylon, would be restored to life. He thought only of the fact that the nation as such, now seemingly hopeless in its distress and weakness, would be revived and return to its homeland. The hope of a personal immortality and resurrection finds but scanty foothold until late in the Old Testament period, where it comes out with something like clearness. Here it is not the thought that occupies the prophet's mind. He is thinking alone of the people who were to live again in a restored national life and in the persons of their descendants. That kind of immortality was the only one which concerned the Hebrew of this and earlier periods. It was enough for him that he lived a long life with God and continued to live in his children after his own personal life had ceased to be.

The figure of the lesson, however, is applicable in many ways to the experiences of to-day. It is possible, by the power of the preached gospel, to revive a life long useless and seemingly extinct. This is the marvelous miracle which is wrought in thousands of human experiences where there seemed no longer hope of any moral or spiritual life. It is true also of nations. They come to their regeneration, their resurrection. Nations are born in a day by the power of missionary work. These are the living wonders of our gospel, as great, as miraculous as would have been the resuscitation of dry bones on the plain of the Chebar twenty-five centuries ago.

TOPIC FOR AUGUST 13.

A SERVICE OF PROMISES.

(John 14:1-14.)

There are seven promises in these fourteen verses. They are—

1. The House of Mansions. Many in this world are homeless. Many who have so-called homes do not have real homes. Such cannot but look forward, if they are Christians, to a future consolation. Indeed, all of us, out of the strife, sorrow, temptation of the Now are involuntarily or voluntarily looking forward to peace in the Then. Whether we care for the good old millennial, literal sermon or not we look forward. Jesus, may we ever look to thee! Something thou hast reserved for us and it will console!

2. The Lord's Return. "I will come again," he said. How grieved they were! So have we often lost him for a time. But if we grieve for him he will return. Few of us, Christians at least, can lose him forever or lose him for long, if we desire his return. And certain it is that the actual, literal reunion with his people will come. It cannot be otherwise.

3. The Lord's Reception of Us. "I will receive you unto myself."

"Love for all, and can it be?
Can I hope it is for me?
* * * * * *
See, my Father waiting stands;
See, he reaches out his hands.
God is love, I know, I see;
Love for me, yes, even me!"

Never was man so sinful, so doubting, so poor and worthless in his own or the world's eyes but he can be received if he wishes to be—received by the Lord Jesus. Take us, Lord; we give thee ourselves; receive us, use us, keep us forever by thee.

4. Companionship with Jesus. "Where I am, there ye may be also," No man need lack for his presence who seeks for it. He has promised to be with us even to the end of the world. At some future time he'll be with us? No, to-day, if ye will. Even so, come, Lord Jesus, Spirit of the Christ, mind of the Master, be in us and abide.

5. The Way to the Father. "No one cometh unto the Father but by me. I am the way." There is no other way, poor wanderers that we are, save through that Person. Theologically, he solves our problems. Ethically, thinking on him cleanses our lives. Spiritually, he lifts our hearts up in worship. In no way can the life be so fully lived as in him. Jesus, teach us to walk with thee all the way to our glad Emmaus of deliverance.

6. The Doing of the Works. "Greater works than these shall he do." That is a large promise to believe, and yet it is only by believing that it can be fulfilled. It is the will to do that shall understand, and how it has been fulfilled already in the works that have been done in his name! Greater works than his short ministry saw. Greater deeds on Pentecost, greater journeys in Africa in the nineteenth century.

7. The hearing of Prayers. Is prayer heard? is the common question. Real prayers always are heard. Whatever a chastened soul does ask for it never has failed to receive. Let us but learn to pray aright. Lord, teach us how to pray!

These promises of Jesus were not made to the apostles alone. They are made to us. Not so much that they are speaking directly to us as that their very character makes them universal. Because they are such promises they are ours.

In the Days of Jehu, by J. B. Ellis, is a well-written and intensely interesting Bible narrative. The lesson taught is that idolatry is ruin and the worship of God is life and peace. 189 pages. Cloth, 75 cents. Christian Publishing Co.

THE C. E. READING COURSES.

Bible Courses for the Coming Year.

By H. L. Willett, Director.

The interest in the study of the Bible is on the increase. Among all Christian people witness to this fact is borne by the larger emphasis Bible study is receiving at the hands of the denominations in the work of young people's organizations. It is also true that at public gatherings for religious purposes the study of the Bible is coming to be an accepted and expected feature. The multitude of helps placed at the disposal of the student in these days renders it easy to obtain a fair knowledge of the Scriptures. One of the prime purposes of the Bethany C. E. Reading Courses from the start has been to meet and foster these demands for Bible study, and the work of the readers in our Bible Course has been marked by care and application, as the examination papers fully prove. It is worth noting also that the number of readers who make report of their work by the examination method is increasing. This has been a matter of no small satisfaction to the directors during the past year.

The work for the coming year offers a real opportunity for careful Bible study and the gathering of results that will be of the greatest value to our readers. The third-year readers will begin October 1st, taking up the study of Prophecy, that interesting theme which has to do with the foreshadowings of the Christ, and which is also the explanation of that unique national life exhibited in the history of Israel and Judah. The basis of this course will be a handbook on the Prophets of Israel, which will contain a summary of the leading features of prophetic work and literature, together with a rapid survey of the history of prophecy. This history is presented in the records of these men of God, whose lives are set forth in the pages of the Old Testament. Such a year of study ought to place one in possession of the most valuable portions of the Old Testament, and will be certain to throw light on every phase of biblical study.

Those readers who did not begin until last year will start this autumn with the second year's work, that on the life of Christ. This plan will fall in admirably with the International Lesson Series for 1900, which follows the life of Christ as it appears in all four Gospels. There is no theme of such importance as this, and it matters not how often one recurs to it, there is always abundance of new and interesting material, to say nothing of that vast treasury of spiritual power which is opened freely to all who enter through the gates of such a line of study.

Those who begin the Bethany Reading Courses for the first time this year will, of course, have the option of taking the first year's work, which is preferable, or of starting with either the second or third year's work. It is, however, natural to take the work in the order in which it is projected. The first year consists of a review of the entire Bible, based on the handbook of Bible study, and is intended to give readers a general conception of the character and purpose of the Scriptures.

These lessons, it need not be said, do not contemplate merely a reading of the handbook, but rather a careful examination, day by day, of the prescribed sections of the Bible, under the guidance both of the handbook and of the directions published quarterly in the Bulletin. It is quite possible for any person to merely purchase the handbooks and read them, but this process will result in only a small fraction of that knowledge which comes from the careful use of the whole plan of work as outlined in these courses.

AUGUST MAGAZINES.

Demorest's Family Magazine for August catches the eye of the popular magazine reader at once with its strikingly attractive table of contents. It seems to name just the things about which you want to read.

The Patent Record, published at Baltimore, Md., is an up-to-date scientific journal. The illustrations are the finest of the art. The double page illustration of Dewey's farewell to Manila is full of animation and life. The information of the newest inventions and on scientific problems is full and authentic. The inventor or mechanical student who reads this journal will not get behind the times on the scientific news of the day.

The Ledger Monthly for August has on its cover a picture in colors of a rollicking urchin in a blue bathing suit, up to his waist in gentle surf, with a grin of enjoyment on his face which radiates the fun of the situation. It is entitled "Ecstasy," suggesting the cool sea and the freedom of a loose bathing suit for the sultry days of August. This number of the Ledger Monthly has a delightful atmosphere of summer recreation.

"Fortune's Vassals," by Sarah Barnwell Elliott, the complete novel in Lippincott's New Magazine for August, is probably the strongest novel to date from a pen which has already producad "The Durket Sperritt" and "An Incident and Other Happenings." In conception it is original, and in execution it is romantic and realistic. The life is that of to-day in a small American town anywhere you please. The controlling motives are the old—yet ever new—ones of our common nature.

The Treasury of Religious Thought for August, 1899, though a vacation number, shows perhaps more than the usual number of attractive articles and sermons. The leading preacher, whose portrait and church are displayed, is Rev. Sydney Herbert Cox, pastor of the Lee Avenue Congregational Church, Brooklyn, known under the pastorate of Edward Eggleston as the "Church of the Christian Endeavor." Mr. Cox is a young man, but has already had a somewhat remarkable history in Australia and in this country. His sermon shows something of his winning and successful quality.

In a recent discussion of the monetary question the query, "Is gold more stable than silver?" has played an important role. In the July number of the Annals of the American Academy of Political and Social Science, Dr. E. S. Mead has an authoritative discussion of this important quesion. His treatment is a unique and masterly analysis of the statistics of prices. Other articles of interest are written by Professor Zorn, of Konigsberg, on "The Constitutional Position of the German Emperor," by Dr. W. J. Branson on the "Nominating System in Philadelphia" and by Mr. C. E. Prevey on the "Economic Function of Charity Organization." Philadelphia. $1.00.

Professor Jean du Buy closes his series of papers on "The Teachings of Jesus" in the August number of the Coming Age by a discussion entitled "The Kingdom of God." Dr. James Hedley, the well-known lecturer, treats of the subject, "How Shall the Church Triumph," from the standpoint of the orthodox Christian. J. H. Garrison, editor of the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST, writes on "Why I Am a Disciple." Rev. Edward Everett Hale contrasts the Boston of 1828 with the Boston of to-day. He is of the opinion that there has been a decided advance in a religious way during the past three generations. Among other contributors to this number are James A. Herne, Professor A. E. Dolbear, Charles Malloy, Lillian Whiting and Nina K. Darlington. The latter discusses "Kindergarten Music Building" in a very suggestive conversation.

The present Fiction Number (August) is remarkable for its color printing, its brilliant pictures by young artists and the high excellence of the short stories. In addition to its fiction this number also contains the conclusion of Senator Hoar's article on Daniel Webster; more letters written by Stevenson from Bournemouth, many of them to William Archer, the dramatic critic; a short paper on "Japanese Flower Arrangement," by Theodore Wores, illustrated from paintings by Mr. Wores; poems by E. S. Martin and J. Russell Taylor; also a brief article by the eminent painter, John La Farge.

The August special summer number of the Pall Mall Magazine is probably one of the handsomest and most interesting numbers of this magazine yet issued. Abounding in beautiful illustrations and having for its contributors many of the foremost writers of the day, it cannot but appeal strongly to the reader of taste and refinement. The frontispiece to the August number is after a drawing by G. Denholm Armour, entitled "The Boar Hunt," and the other illustrations in the number are remarkably rich and include an exquisite series, from special photographs, of Shelborne, the home of Gilbert White.

While the Atlantic Monthly is especially attractive as a fiction number, of which Miss Johnson's "To Have and to Hold" easily takes the lead, there are other articles for the student of nature, of the social orders and of history. Of these we mention in particular "The Yosemite National Park," by John Muir; "The Tenant." by Jacob A. Riis;" "The Vitality of Lord Macauley," by H. D. Ledgwick, Jr.; "In the Block-up of China and our Interest in it;" "The Indian Question," by Henry L. Dawes; "The Prospects of Universal Peace," by W. Cunningham, and other equally interesting themes and writers.

The famous lighthouse on Minot's Ledge, off Cohasset, Mass., is the subject of the frontispiece of the August St. Nicholas, and of a brief description and historical sketch by Gustave Kobbe. In "Colored Suns," Dorothy Leonard tells of other suns than ours—blue suns and red ones and green ones—that bathe their planets in lights that would make a visiting stranger from this world feel very strange indeed. The serials jog along interestingly—Mrs. Barr's "Trinity Bells," Miss Wells' "Story of Betty" and Mrs. Richards' "Quicksilver Sue;" and there is a "full line" of pretty or amusing verses, and graceful or comical pictures, including Gelett Burgess' "Goops."

The Century for August is a midsummer and travel number. "The Present Situation in Cuba" is graphically stated in a brief article by Major-Gen. Wood. Jacob Riis writes of "Feast Days in Little Italy." John Burroughs gives a fascinating glimpse of the wild life about his slab-sided cabin near the Hudson River at West Park. In "The River of Tea," Miss E. R. Scidmore writes of the Yangtszekiang, and especially of the city of Hankow. In a learned paper on "The Churches of Auvergne" Mrs. Van Renselaer introduces effectively, in her illustrated paper describing "The Churches of Auvergne," the picturesque episode of Peter the Hermit's preaching of the first crusade; and the story of the second continues its course in Mr. Crawford's romance, "Via Crucis." "Old, unhappy, far-off days and battles long ago" are the theme of Prof. Wheeler's "Alexander in India," with its graphic account of the great and decisive victory that marked the conqueror's crossing of the River Hydaspes. There are articles of a milder character, but not without interest and intellectual stimulus.

Hamlin Garland, Anthony Hope, John Kendrick Bangs, Harold Richard Vynne, Anna Robeson Brown, "Josiah Allen's Wife," Clara Morris, Kate Whiting Patch and Anna Farquhar are among the half-score of writers of fiction who contribute stories to the August Ladies' Home Journal. The midsummer fiction number of the Journal is in many respects a notable magazine. It has brought together in a single issue some of the most popular story-writers, and the most capable black-and-white artists to illustrate their work. Fiction, of course, predominates, but there is an abundance of timely, practical articles, especially appealing to home and family interests and tending to lighten and brighten women's work.

Summer tourists in search of reading should not overlook the August Woman's Home Companion, with its wealth of fiction, attractive illustrations and wide range of reading matter. The initial story, by Robert C. V. Meyers, certainly is unique, telling how an English lord had his opinion of the American girl revolutionized seeing her on her native heath; another story, "An American Specimen," by Elizabeth Rolf, presents the reverse of the shield, being the romance of a typical American girl abroad. There are, besides, a dozen ether attractive stories, both short and long, with the continuation of Julia Magruder's serial, "A Sunny Southerner," which interweaves into a charming love story a momentous social problem in a way that has never before been presented in fiction.

Some important articles appear in the Missionary Review of the World for August. Among these is one by Dr. Pierson, the editor-in-chief, on "The World's Missionary Conference of 1900," which contains some valuable hints for all interested in this great meeting as to how to make the best use of the opportunities and responsibilities. An unusually graphic and powerful history of "John Huss, the Preacher of Prague," is contributed by Rev. Geo. H. Giddins, of London. Robert E. Spear gives "A Roman Catholic View of China and Missions in China," in a manner which many will doubtless think overcharitable, but which gives almost the only fair presentation of the subject which has appeared in modern journals. Over against this is the story of "Evangelical Missions in Spain," which pictures Romanism at home.

Frank Leslie's Popular Monthly for August is brilliant and entertaining in its literary contents, and sumptuous pictorially, as may be judged from the fact that among its writers are included W. D. Howells, Ruth McEnery Stuart, Joel Chandler Harris, Egerton Castle, Van Tassel Sutphen, Edgar Fawcett, Etta W. Pierce, C. F. Carter, Theodosia Pickering Garrison, Perriton Maxwell, Larkin G. Mead, Eben E. Rexford and R. K. Munkittrick; these illustrated by such well-known artists as Albert B. Wenzell, Howard Chandler Christie, F. Luis Mora, W. Granville Smith. F. Hopkinson Smith, Hugh M. Eaton, Clifford Carleton, Charles Grunwald, H. C. Edwards, Frank Adams and George R. Brill. Moreover, the single article upon "Weddings in Art" is illustrated with sixteen beautiful reproductions of paintings by celebrated European and American masters, including Teniers, Erdmann, Vautier, Riefsthal, Hovenden, Moran, Turner, Leighton, Mosier and Luke Fildes.

EARL.

We are overwhelmed with sorrow by the death of our beloved son, Percy, but "we sorrow not as those who have no hope." He lived "a life of faith on the Son of God." "For him to live was Christ, and to die was gain." Ours the loss, his the gain; ours the sorrow, his the joy. His happy and redeemed spirit is now with the Savior he loved so well while here. This is our consolation and comfort. Percy Howard Coop Earl was born in Southampton, England, May 17, 1884 and "fell asleep in Jesus" on Lord's day, July 9th, 1899, at Macatawa Park, Mich. He was a dutiful, loving and faithful child, a noble, pure and genial companion—a favorite of old and young. We cannot understand God's dealings with us in nipping a bud of so much promise and cutting short a life so full of hope, but we humbly and trustfully say, "Thy will, O Father, not ours, be done." "The Lord hath given, the Lord hath taken away, blessed be the name of the Lord."

"Dearest Percy thou has left us,
And thy loss we deeply feel,
But 'tis God who hath bereft us;
He will all our sorrows heal."

H. S. E.

[We are sure our readers will share our brother's sorrow with him, and the more so that his wife now lies very ill with the same disease that carried away the son.—EDITOR.]

LINVILLE.

Bro. W. D. Linville fell asleep in Jesus at his home in Benton County, the 19th of July, in his 81st year. He was an earnest, faithful Christian and died in the triumphs of faith. He was the father of James Allen Linville, of Kansas City, Kan., Thos. F., of Sedalia, and Mrs. Sam Berry, of Ionia. Funeral service by the writer. G. L. BUSH.

Windsor, Mo., July 20, 1899.

MABRY.

Randolph P. Mabry was born April 4, 1835, in Murry County, Tenn., died July 1, 1899, at Big Flat, Ark. He moved to this state with his father at the age of 15 years and had been a member of the Church of Christ at this place for the last 30 years and was one of the most earnest and consistent Christians I ever knew. He always was found at his post—was prompt in his attendance upon the Sunday-school, prayer-meetings and all other church worship. He believed and insisted upon carrying out the practical points as well as theoretical ones of the church. He was loved and esteemed by all who knew him and his life was that of a true Christian indeed. He leaves a heart-broken wife and four grown children.

RICHARDSON.

Louida M., wife of Ernest L. Richardson and daughter of W. W. and Lottie M. Pew, died at our home in Baker City, Oregon, July 16, 1899. A great though patient sufferer, death was to her a sweet release. Having entered the Christian life in her fifteenth year, she rejoiced in the precious promise of the gospel and died in the blessed assurance of that hope which is an anchor to the soul. While we sorrow her departure and the sudden cutting off of her young life, we are comforted by the word of him who is the God of all comfort.

WOODS.

On Monday, June 26, 1899, Hiram Woods, one of our elders, fell asleep, and at sunset on the Thursday following we laid him away to rest. For over 30 years he had been a preacher of the gospel, and no man was ever truer to that divine message. For many years he served the Danville church as elder, and his pure, manly life was a benediction to us all. A truer yokefellow no pator ever had, and the loss to me, as well as to the church, is great. The cause of missions, of Christian education and of Christian Endeavor have all lost a staunch friend. In fact, there was nothing that pertained to the ennobling of man but found an advocate in this good man. At his funeral was grief, but on no face was there despair. Through all the services there was a note of victory, and we all felt, as we stood by the river, that we could almost hear him shout back, "'Tis well!" The Ministerial Association of the city and the trustees of the County Hospital Association, of which he was the honored secretary, attended the funeral in a body, thus showing the esteem in which our brother was held by the leaders in moral, religious and benevolent work. Thank God for such men. S. S. JONES.

A Circuit of the Globe.

By A. McLEAN,

Secretary Foreign Christian Missionary Society.

This book contains 62 chapters, 384 large pages of printed matter, and more than 100 portraits and illustrations. The pictures of all the foreign missionaries of the Christian Church, their homes and places of worship, are among the illustrations.

In August, 1895, Secretary McLean, having been granted a leave of absence for one year, started on a visit to all our Foreign Missions, and this volume records in the author's terse, clear style, the impressions he received, the sights he saw, and the needs of our missionaries on the field. It contains a fund of information on the customs of the countries visited, the lives of the people, and the success of our missions. The book is profusely illustrated with pictures taken on the spot. The book is written in a most fascinating manner, enabling the reader to feel as though he had made the trip with the writer. The author set out from Cincinnati, Ohio, crossing the American continent to San Francisco, then across the Pacific Ocean to Japan, stopping at Honolulu, then to China, India, Australia, Egypt, Palestine, Turkey, European countries to London, across the Atlantic to America, and then home. The book gives the social, political and religious phases of the many nations visited by the author. ☞Cash must accompany the order.

PROF. FAIRHURST'S BOOK.

"Organic Evolution Considered," by Prof. Fairhurst, of Kentucky University, is an excellent book. I have just read and reviewed it with great benefit. This notice is unsolicited. I commend the work because it is able and much needed. It is dignified, strong and clear. Darwin, Huxley, Spencer and other leaders of the evolution theory are met in this book by a Christian scholar and answered in a way that will command their respect for the author. I would like to review the chapters on Instinct, Genesis and Geneology, Evil and Altruism in Nature, but space forbids. Get Prof. Fairhurst's book."—Wm. RossLloyd, in recent number of the Christian Guide.

The price of Prof. Fairhurst's "Organic Evolution Considered" is $1.50. It contains 21 chapters, 386 pages and is bound in neat cloth.

"The Science and Pedagoy of Ethics," the latest production from the pen of Prof. H. W. Everest, is a book well adapted for moral teaching in the school and home. It contains the mature thoughts of one who has been a teacher for many years. It will prove a source of delight to any one who studies its pages.

It is bound in cloth and the price is $1.50, postpaid, and has just come from our press.

CURRENT EVENTS.

The recent assassination of President Heureaux, of San Domingo, and the revolution which is said to be under way has given rise to considerable talk of the annexation of that island to the United States. This subject received considerable attention during the administration of General Grant, only an adverse vote of the Senate preventing its annexation. The assassination of the President of the republic is said not to have been a part of the original program of the revolutionists. The plan was to capture him in connection with Moka, the capital of the island, but his preparation for departure from the capital made it necessary, in the opinion of the revolutionists, to assassinate him. The trouble with all these republics is not in their form of government, or constitution, for they are patterned much after the United States, but it is in the lack of training in the art of self-government. The main body of the people has not advanced to sufficient understanding of the principles of a free government as to enable them to establish are public on a permanent basis. Talk of annexation is pure newspaper talk. It is not at all probable that the representatives of our government in Congress or the President would seriously entertain a proposition of this kind at the present time. The United States has its hands full at present to manage the islands which have recently come under its jurisdiction, and for whose good order it is responsible. It is to be hoped that the assassins, who have been caught, will be brought to justice so promptly as to constitute a warning to others against the repetition of this crime.

The breaking out of yellow fever in the Soldiers' Home near Hampton, Va., has caused intense excitement among the people in that part of the state. Experts pronounce the disease genuine yellow fever, and it is supposed to have come from an old soldier who came from Santiago and sought refuge in the Soldiers' Home. The total number of cases, at this writing, is given at thirty-three. A strong effort is being made to confine the disease to the Home. Newport News has quarantined against Hampton and Elizabeth City and county, and Warrick County. The street railway has prohibited the running of cars between Hampton and Newport News. Hundreds of persons have left the city, and the hotels at Old Point Comfort have been practically deserted. Hampton is only seventy-five miles from Richmond, and the latter city has taken active steps against the spread of the disease there. Baltimore has also established a quarantine against the towns of Newport News, Hampton and Old Point Comfort. Washington City, which is only one hundred and fifty miles from the seat of the disease, is also excited over the Southern contagion, and an order has been issued directing the abandonment of Fortress Monroe by the regular garrison, This is a precautionary measure, but it has impressed many people with the seriousness of the situation.

A reported remark of Admiral Dewey, while at Trieste, that "the next war of the United States would be with Germany," has created no little comment in both the German and American press. It has been denied by many that the Admiral ever made any such remark. The New York Herald, however, whose correspondent cabled the remark to that paper, claims that the Admiral, in the course of a conversation, "spoke with sailor-like candor," and of course said many things not intended for the press. The Herald adds that "it is regrettable that a friendly conversation should have found its way into print." It is certainly a matter of regret that Admiral Dewey cannot exercise the privilege which other people indulge in, of expressing his opinion in a free, unguarded way without stirring up international commotion. But such is the penalty of that high degree of fame and influence to which Admiral Dewey has attained. He will find it to be quite necessary to restrict his utterances to such statements as he would he willing to have appear in the public press. The observation in question is scarcely credible, not less on account of the improbability of such a war than on account of the impropriety of such a prediction from such a source. If it comes to a question of veracity between the correspondent and Admiral Dewey, the people will no doubt accept the Admiral's statement of the matter.

The first Sunday in August was a day of fearful accidents, in which almost fourscore people lost their lives. One occurred at Bar Harbor, Maine, where a train load of excursionists were boarding a steamer to visit Admiral Sampson's fleet. The slip to the steamer collapsed and about two hundred passengers were dropped into the water, twenty-two of whom were drowned. The excitement caused by the accident was intense. There were many narrow escapes. The second frightful accident occurred near Bridgeport, Conn., and in it thirty persons were reported killed. A trolley car, well filled with people, while crossing a three-pier bridge across Peck's Pond left the bridge and fell a distance of fifty feet to the bed of the pond. The car turned over in falling, so that the trucks and heavier timbers came down upon the people. There were expressions heard in which the company is blamed for the accident. It is claimed that the road was opened for traffic before it was properly finished. The line was opened in great haste on last Thursday and the accident followed on Sunday. An investigation of the matter will be made, however, by the coroner, and the facts will be given to the public. Lists of the drowned at Bar Harbor and of the killed at Bridgeport were published in the press dispatch reports in the Monday morning papers. A third accident of frightful proportions occurred on Saturday night at Juvisy, a suburb of Paris, France. During a terrific thunderstorm a train moving at the rate of fifty miles an hour crushed into the rear end of a passenger train that was at full stop. Three coaches of the motionless train, filled with passengers, were telescoped and seventeen persons killed outright and seventy-three injured. The moving train was not injured. Heart-rending screams and cries filled the air, but the passengers were so massed in the debris that they were extricated only with the greatest difficulty. There were also a number of minor accidents in various parts of the world reported.

Our neighboring Republic of Mexico is having something of the same experience with the Indians within its borders that our own government has had with some of the tribes under our jurisdiction. The Yaqui Indians in the state of Sonora, which is just across the international boundary from Arizona, are at present on the warpath. The cause for dissatisfaction on the part of the Indians is said by some to be that in a former treaty with the government it had agreed to give to each of the tribes a certain amount of land, and for a given length of time a certain amount of provisions as well. The time during which the government was to furnish provisions has expired, and the Indians refused to cultivate their lands in order to produce their own support. The object of the rebellion is presumably to force the Mexican Government to continue its donation of provisions. This is one version of the trouble, while another is that the outbreak of the Yaquis is caused by the encroachment of the whites, among whom are many Americans. If the latter be the true cause, it is to be hoped that the Mexican Government will see to it that the tresspassers are duly punished and the Indians protected in their treaty rights. The Mexican Government has taken active steps to suppress the insurrection, and when this is accomplished we hope it will look closely into the cause of the trouble.

Whatever the people in other sections of the country may think of the late Secretary of War, Russell A. Alger, there can be no question as to his popularity in his own state. This, while known to the people of Michigan all the while, was made manifest to all the world in the hearty reception which he received on his return to Detroit. A vast concourse of people, representing different parts of the state, were present at his homecoming to emphasize their appreciation of him in spite of the criticisms he has received from the public press. He received an ovation from the people whenever he appeared. In his address of welcome the mayor of Detroit said, "It will go forth to the world, sir, that where you are best known, there you are best beloved and best appreciated; that the standard built up by patience and perseverance, honesty and uprightness, cannot be thrown down by slander." Governor Pingree was warm in his eulogy of the retiring Secretary and bitter in his criticism of those responsible for his retirement. Especially did he condemn the action of what he called "the venal press." In his brief response General Alger thanked the people for his hearty welcome home, reaffirmed the position that he has discharged his duties in the public service in such a manner as he felt sure the country would endorse when it comes to know all the facts. He had come home, he said, "without a grievance." He was glad to be a private citizen again, and he proposed, for the balance of his life, to stay at home and enjoy social intercourse with the people whose confidence and respect he had won.

The new Secretary of War, Elihu Root, has entered vigorously upon the duties of his office and has been acquainting himself with the situation in the Philippines and its needs. He is inclined to give credence to the view held by the generals subordinate to General Otis, that a greater force is needed on those islands in order to speedily and thoroughly put down the insurrection and restore order. He is in thorough accord with the President as to the method decided upon for augumenting the army, and with his purpose to make a vigorous fall campaign. There has been considerable criticism, outside of the newspaper correspondents, upon the policy of General Otis, but the President, with his characteristic inclination to deal fairly with men, has determined, it is said, to furnish him ample resources for crushing the insurrection in an autumn campaign, and if he does not do it, he will be given to understand that some other officer will be assigned to that duty. No one who is acquainted with the situation there can fail to see that General Otis has a tremendous responsibility resting upon him in discharging the duties of military commander and civil governor of the islands. That he should have made some mistakes was to have been expected. He is likely, however, to profit by these mistakes, and is probably better prepared by reason of his experience for completing the work of the pacification of these islands than a new man would be, with even greater capacity.

Startling as was the Czar's call for a peace conference by the ruling powers of the world, the news of his desire to abdicate the throne of Russia is still more startling. It is reported that his disappointment in an heir to the throne and in the results of the Peace Conference at the Hague, together with the death of the Czarowitz, has excited his superstitious feelings, and that he has become tired of the throne. It is said that he connects himself with a Russian legend according to which an heirless czar is to be succeeded by a Czar Michael, predestined to occupy Constantinople. It is strange that a young ruler of such a nation should take such a gloomy view of affairs at such a time as this. It is true that these are only rumors, but they seem to have had weight enough to call M. Delcasse, the present foreign minister of France, to Russia, to dissuade the young ruler from such rashness at this time. The abdication of Russia's emperor at this time would cause no small commotion in Europe. It will have a strong bearing upon the present attitude of the leading European nations toward each other, the result of which no man at this time would attempt to forecast.

What has the promise of being the greatest trial of the century, and one of the greatest of history, was opened Monday morning in Rennes, France, under intense but suppressed popular excitement. The prisoner, Capt. Dreyfus, was safely landed in the trial room before 6 o'clock and at 7 A. M., while the audience stood with uncovered heads, the judges of the court filed slowly in and the huisier declared the the court opened. The audience room in which the trial is being held is a vast hall, well lighted by five enormous windows opening on the street and five opening on the courtyards. On the large platform are seated the judges and attorneys for the government and for the prisoner. Behind the judges hangs a picture of Christ crucified and of President Loubet. The witnesses have special seats assigned them in the center of the hall, but will not be permitted to hear each other's testimony. The public is limited to a special number of places. The press reporters, also limited in number, occupy the sides of the hall. The trial was opened by the reading of the decision of the Court of Cassation granting a revision of the trial by the recorder. This the prisoner did not hear. His presence by order of the president at the close of the reading was the sensational moment of the first day of the trial. After his identification the witnesses were then invited by the court to retire and Maj. Carrieres presented the things whereof the prisoner is accused.

After the reading of the accusations against the prisoner, Capt. Dreyfus, he was then severely questioned by Col. Jouaust, the president of the court, on the things whereof he is accused. But to all of the incriminating charges Capt. Dreyfus entered a most emphatic denial. The emotion put into some of his negative answers is said to have been of the most intense nature at times and was felt by the entire audience. When handed the bordereau and asked if he recognized it he replied, "No, my Colonel, I am innocent. I declare it here as I declared it in 1894, I am a victim. Five years in the galleys! My wife, my children! My God, I am innocent!" The latter part of this reply was broken with sobs and is said to have resembled the cry of a wounded animal. He will next be examined on this bordereau which will occupy about four days. The division of sentiment in France over the trial is beginning to manifest itself in the most bitter accusations on the one side and in the strongest hopes of acquittal on the other. If he is acquitted his enemies take the most pessimistic view of the effect upon the nation. If he is not acquitted his friends are equally solicitous as to the future of France. But there are those who have perfect confidence in the present government of France and who believe that she will rule with a strong arm and remove the dark shadow thrown over her proud name by this affair whatever the finding of the present court, and this seems to be the wiser view to take of the matter.

HOW TO OBTAIN THE SPIRIT'S FULLNESS.

The following extract from a personal letter to the editor concerning the late editorial entitled "The Crowning Feature of a Great Movement" seems to us of sufficiet importance to justify the prominence we give it here, and some editorial comment. We doubt not that this brother expresses both the sentiment and the religious experience of thousands of others of our readers. It is for this reason that we print the chief portion of his letter here with comment instead of answering it privately:

"I am much pleased with the article in the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST of July 13th on 'The Crowning Feature of a Great Movement.' I am fully convinced that this is our great need. But how to get the fullness of the Spirit is what perplexes me. I have long felt that my success as a preacher depended largely on the power of the Spirit working in and with me. I have earnestly prayed for a number of years for more of the divine Spirit, and yet I am conscious of the lack of its power. There are times when I have thought that there was some power given me to speak and act with greater effect, but only for a short time. I know not how to possess a greater degree or measure of this blessed Spirit, and so far as I have failed in securing the promise of the Spirit, so far have I failed in my ministry. I hope you will give us more of your thought, and tell us what course you would advise for a longing soul to attain to a greater fullness of this promised Spirit. There is no subject about which I am so deeply interested as this 'crowning feature' of our movement. Receive my hearty thanks for this timely article, with the assurance that it has done me a world of good, and a hope that much more may be said in the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST on this supremely important subject."

A few preliminary statements concerning this subject may help to clear the way for an answer to our brother's question.

1. There can be no question but that the New Testament teaches that an effective ministry or an effective service of any kind is dependent upon the presence and power of the Holy Spirit. Even when men were selected to serve tables, or to oversee the distribution of supplies among the needy in the early church, men who were "filled with the Holy Spirit" were selected for that service. The apostles spoke with great power because they were filled with the Spirit. Barnabas, a companion and fellow-laborer with Paul, was "a good man, full of faith and of the Holy Spirit." These two things go together—faith and the Holy Spirit—and unless one be full of the former he will not be filled with the latter.

2. The aid of the Holy Spirit in Christian service was not limited to the apostolic age. It is a perpetual and abiding power in the church, and in each individual Christian, who devotes himself with singleheartedness to Christ's service. There is no way of accounting for the difference in the effectiveness of the ministry of men of to-day, except that some possess the Holy Spirit in larger measure than others. How otherwise could men of limited culture, and with few of the gifts of oratory, accomplish so much more in their ministry than many others far more highly gifted by nature, and with a much better equipment in the way of special training and general information than they?

3. It must not be forgotten, however, that there are many kinds of service to be rendered to God, and that there are many different manifestations of the Spirit as there are special gifts, special duties and special kinds of service. As in the early church all were not qualified to speak with tongues or to prophesy, so in the modern church, all have not the same gifts by nature, nor do they receive the same form and manifestation of the Spirit. There was only one Paul in the apostolic church, though there were doubtless many Aquilas and Priscillas who, in their private capacities, filled the measure of their responsibility through the aid of the Spirit.

These things premised, we may mention a few general directions, in the light of New Testament teaching, as to how we may obtain the fullness of the Spirit. Only general directions can be given, because specific advice can only be given in specific cases, where all the conditions are known. As to the brother who makes this inquiry, and who is an entire strager to us, we feel safe in saying that, his words being sincere, as we believe them to be, his life does manifest, in a good measure, the Spirit of God. We should say that men who know him intimately think and speak of him as a sincere, consecrated man, who is earnestly striving to live the Christian life, and whose influence is for good upon his neighbors and friends. It is not inconsistent with this fact that he feels the need of a greater power for effective service, and realizes his lack of the divine indwelling.

As already indicated, faith, which is the supreme condition of salvation, is also an essential condition of receiving the Holy Spirit, with the richest and best things belonging to the Christian life. Faith is the power of spiritual perception, the power that perceives and lays hold of spiritual realities. Without this quality, in a high degree, there can be no great advancement in spiritual power. Faith is the soil in which grace must grow.

Along with this, and as a condition of attaining to the highest faith, there must be the subjugation of the body to the spirit, of the lower to the higher nature. There must, in other words, be unity, or a sincere struggle after unity, between the inner and the outward life. There must be the putting away from the heart and from the life every known sin, and every habit or practice which hinders spiritual growth, or prevents the fullest communion with God. Even doubtful practices and customs must be sacrificed upon the altar of the higher Christian life.

The preparation for the Spirit consists, not merely in surrendering the things which are evil and doubtful, and abstaining from fleshly lusts, but in a positive offerihg up of ourselves and all we have to the active service of God and our fellowmen. Nothing short of this complete self-surrender to God, with the willingness to be what He would have us be, and do what He would have us do, and go where He would have us go, and suffer what He would have us suffer, is an adequate preparation for receiving the fullness of the Spirit.

In connection with what we have mentioned—for we do not place these things in chronological order, as they cannot be separated—there must, of course, be prayer—earnest, unceasing communion with God, abounding in thanksgiving for blessings received, and with a distinct petition for such measure and manifestation of the Holy Spirit as will fit us for that particular service which God desires us to render. There must be the praying that goes beyond the precincts of our own selfhood, and seeks the glory of God and the salvation of the world. There must be prayer that couples with its petitions the solemn purpose and pledge to yield up everything, if need be, even life itself, that we may do the will of God on earth and fulfill the measure of our obligation.

It is not, then, so strange, after all, that so many of us have not yet attained to the fullness of the Spirit. Not many of us are willing to pay the price for this royal gift, or meet the conditions on which alone it is possible for us to be filled with the fullness of God. And yet, could we know the ineffable sweetness of His love, and the peace which passeth understanding, which come to him who yields himself wholly to God, we should indeed wonder that there are so many Christians groveling in the dust, or walking in murky shadows and miasms of the swamp Dismal, when they might be treading the high tablelands where the light of God's countenance is more radiant than the moon or sun.

If any ask, in skepticism, how can these things be? we answer, the possibilities of it come through the sacrifice and mediation of Jesus Christ, in whom dwells all the fullness of God, and whose mission to earth it was to communicate that divine fullness to men.

FORWARD! VICTORY!!

There were those who feared that the standard had been placed too high when, in Chattanooga, last October, it was resolved that the Christian Woman's Board of Missions would raise $90,000 for missions in 1899, that the American Christian Missionary Society would collect $100,000, and that the Foreign Christian Missionary Society would secure $150,000, for the preaching of the gospel to the unsaved in this year of grace. Such fears were groundless. Facts now before us show that there was no real ground for fear. The money will be raised; of this there is now no reasonable doubt. Let those who talk of "the good old times" note what is now being done by the Disciples of Christ to evangelize our own and other lands, and call to mind the small amount in the aggregate that was given for this purpose only a few years ago. The Disciples are progressing. They represent a movement. Some were inclined, in the not distant past, to object to the word movement in connection with the Disciples of Christ. There is no doubt now that WE are a movement! The Disciples are moving, and that, too, in the right direction. It begins to look as if they mean what they say when they speak of obedience to the Christ. There are grounds to warrant the suspicion that they are beginning to be in real earnest in their effort to do the will of the Master when he said: "Preach the gospel to the whole creation."

But the greatest progress has been made during this Jubilee Year by the American Christian Missionary Society. The Foreign Society needed to make a gain of only $15,000 to raise $150,000. The Christian Woman's Board of Missions needed an increase of only $22,000 in order to realize $90,000 for missions in 1899. The home board was under the necessity of making an advance of $60,000 in order to reach the $100,000 mark. The latest information contains the assurance that more than $70,000 have been raised. There must be $30,000 more collected for home missions before the Cincinnati convention. The time is short. B. L. Smith and C. C. Smith, our secretaries, are working day and night to this end; BUT they cannot succeed without our co-operation. The preachers must come to the front in aid of this great work as never before. They must think about home missions, pray for home missions, preach in behalf of home missions, talk of home missions, and encourage the people to sing about missions as never before. This Jubilee Year is a crisis in our history. It begins to look as if we are at the beginning of a new era in our experience. Expansion is now the word. We have been great in the past; we are destined to be much greater in the future. The raising of $100,000 for home missions means far more to us, in the days that are before us, than it is possible to now realize.

One of our preachers, in an informal conversation with a group of brethren recently, so stirred their hearts that $20 were at once contributed to the $100,000 Jubilee fund. Do not wait to preach a sermon on home missions—talk of the work privately as well as preach in public in the interest of missions. Let there be the enthusiasm of a campaign thrown into this work. During a presidential campaign everybody talks politics. Why not campaign for the Christ in the same spirit of enthusiasm?

The preaching and the talking must be of larger things than in the past. At the Chattanooga convention Gov. Drake, of Iowa, sounded the right note when he handed in his check for $5,000. Recently another gift of $5,000 has been received for home missions. We are not to despise the pennies, nickels, dimes, quarters and single dollars, but we must work for and expect larger gifts to the best of enterprises. Ours is a great cause. To its furtherance let there be great gifts.

In every direction the indications are full of good cheer. The fifteenth of July showed that the receipts of the home board were $1,200 in advance of the receipts for the entire month of July last year.

This is not a time to slacken our efforts; it is the time to increase them. Let no one say, "There is no need for my offering." The offering of every one is needed now. It is in this way that the $100,000 will be secured for home missions.

As soon as you shall have finished reading these lines, go to work to assist, in some way, this good cause. Pray, preach, talk, sing, solicit, give!

THAT $100,000 JUBILEE OFFERING.

The CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST recently published an article from one of our secretaries setting forth the wonderful gain, the ever-increasing gain, made by the Home Society in its Jubilee Year. Since then has come the announcement of "The Margaret Oliver Named Gift" of $5,000. This brings the present receipts of the society to $70,000. This is truly astonishing and most gratifying. It now really looks as though the consummation of that, thought by many to be an idle dream, would become a realization in our Jubilee Year. It is so near. In order for full jubilation it must be reached. This can be done and the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST is confident that all our brethren will welcome our agents when they make necessary appeals in order to accomplish it.

We have been calling the attention of our readers to the spiritual side of our Jubilee Celebration; that we should not forget the agency of prayer and that our blessings and our victories alike "come from above," and that we need a more complete surrender to God and a fuller and sweeter communion with Him. Yet we must not forget that great sacrifice and liberal giving never stands in the way of the deepest and truest and sweetest spirituality. It is only when we have "brought our gift to the altar," that we find the completest communion with Him who gave.

When we gather in multitudes in October at Cincinnati and with bared heads stand before God to praise and magnify and bless Him for His loving kindness and His mercies and marvelous guidings and for all our victories of the fifty years, will it in any way hinder the glad anthems of praise because it is announced that we have placed $100,000 on the altar for our country's redemption? Will the man or woman, the child of God, be less devout, less spiritual, because he or she has taken part, a large or small part as ability may have been, in thus placing the gift? Will we sing the song, "My Country, 'Tis of Thee," with less unction because we have given in order that the pure Word of God may be sent to every part of our beloved land? In proportion as we take part with our God in His work in the world will our worship of Him be sweet and our fellowship close. In proportion to our sacrifice will be our joy in every victory of the cross, and when we reach our Father's home to celebrate the great Jubilee and hear the footsteps of the redeemed sounding along the courts of heaven our joy, our wealth, will be in proportion to the part we have taken in bringing them there—in proportion as we have treasure in them. Then new meaning will be found in His words, "Inasmuch as ye did it unto the least of these, ye did unto me." Let all who wish to rejoice in the Juiblee victory take part in the Jubilee gift.

The joy resulting from the diffusion of blessings to all around us is the purest and sublimest that can ever enter the human mind, and can be conceived only by those who have experienced it. Next to the consolations of Divine grace, it is the most sovereign balm to the miseries of life, both in him who is the object of it, and in him who exercises it; and it will not only soothe and tranquilize a troubled spirit, but inspire a constant flow of good humor, content and gayety of heart.—Porteous.

Hour of Prayer.

THORNS THAT CHOKE.

(Uniform Midweek Prayer-meeting Topic, Aug. 16.)

(Luke 8:5-15; Psalms 1:1-6.)

CENTRAL TRUTH: Even the good seed of the kingdom of God may be so choked by thorns, which infest the soil of the human heart, as to prevent any fruit from being brought to perfection.

In no parable spoken by the Master does he manifest a more perfect knowledge of human nature than in this Parable of the Sower. A careful study of it is of the greatest value to those who would win others from the service of sin to the service of righteousness. The divine Agent, the great Sower, the divine Instrumentality, the Word of God, the different kinds of soil, representing the different types of human nature, the different results—all these are presented in the inimitable method of the great Teacher.

We are to deal in this lesson with one of these classes of hearers, namely, those in whose hearts the good seed is choked by the thorns, so that no fruit is produced. Of this class the Savior says, "And other [good seed] fell amidst the thorns; and the thorns grew with it and choked it" (v. 7). In His explanation of this part of His parable He says, "And that which fell among the thorns, these are they that have heard, and as they go on their way they are choked with cares and riches and pleasures of this life, and bring no fruit to perfection" (v. 14).

Here are three kinds of thorns that choke the good seed out of the hearts of professed Christians: (1) "Cares; "(2) "riches," and (3) "pleasures of this life." We have all met the anxious or care-burdened Christian, who is troubled with such questions as "What shall we eat?" "What shall we drink?" or "Wherewithal shall we be clothed?" These are generally the poorer class of people who are troubled with these cares, though sometimes people of ample means are troubled with the same questions. The Savior deals with this class of people in his Sermon on the Mount, where he teaches his disciples not to be anxious about these things, referring them to the birds of the air, and the lilies of the field as illustrations of God's providence. Few things are better calculated to destroy one's moral and physical health than these nseless anxieties which spring from a lack of confidence in God's providence. This is one of the respects in which we are to be like children, trusting our Heavenly Father as perfectly as our children trust us for their temporal needs.

Riches are also mentioned by the Savior as choking out the Word and preventing it from bringing forth fruit unto perfection. How true this is we know by observation if not by experience. It is not necessary for one to be very rich in order to realize the truth of this. How easily men's affections are turned in the direction of increasing their riches! How soon the heart, when it is once fixed on this object, becomes indifferent to all the great objects for which the Savior lived and labored among men. There is, perhaps, no greater peril threatening this country to-day than the rapid increase of wealth, and members of churches are subject to this peril as well as others. Comparatively few people can stand prosperity without moral damage. Strange that an increase in material possessions, through the blessing of God, should tend to decrease one's love for and service to God! And yet, this is the history of wealth. The only way to combat it successfully is to see that our gifts to the cause of Christ increase in the same proportion as our wealth increases. When this is not the case the soul is in infinite peril. Nothing is more needed, perhaps, in the church to-day than the recognition of the obligation which wealth imposes, and the Christian use of wealth. "How hardly shall they who have riches enter into the kingdom of God!"

"The pleasures of this life"—these are thorns, too, which choke out the Word. When men become "lovers of pleasure more than lovers of God;" when their purpose in life seems to be nothing higher than to "have a good time;" when their hearts are enamored with the idle pleasures or sinful indulgences of the world, there is no room left for the Word of God to grow and flourish. The religion of Christ gives the highest and purest joy and the most abiding happiness which any mortal may know, but it does not make pleasure the end of life, even the innocent kind, much less does it sanction those sinful indulgences which are at war with men's physical, mental and moral health.

To these three kinds of thorns, which choke, the psalmist adds the fourth, namely, evil association.

"Blessed is the man that walketh not in the counsel of the wicked,
Nor standeth in the way of sinners,
Nor sitteth in the seat of the scoffiing."

There is a sort of progress in evil companionship here marked by the words, "walketh," "standeth," sitteth." When one comes to the point where he can deliberately take his seat with the scorners and scoffers of religion, he is far on the way to moral ship wreck. Many a young Christian has been robbed of his cross and allured to destruction by associating with ungodly persons. Seek the compainionship, rather, of those whose "delight is in the law of the Lord" and who meditate on His law day and night. Such association will be as water and sunshine to the good seed, to cause it to grow and bring forth fruit. Let each one of us here to-night ask himself, Is my life barren or unfruitful in the knowledge and service of God? "If so, what thorns are choking out the Word from my heart?"

PRAYER.

O Thou who art the Lord of the harvest, and who hast sown Thy precious seed of truth broadcast through the world, we thank Thee that some of it at least has fallen upon our hearts. We must confess, however, with sincere sorrow, that we have too often allowed it to be choked by thorns which infest our hearts. We have not been sufficiently diligent in guarding our hearts from evil influences. We bemoan the barrenness of our lives and humbly implore Thy forgiveness and Thy assisting grace, that we may be able to so cultivate our hearts that Thy Word may grow within us and bring forth fruit to perfection, to the praise of Thy name and to the salvation of our own souls. May we receive with meekness Thy ingrafted Word into our hearts and allow it to work out its regenerative influence in our lives. For Thy name's sake. Amen!

MACATAWA MUSINGS.

The spectacle of a great religious movement on its knees before God, seeking guidance and strength for its future work, is one well calculated to inspire confidence in the future of such a movement. The individual, the nation or the religious body that seeks, with singleness of heart, to know the will of God, and to do it, or that kneels before Jehovah for direction and blessing, has found out the true law of success. Reading several chapters, successively, in the Book of Chronicles, a few mornings since, we were struck with the formula observed by the Chronicler in the history of the kings of Israel and Judah. It is said of this and that king, that he began to reign at such an age, reigned so many years in Jerusalem or in Samaria, and "he did that which was right in the eyes of Jehovah," or, "he did not that which was right in the eyes of Jehovah." This was the test by which kings and rulers were measured by the inspired Chronicler. In every instance, when the king "did that which was right in the eyes Jehovah," he was prospered in his reign, while trouble invariably came to those who ignored the Divine will. This is the test by which the kings, queens, emperors, czars, sultans and presidents of our day must stand or fall. The effort being revived, in these last days, to have Christians do "whatever Christ would like to have them do," is, after all, but a return to the old divine standard. This pausing, in the midst of the hurry and bustle of preparation for a great Jubilee Convention, to seek the divine guidance and blessing, is a scene upon which the very angels will look with deepest interest. Let us hope that the churches and the ministry throughout the whole country will enter most heartily into the spirit of this day of prayer, the second Lord's day in August. If this is done, we may safely anticipate a great stimulus to our missionary activities, and to the whole religious life of our people.

We are fond of reading the Book of Job, and often turn to that sublime poem for its lofty conceptions of Jehovah and His dealings with men. In a recent morning study we were impressed, as never before, with a statement at the close of this poem. Job had listened as Jehovah had spoken to him out of the whirlwind, and at the close of the marvelous description of His power and majesty Job exclaimed:

"I had heard of thee by the hearing of the ear;
But now mine eye seeth thee,
Wherefore I abhor myself, and repent
In dust and ashes."

Here is a new and deeper religious experience than Job had ever known before. He, at last, through his afflicton and through this instruction and rebuke, comes to a truer knowledge of God's character and power than he had ever attained before. He had heard a great deal about God, and perhaps had read something of His dealings with the nations, and particularly with Israel, but now he is able to see, that is, to understand, to have a clearer mental vision of the divine Being than had ever come to to him by hearsay. What was the result of this better knowledge of God and of His character? He abhorred himself and repented in dust and ashes.

Is it not always so? The clearer our vision of God and of his righteousness, the less we esteem our own righteousness. Job had been vindicating his integrity and his many excellent qualities against the false philosophy of his three comforters, and seemed to be quite well satisfied with his moral attainments. He argued his case with them against Jehovah to show that his suffering was not deserved. But when once he caught a vision of God, in the glory and majesty of His divine character, then he abhorred himself and his pretensions to righteousness, and repented in dust and ashes. It follows from this that there is no study so prolific of spiritual results as the study of God. O, that we could know Him better! Blessed, indeed, are the "pure in heart," who are able to "see God." We can only know ourselves truly as we come to know God as He has revealed Himself in Jesus Christ. "And this is life eternal, that they should know thee, the only true God, and Him whom thou didst send, even Jesus Christ." Job regained his material prosperity, but his outward wealth was not to be compared with the truer knowledge of God which he had gained through his experiences. No doubt he was ever afterward a wiser, humbler and a better man, because of his clearer vision of God.

Speaking of the Book of Job, the expression, "Canst thou draw out leviathan with a fishhook?" shows that the art of angling was not unknown to the patriarch, and that it is an ancient and honorable calling. But the lesson is deeper. He would be a very foolish and inexperienced fisherman who would attempt to draw out a whale or crocodile with a fishhook. Different means must be employed for capturing this larger game. If Job could not capture leviathan with hook or with "fish spears," how could he stand before Jehovah, who created the leviathan, and contend with Him? When a heathen king demanded of the missionary that he show him his God that he might look upon him, the missionary replied that "no mortal could look upon the glory of the true God and live." "Show him to me," said the king, "I can gaze upon him." The missionary, pretty soon, took him out of his tent and, pointing to the sun, asked him to gaze upon its burning disc. The king looked for a moment and said "he could not gaze into the sun." "How much less, then," said the missionary, "could you gaze into the face of God, who created that and millions of other suns?" We find fault with God and grumble at His providences, and in our folly we sometimes assume to know all His ways; and yet there are creatures of His hand which we cannot understand, and with which we are unable to cope. The object of Jehovah was to teach Job humility by pointing out the greatness of His works, in the mountains, the seas and whatsoever dwelleth therein, and the starry hosts of heaven. Sometime when we feel puffed up with a little knowledge, or a little power, if we could only sit under the starry heavens, gaze out into the vast stellar spaces and remember that God created all these, and upholds them by the word of his power, we could but feel our littleness and our unworthiness in His sight. When I look out over the wide-stretching lake, bounded by the far distant horizon, and sending in shoreward its foam-crested billows, as it is doing today, and listen to the deep anthem of the waves, I can but feel how puny a thing is man, and how dependent he is upon Him who holds the seas in the hollow of His hand, and who raises and stills its mighty billows. The lesson of it all is that we can do no better than to submit to the ways of God, commit ourselves to Him, and know that He who reared the mountains, scooped out the ocean beds, who guides the stars in their courses, who stills the tumult of the waves, is our Father, on whose bosom of love we can pillow our weary heads and rest.

It is Jesus' idea of God that is revolutionizing the religion, the morals and the life of mankind, as that idea was embodied and revealed in Him who was "God manifest in the flesh." When an inspired writer would express his highest conception of God, he could do no better than to call Him "the God and Father of our Lord Jesus Christ." This is the God that is winning the homage of mankind, and the literature that reveals and embodies this conception of God is the living and vitalizing literature of the world, and will control the thoughts and lives of men long after its enemies sleep in forgotten graves. Let us study God in nature, in history, in the religious experiences and revelations of His inspired servants, but especially as He was embodied in Jesus Christ, if we would have our lives and our religion right.

Questions and Answers.

1. Is it right to recognize those as brethren in Christ who call themselves Methodists, Quakers, Presbyterians or any other human name?

2. If we call them brethren, do we not acknowledge in a sense that their rules of practice according to their disciplines are true?

3. Knowing that their teachings are contrary to the apostles, and are misleading thousands of souls, do we not err before God and men in even intimating that such are brethren? A. C. Cox.

Danville, Ind.

1. It is right to recognize as brethren in Christ all who acknowledge Christ as Lord, and who manifest in their lives the spirit and character of Christ. Deeper and more important than human designations are the Christian life and character.

2. No; in recognizing them as brethren we do not necessarily endorse their rules of discipline. These are something apart from their Christian character.

3. If we wait until we find a people whose teaching and practice are in entire accord with the teaching and practice of Jesus Christ and his apostles before we agree to call them brethren, we should probably have to withhold that fraternal name from any mortal. We must, of course, seek to correct the teaching where we believe it to be wrong, but we must not fail to recognize as Christ's disciples and brethren all who love him and are seeking earnestly and sincerely to follow him. To fail to do this would be far more harmful to the cause of Christ than any seeming endorsement of people's errors by the recognition of their Christian character.

Reformation of the Nineteenth Century

NINE DECADES OF HISTORY

THE FOURTH PERIOD.

T. W. GRAFTON.

II. The Music Controversy.

There are some chapters in our history that might well be forgotten, were it not for their wholesome, constraining influence upon our growing self-esteem, and their timely warning against being wise above what is written. Among these is the chapter which records the controversy over the use of expedients in worship. The discussion of this issue filled the columns of our papers and disturbed the counsels of our churches for a decade or more, crippling the progress of a great cause at a critical period, when its strength should have been centered upon our rapidly growing cities and the newly settled territory of the West.

Thomas Campbell had unwittingly planted the seeds of this controversy in giving utterance to the now famous declaration: "Where the Scriptures speak, we speak; where the Scriptures are silent, we are silent." When applied to the essentials of revealed religion it was a splendid maxim. As a confession of the authority of the Word of God it has never been surpassed. But it was capable of being wrested from its intended meaning in such a way as to stifle all growth and progress. In the organization and development of religious society after the New Testament model the question was asked, What shall be our attitude toward modern expedients about which the Scriptures are silent? Shall the past customs of the church govern us in these untaught questions, or shall we make wise use of means which, in the very nature of the case, were unknown and unused by former generations?

This was not a new situation. The old Puritans, a generation before, had argued against the introduction of the newly invented stove into meeting houses as an unscriptural and unrighteous innovation. In some quarters the early followers of Mr. Campbell had objected to the building of houses for worship as without apostolic example and hence unscriptural, since the early disciples met from house to house. The singing of more than one part to a hymn was declared by others contrary to apostolic practice, since "the Scriptures expressly state that the house of God is a house of order; confusion must not reign there; two parts are two tunes—you must sing the same tune the rest are singing." On the same ground good brethren now wrote volumes to prove the use of instruments of music in churches to be a violation of the gospel, or at least of the respect we should have for the silence of the gospel.

We must not conclude that the question was confined to the followers of Alexander Campbell in the Current Reformation. The whole Puritan sentiment of Christendom had at one time or another opposed the use of the organ, regarding it as an adjunct of popery, to be classed along with images and crucifixes and relics and other inventions of the Mother of Harlots. But the older denominations had, for the most part, adjusted themselves to the new conditions before the question of instrumental music entered as a disturbing element among the churches of the Disciples. A contributor to the New York Herald of 1868, in summing up the situation from a Baptist point of view, writes:

"It will be impossible to expunge the excess of music from religious worship at present. Presbyterians, doctrinally orthodox, have fallen into it; Methodists exhort in musical notes and semibreves; Epicopalians cantillate everything, even prayers and responses, and Catholics, always grand and copious in this respect, are becoming more and more so, in consonance with the general spirit of religious worship in the metropolis. The Baptists only, as a great body, have held aloof and kept to the letter of their original simplicity, and these will no doubt gradually soften and mingle with the general pulp."

The question became a real issue among the Disciples with the introduction of a melodeon at Midway, Kentucky. In reply to strictures in the American Christian Review in the spring of 1860 Dr. L. L. Pinkerton, the pastor, wrote: "So far as known to me I am the only preacher in Kentucky, of our brotherhood, who has publicly advocated the propriety of employing instrumental music in some churches, and the Church of God in Midway is the only church that has yet made a decided effort to introduce it." Other churches of progressive spirit soon followed the example. The new era of prosperity and progress that followed the war contributed to the rapid spread of this spirit. Our editors and leaders took alarm. We were in danger, they urged, of surrendering our plea for the restoration of primitive Christianity.

It is in no spirit of criticism that we record the protest of leading brethren. Strong, able, fair-minded men became fearful of the effect of departure from early simplicity and counseled the churches against being carried away by the spirit of the times. "We cannot by any possibility," wrote one of our leading brethren in the Harbinger of 1865, "know that a certain element of worship is acceptable to God in the Christian dispensation, when the Scriptures are silent in reference to it. To introduce any such element is unscriptural and presumptuous. It is will-worship, if any such thing as will-worship can exist."

To this, in the columns of the same journal, the sweet singer, A. S. Hayden, replied, "Whether it would be wise to use the instrument in any case may be safely left to the brethren locally interested in the question. The assumption of the right to decide for them, to dictate to them, in questions clearly relating to their own peace, harmony and edification, and to visit upon them the penalty of the greater or lesser excommunication, is to re-enact the persecutions of the Star Chamber of the reign of Charles the First, or to employ the excathedra tyranny of the papacy."

In the next few years the question had taken a broad range, and the conflict between the progressive and conservative elements of the church, in many places, became bitter and unchristian. The great truths of the gospel, which it had been the mission of the Disciples to proclaim, were consigned to the rear, while brethren quarreled and sometimes divided over the means to be employed as aids to the worship of God.

It was urged by the enemies of the organ that it was "neutralizing," "formalizing," "secularizing" and "carnalizing" our worship; that those who countenanced its introduction had become the champions of that which actually "superseded an ordinance of God;" that its use was as bad as the Romish invention of affusion. It was insisted that God would not accept it as worship at all, because he had not commanded it to be done. It was held that as a matter of conscience God's elect must refuse to worship where a musical instrument was used. Scripture or the silence of Scripture was used in defense of the methods of obstruction employed. Logic, or what passed for logic, was brought into play in defense of the champions of "soundness." The following is an example of the reasoning of the times:

"Whatever destroys the ordinance of God is sinful and belongs consequently to the catagory of principle and not of expediency.

"Instrumental music destroys congregational singing, which is an ordinance of God.

"Therefore, instrumental music is SINFUL and belongs to the category of principle, and not of expediency."

From its first appearance, in 1866, the Christian Standard became the champion of a broad and liberal policy, and gathered around it a group of men who shared with its editor the conviction that the new era upon which we had entered demanded the employment of new methods if the churches were to keep pace with the progress of the times. Mr. Errett urged the wisdom of using expedients which had already proved helpful to the work of the church where employed. Arrayed against all progressive measures were the Gospel Advocate and the American Christian Review; but they had now taken such a decided stand against all co-operative missionary effort as to alienate many who shared their opposition to innovations in worship. The tide was certainly setting toward a more liberal policy. Something must be done. The Apostolic Times was consequently founded in 1869. It was issued under the joint editorship of five of our strongest men: Moses E. Lard, Robert Graham, Winthrop H. Hopson, Lanceford B. Wilkes and John W. McGarvey. "To the primitive faith and the primitive practice," the prospectus states, "without enlargement or diminution, without innovation or modification, the editors here and now commit their paper and themselves with a will and purpose inflexible as the cause in whose interest they propose to write." It at once opened a broadside upon the growing sentiment favorable to the organ.

In reply to its attack upon the use of modern expedients as innovations Mr. Errett wrote:

"Our editorial brethren of the Times are, with us, guilty of a great innovation in publishing a weekly religious newspaper; and if they do this as children of God, and it would be great injustice to indulge a contrary supposition, they are doing what they well know has neither a 'divine command' nor an 'approved precedent' to support it. When they preach they go into a meeting house, which is an innovation, and take up a hymn book, which is an innovation, and give out a hymn, which is an innovation and this hymn is sung to a tune, which is an innovation, by a choir, which is an innovation, by the aid of a tune-book and tuning-fork, which are innovations. They also read from a printed Bible, which is an innovation. Yet who dreams, in all this, of any innovation on the law of God or the authority of the Lord Jesus Christ?"

Where the sentiment was unanimous, either in favor of or in opposition to the the organ, peace and harmony, of course, prevailed in the local congregations. But where sentiment was divided, the influence of the church was often neutralized and its life even imperiled. In many places the public witnessed the spectacle of a church whose leading tenet was the union of all Christians going to pieces over the use of a mere expedient.

The situation was critical. The anti-organ element, though usually in the minority, were for refusing all fellowship with their more progressive brethren. Mr. Franklin's advice, while leading to mutual division in many places, was somewhat temperate. "Declare non-fellowship with no one," he wrote; "say nothing about refusing fellowship, or leaving the church, or withdrawing from it. But deliberately and quietly meet in another place and worship regularly according to the Scriptures. Attend to the breaking of the loaf, the apostles' teaching, prayers, praise and contribution. Worship in spirit, and in truth. Talk of no new church, second church, nor anything of the kind."

Mr. Errett, while claiming for himself and those who saw with him the broadest liberty, now counseled the exercise of charity. "Our own course," he wrote in the Standard of 1870, "is clear. We shall advise our brethren everywhere, for the the sake of peace and from a reverentlal regard to one of the noblest lessons of Christian brotherhood,to discard the use of instruments in the churches. At the same time, we set ourselves most decidedly against all attempts to create divisions in churches on the ground of differences in regard to an expedient. The law which binds it on us to please our neighbor for his good is not more imparative than that which forbids us to judge our brother in regard to such matters. Let a sacred regard to the rights of others and an equally sacred regard to the conscience of others possess us, and we shall master the difficulties of this question."

The controvery was never settled by the scribes. A long-suffering public at last grew weary of a discussion that was fruitless of spiritual results and it was dropped. But by the exercise of charity and wisdom the problem has solved itself, and with few exceptions the churches have become progressive and aggressive, ready to employ any expedient that will contribute to one sublime purpose—the conquest of the world to the cross of Christ, holding that the silence of the Scriptures gives us liberty in the use of means that are not out of harmony with its spirit.

WHAT IS INSPIRATION?

JAMES H. BROOKS.

(a) Inspiration in its highest sense is the immediate communication of knowledge to the human mind by the Spirit of God; but it is commonly used by divines, in a less strict and proper sense, to denote such a degree of divine influence, assistance or guidance as enabled the authors of the Scriptures to communicate knowledge to others without error or mistake, whether the subjects of such communications were things then immediately revealed to those who declared them, or things with which they were before acquainted. Hence it is usually divided into three kinds—revelation, suggestion and superintendence.—Bible Encyclopædia, edited by Edward Robinson, D. D., LL. D.

(b) Inspiration is the gift of infallibility in teaching moral and religious truth.—Joseph Cook.

(c) When the apostles were filled with the Holy Spirit, and began to speak as the Spirit gave them utterance, the promise of a baptism in the Holy Spirit and of power from on high was fulfilled. The power took effect on their minds, and its presence was manifested outwardly in their speaking in languages which they had never learned. The inner and mental miracle was demonstrated by the outward and physical. The promise, "It shall not be ye that speak, but the Spirit of my Father that speaketh in you," was fulfilled in its most literal sense; for the very words which they uttered were supplied to them immediately by the Spirit. They are not anxious how or what they should say, neither did they premeditate. It was literally given them in that hour what they should speak.—New Commentary on Acts, pp. 22, 23.

(d) No prophecy ever came by the will of man; but men spoke from God, being moved by the Holy Spirit.—2 Pet. 1:21 cf.; 1 Cor. 2:11-13.

(e) Every Scripture inspired of God is also profitable for teaching, for reproof, for correction, for instruction [or discipline] which is righteousness.—2 Tim. 3:16, R. V.

(f) I have never expressed, nor do I have any doubts whatever as to the inspiration of the Bible, or that its contents—or is, if you prefer that expression—a revelation from God. In spite of this fact, however, I am not ready to give a definition of inspiration. It is much easier to observe what inspiration does than to tell what it is. It is a process, and not merely a fact; a mode of operation, and not a result simply.—Prof. O. T. Morgan, quoted in the Christian Standard, June 17, 1899.

(g) No definition of inspiration that we now remember has been found entirely satisfactory. In a general way what we mean by inspiration of the Scriptures is that the men who wrote them were so influenced and guided by the Spirit of God as to make their writings a safe guide as to what is essential truth and what is the will of God.—CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST, June 15, 1899.

(h) What is the Bible? It is the aggregation of sixty-six books written by thirty-six men under the inspiration of God.—Ashley S. Johnson, in Tennessee Evangelist, p. 18.

(i) The following is taken from the Introduction of Moses E. Lard's Commentary on Romans. It is here quoted in the hope of giving some light on the live issue, "What is inspiration in the biblical sense of that term?"

As it is impossible to study Paul for a moment, or indeed any other apostle [prophet or sacred writer] or to attempt any proper estimate of him, either as a speaker or writer, without the subject of inspiration constantly obtruding itself upon our notice, this seems a suitable place to pause a little on that curious topic. . . . What, then, is inspiration? I answer that in its fullness it conprehends five things: 1. The personal presence in the inspired of the Holy Spirit; 2. The communication to his mind of ideas; 3. Selecting the words in which those ideas shall be spoken or written; 4. Endowing him with power of speech; 5. Conferring upon him power to work miracles in order to confirm whatever message he delivers. On each of these items I think it well to add a few reflections:

1. The personal presence in the inspired of the Holy Spirit. If I am asked how the Holy Spirit can personally dwell in the human being I reply, I do not know. Neither do I know or understand how the human spirit can dwell in a human body; but I profoundly believe the fact. . . . The Savior, in speaking to the apostles, said: "He dwells with you and is in you" (John 14:17, revised Greek text). [See R. V.] . . . But the mere indwelling of the Holy Spirit is not inspiration, although it is the antecedent to it and necessary condition of it. . . . Something more, then, than mere indwelling is essential to inspiration.

2. The communication to his mind of ideas. No matter whether these ideas be original or revived, whether they be of things in heaven or things in earth, the communication of them to the mind is essential to inspiration. . . . Another step is necessary.

3. Selecting the words in which the idea communicated shall be spoken or written. Were the ideas simply communicated and the endowed then left to select the words in which to impart them, we can readily see how great blunders might be committed and disastrous results follow. The Holy Spirit selects the words. See 1 Cor. 2:13.

4. Endowing with the power of speech. The language which would have to be used in conveying the ideas might be unknown to the endowed. In that case it would certainly be necessary to invest him with the power to use it. ["Back to Pentecost!"]

5. Conferring power to work miracles in order to confirm whatever message is delivered. . . . . [Please read in this connection McGarvey on Acts 2:1-32]. When, now, I speak of Paul as inspired, no one can misunderstand me; nor, which is far more important, provided what has just been said is correct, can any one misunderstand what inspiration itself is. It is proper to add that only when acting as an apostle or when preaching the gospel or writing for Christ can Paul or any one else properly be said to be under the influence of inspiration. . . . . But whenever his acts concerned Christ or involved the welfare of human beings; whenever, in other words, he acted officially, then even a fault was not allowable. Confessedly this places the matter of revelation on high ground, but not on ground too high to be pertectly safe.

As Mr. Campbell would say, "For the special benefit of the more uneducated," of whom I am the chief, have I compiled the foregoing. I thought perhaps the laymen, "the common people," would hear gladly a few things of "revelation on high ground." I presume as to Mr. Lard's position his would be styled "the plenary," "the verbal" theory of inspiration. To my mind I see little that would lead one to speak of it as "gradation" or "partial degrees of inspiration." I've not written for the "adverse critics." I seek the "inner light." For the benefit of "the more uneducated" I may write up another batch of excerpts on "theories of inspiration."

FACTS AND FALLACIES OF CHRISTIAN SCIENCE.

W. J. LHAMON.

(CONCLUDED.)

Text:—Be not rash with thy mouth, and let not thine heart be hasty to utter anything before God. for God is in heaven and thou upon earth; therefore let thy words be few.—Eccl. 5:2.

Christian Science is fundamentally pantheistic. There are passages in "Science and Health" in which an attempt is made to defend the personality of God, but inevitably the author relapses into her normal way of thinking, namely, that God is a principle rather than a person. Her definition of God is given in the following list of words, quite loosely proposed by her as synonyms: "Principle, life, truth, love, soul, spirit, mind." The student will note that the word person is not in this list. Man is defined as "God's universal idea, individual, perfect, eternal." Idea is defined as "an image in mind; the immediate object of understanding." Thus God is reduced to a sort of vague spirit, or mind-principle, and man is reduced to an image in the mind of this principle. Quite consistently with this pantheistic conception of God the terms souls and spirits are rejected as plurals, being as improper as the term gods. "Soul or spirit," it is said, "signifies Deity, and nothing else." Thus all material things are reduced to nothingness, and all souls and minds and spirits are resolved into the one Soul, the absolute and eternal Principle, what Spinoza called "the one and universal Substance." Practically thus one resolves himself into Deity, and then says, since Deity cannot be sick or sinful, so neither can I. In keeping with this rash mouth-talk, this theoretical definition of one's self, Mrs. Eddy rises at times, we charitably trust unconsciously to herself, to a repulsive egotism. No other than the following paragraph need be cited as exemplifying the superhuman character she attributes to herself. She says, "The author subscribed to an orthodox creed in early youth, and tried to adhere to it until she caught the first gleam of that which interprets God as above mortal view. This sense rebuked human beliefs, and gave the spiritual import of all things from the divine Mind, expressed through science. Since then her highest creed has been divine science, which, reduced to human apprehension, she has named Christian Science. This science teaches man that God is the only life, and this life is truth and love; that God is to be understood, adored and demonstrated; that divine truth casts out human error and heals the sick." Who is this that gets "gleams" of God that are "above mortal view?" Who is this that rebukes human beliefs and "gives the spiritual import of all things from the divine mind?" She must be more than human who reduces divine science to human apprehension! All along we have been thinking that it was Jesus who was to make God known to us, and that he was the only mediator between God and man, and we have worshiped him accordingly. But here is another one who steps in to reduce divine things to apprehension! What shall we do with her? Take other expressions of similar import. On page 28 she says, "The true Logos is demonstrably Christian Science." On page 3 may be found the boldest claim to revelation outside the puerilities of a seance room or the ravings of a maniac's cell; she says, "I won my way to absolute conclusions through divine revelation, reason and experiment. The revelation of truth in the understanding came to me gradually, and apparantly through divine power. When a new spiritual idea is borne to earth, the prophetic Scripture of Isaiah is renewedly fulfilled: "Unto us a child is born, . . . and his name shall be called Wonderful."

In view of these astonishing claims we were not surprised upon reading, recently, that there is a species of worship incipient among Mrs. Eddy's followers, a sort of "Mary-Eddyolatry," as it has aptly been called. One of these idolators indulges in the following strain: "O Father-love and Mother-love and Christ-love, trinity; God's womanhood has brought all his true divinity." Such blasphemous claims, on the one hand springing from a teaching distinctively pantheistic, and inviting, on the other hand, such an incipient idolatry, should give us pause.

This pantheistic conception dominates several other phases of Christian Science teaching, such as sin, repentance, prayer, forgiveness, and Christ and Satan. Sin is not the transgression of law, and is not sinful, and is not to be forgiven; it is an illusion to be corrected. Prayer is not a petition to a personal God and Father by a trusting child, but rather a mediation on the divine Principle, or a working out of our own destiny upon the inflexible planes of the divine Principle. This is a cardinal question, and a quotation must be given. Here it is: "Who would stand before a blackboard and pray to the principle of mathematics to work out the problem? The rule is already established, and it is our task to work out the solution. Shall we ask the divine Principle of all goodness to do his own work? That work was finished long ago; and we have only to avail ourselves of God's rule, in order to receive the blessing."

The Christ of Christian Science is the ancient heretical Christ of the Gnostics, denying the real union of the divine and human in the person of our Savior. He is a dual personality, consisting of Christ the invisible and incorporeal, and of Jesus the corporeal or bodily existence. This dual conception continued till the ascension when Jesus disappeared, and Christ continued to exist "in the eternal order of Divine Science, taking away the sins of the world as the Christ had always done, even before the human Jesus was incarnate to mortal eyes."

The Satan of Christian Science is, like sin and suffering, only an illusion. In short, there is nothing but Mind, with a big M, and Mind is nothing but Principle with a big P.

Here is an interesting if not an exhaustive summary of Mrs. Eddy's denials. They are—

1. The denial of the personality of God.
2. Of the personality of man or the Ego.
3. Of the proper personality and mediatorship of Christ.
4. Of the efficacy of prayer.
5. Of the sinfulness of sin.
6. Of the forgiveness of sin.
7. Of the reality of matter.
8. Of the reality of sickness, disease and death.
9. There is the denial of truthful functions to our eyes and ears and toes and fingertips.

Christian Science would have us discard the evidence of our five senses regarding the whole outer world, and accept instead a metaphysical dogma upon the ipse dixit of Mrs. Eddy, that stultifies sense and common sense. If the outer world be not real our eyes and ears and fingers are continually lying to us; and are not the lies real? If Mrs. Eddy is right the lies are real lies; and if so, then there is something real besides her hypothetical principle, and if that be so, her god Pan does not stand alone after all. If all material things are but illusions, the illusions themselves must be real illusions; but how can real illusions appeal to unreal beings. The illusion appeals to me, and I take note of it; what, then, must I be? For Mrs. Eddy's own sake I argue her back into a reality, to whom this illusive outer would make its appeal. But if she is a reality, why may not the rest of us be likewise realities? And if we are real, why may not the earth on which we stand be also real?

But dismissing all this, it should be noted that Christian Science makes its appeal, not to well-trained minds by virtue of its philosophical consistency; if so, it would have taken the whole world captive many centuries ago, for idealism and pantheism are not new. It appeals, on the contrary, to people who have sick bodies and who are minus philosophical and scientific and even literary training. It is one of the incongruities of this system that it wins its way through the medium of the sickness, the sores and the diseases that it denies. That instances of healing are to be credited to this and the other adherents of Christian Science we are quick to concede, but that such cases of healing are done by virtue of their philosophical theory we flatly deny. Any other theory of mental therapeutics would work just as well. Indeed, there are others working side by side with this presumable science constantly rivaling its wonders. Spiritualism and hypnotism may be ranked with Christian Science in therapeutics, and faith-healing must be ranked above it by those who believe in prayer and a personal God. Many cases of healing in answer to prayer are just as well authenticated as any of those of Christian Science. Other cases of healing by hypnotic suggestion are reported and accredited. In addition to all else many people get well without any doctor of any sort. That people get well under Christian Science treatment is no proof of the truthfulness of this teaching, for they also die under it. If it were true, they should never die; they should simply get death out of their "mortal minds" and then live forever. The whole virtue of their system lies, let it be repeated, not in their theory, but in their emphasis upon mental suggestion. The power of the mind over the body is far greater than has been supposed, and preachers and physicians have not given enough heed to it. It is a great field for study, and one dares to predict that it will be better understood in the future than it has been in the past. When it has been thoroughly explored there will be no field left for Christian Science. Some physicians already understand it and occasionaly act upon it. It is reported that recently one such in Chicago had a patient who would not try to get out of bed, though he knew she could. At a certain hour he arranged to have every member of the family away from the house and an incipient fire started in one of the rooms. The plan worked admiraly. The patient was found in the back yard crying lustily for the fire department!

One step further: We may go so far as to suppose that there are psychic healers among Christian Scientists, just as we think there are such who have never heard of that doctrine. Surely, at least we hear of strange things done in the way of healing by people who are outside as well as inside of that school.

What, then, may be the legitimate conclusions about it? First, that it is anti-biblical, and therefore anti-Christian; secondly, that it is anti-rational and therefore unphilosophical; thirdly, that its cases of healing may as well be explained, or even better, by other theories; fourthly, that its cases of failure, which are numerous and sad as those of any school of medicine, mark it at the very highest as among the fallible and experimental methods of men; fifthly, Christian Science is very rash with its mouth-talk, and has been entirely too hasty to utter many things before God, and would have been far more highly accredited had its words been fewer upon the higher themes it has attempted in vain.

A TRUE DISCIPLESHIP.

J. M. LOWE.

The age calls loudly for a nobler discipleship, not only "more men and women, but more man and woman." Temptations are greater than ever before. Evil men and seducers are waxing worse and worse. Where the light is brightest the shadows are deepest. Hence we have to-day the best men and the worst men the world has ever seen. Our immense material wealth threatens to cast our spiritual life into the background. So, too, there is danger that we may be so charmed by the brilliance of invention that we will forget the calls of conscience and the cross of Christ. We must remember that all the splendid achievements of the nineteenth century cannot change the quality of our life. "It is a fatal delusion to imagine that the arts of life which only enlarge its resources have any necessary tendency to improve its spirit, or that the completest acquaintance with science affords any guarantee of higher goodness. No laboratory can neutralize the poison of the passions or find a crucible to make the hard necleus of the heart flow down. No observatory can show us a new constellation of the virtues or correct the aberration of life's true light." All the electric and calicium lights upon earth cannot drive a single shadow from the human heart. All the water in all the seas cannot wash away a single human sin. There is not enough power in all the engines in the world to overcome one temptation, nor enough wisdom in science to give a new moral precept. Steam, electricity and compressed air combined cannot lift the burden of responsibility from the human soul. There will never be a substitute for righteousness. Sin will never cease to be sinful.

It takes no moral or spiritual qualification to live in a modern palace, ride on an electric car, talk through a telphone, operate a projectiscope or travel in a moving palace. Both sin and righteousness have a longer leverage by reason of modern improvements. It is an even race between good and evil so far as these things are concerned. The demand is for a true discipleship. No half-hearted Christianity can tell in an age like ours.

What is a true discipleship? First, it is not a belief in the doctrine of Christ, nor an attempt to reproduce the apostolic forms of worship. It is not a belief in the miraculous conception and birth of Christ, nor in the resurrection and ascension. Nor is it a belief that Jesus is the Son of God. All these may be included, but they come far from exhausting the idea of a discipleship. Second, a true discipleship consists in a life like that of Christ; or better—the Christ-life. I mean to say that a Christian life does not consist in following Christ simply, or in living a life like his, but in living the same life he lived. It must be composed of the same material of which his life was composed. The life of the branch is not like that of the vine, it is the same life.

The largest word in life is the word motive. No other word so nearly stands for the whole of life. "As a man thinketh in his heart, so is he." Jesus' motive was his Father's will. This was his meat and his drink. To be moved by this motive is to live the Christ-life.

The great question is—are we willing to do the Father's will? It is well enough to follow our own wills if we can, but we cannot. We are called upon to pass through trials far from our own choosing. We would fain escape the shadows. We would prefer gladness to grief, smiles to tears. If we could mark out our own pathway it would wind through shady glens, it would loiter by murmuring streamlets, it would wander among thornless roses of pleasure and over the sunny slopes of peace. We would close our ears to the discords of a grief-stricken world and revel in the summerland of song. Who follows his own will? No one. Was it your own will that led you to that open grave in which you buried the remains of departed love? Is it your will by which the thorns are under your feet and the storm clouds over your head? Is it your will that is leading you into the valley of the shadow of death?

"In golden youth when seems the earth
A summerland of singing mirth,
When souls are glad and hearts are light,
And not a shadow lurks in sight,
We do not know it, but there lies
Somewhere, veiled 'neath evening skies,
A garden which we all must see,
The garden of Gethsemane.

"Down shadowy lanes, across strange streams,
Bridged over by our broken dreams,
Behind the misty cap of years,
Beyond the great salt fount of tears,
The garden lies. Strive as you may,
You cannot miss it in your way.
All paths that have been or shall be,
Pass somewhere through Gethsemane."

It is evident that no one can do his own will. There are many times when our wills must stand aside while another's will is done. It is well, then, to bury our wills at once in the divine will and live a "surrendered life." Then, when the time comes that another will must be done, there will be no sudden sad surprise.

Herein lies the secret of a happy life. There is no conflict in the life of him who does God's will. To him all things work together for good. He is never disappointed. The victory is won. He has already entered heaven's gate and is speeding on his way toward the river beyond which there rise the evergreen hills. Eternal life has begun.

With the Christian as with his Lord there is but one question—what is the Father's will? This question sincerely asked and honestly answered, will correct many a crooked life. It may deprive of some pleasures, but it gives instead a higher pleasure, a diviner joy. Here the soul mounts to its sublimest satisfactions, its holiest delights. This life, so sweet, so serene, filled and thrilled with the will of God, will not tremble upon the brink of any earthly woe. There is no height beyond this. There is no altitude beyond that on which man walks with God. A constant companionship with the divine is the highest privilege of men or angels.

"Still, still with Thee when purple morning breaketh;
When the bird waketh and the shadows flee,
Fairer than morning, lovlier than daylight,
Dawns the sweet consciousness—I am with Thee."

Des Moines, Ia.

The New York Observer, in speaking of the success of the church in her mission in the world, a few weeks ago, said:

The church will be successful in her holy and world-wide mission, in proportion as her preachers and teachers are faithful in proclaiming boldly and fearlessly the truths of the gospel. This world will never be converted to Christ by a half-hearted and cowardly ministry. It is better to probe the wounds of sinners deeply than to heal them sligthly. The apostles felt this, and so did the reformers, and so did the Puritans. The Puritans are open to criticism, but they loved Christ and his gospel. They knew whom they believed and what they believed; they had the courage of their convictions. They did not profess one thing and preach another. They believed that holy living is much better than holy talking. They believed that religious teachers have no more right to violate their religious pledges than business men have to violate their business pledges. They believed that when a minister changed his creed, he ought, at the same time, to change his church relations. Those old worthies were not over æsthetic. They were not so æsthetic in the pulpit as to administer an anæsthetic to the pew. Their successors, however, were æsthetic enough. They were, with some noble exceptions, little more than a band of dilettanti essayists. Their critics tell us that they aped Epictetus and Addison. They seemed to be more in love with the smooth sayings of Seneca, than with the inspired writings of St. Paul. The all-important question: "What must I do to be saved?" was left unanswered. They were more anxious about the style of their sentences than about the salvation of their hearers. They would rather avoid a solecism, than to secure the salvation of a soul. They would permit a sinner to perish ignominiously rather than save him roughly.

Not thus did Christ and his apostles preach. Not thus did the church fathers, and the great reformers preach. Not thus should any one who holds Christ's commission preach. In godly sincerity and with simplicity the apostles preached and prayed, and labored; and, notwithstanding the strongest opposition, they were successful. They did not wrestle with shadows, nor did they engage in hot debates over misty metaphysics. They did not get excited, and call each other ugly names over the subject of auricular confession, nor did they waste their precious time in trying to prove to intelligent Christians that the evidence of their senses is not trustworthy. The irrational and unscriptural doctrine of transubstantiation was not then invented, and hence it did not trouble them; nor did they once mention the subject of a "reserved sacrament." They had other and better business to which they devoted all their energy. Their business was to preach the gospel, to save sinners and edify the church, and their example is worthy of imitation until the end of time.

Our Budget.

—Church Extension offering Sept. 3rd.

—Church Extension preparation now.

—Church Extension facts in this paper.

—Church Extension resources in the churches.

—The Jubilee Convention is to be a crown of rejoicing.

—Less than two months yet remain of the missionary year.

—The indications are that this will be another year of bountiful harvests throughout the land.

—Another year of material prosperity ought to have a wonderful influence upon the products of the Lord's vineyard.

—As the new century approaches our efforts to bring about the best possible conditions for its introduction ought to be greatly augmented.

—In our Personal Mention column last week, in quoting from the program of the Macatawa Park Assembly, the quotation mark, instead of including only the title, Rev., before Rev. J. M. Campbell's name, should have included the entire sentence, thus: "Prof. H. L. Willett, Rev. Jas. M. Campbell and Hiram Van Kirk are to treat the subject of Apostolic Christianity." Also the name, Faurot, in our Budget mention, appeared as "Faust." The name, as elsewhere issued in the same paper, is correct.

—It was proposed at Chattanoogo that the Foreign Society come to the next convention with $150,000 from the churches, the Home Society with $100,000, the C. W. B. M. with $90,000 and the Church Extension Fund raised to at least $210,000, and it now looks as if these highwater marks will all be touched ere the Jubilee Convention convenes. A little energy all along the line will easily raise these sums this year. Ought not this to touch our pride as well as our missionary spirit, so that there shall be nothing lacking at any point? Brethren, let us come to the rescue with willing hands and open hearts.

—Church Extension has already helped 450 churches since the beginning and 125 of these have paid back their loans in full. Over $108,000 has been returned to the board in loans and interest since this good work began. But the work is only begun. We have 2,700 homeless missions, 1,800 of which have applied to the Church Extension Board for help in the last ten years. All of these could have raised from two-thirds to three-fourths of the money needed on the ground if they could have gotten a loan from the Church Extension Board to have helped them out. Here, then, is a great loss of funds to the church just for want of a larger Church Extension fund.

—The eleventh annual convention of the Churches of Christ of Southern California will be held at Long Beach, Aug. 10-20. For this convention a beautiful souvenir program in the finest of the printer's art has been published. It is in beautifully tinted cover, illustrated with half-tone pictures of Long Beach scenes and attractions. The program of the convention is a good one, showing that the Beach pleasures will be but side issues to the great spiritual and intellectual feast in store for those who shall be so fortunate as to attend.

—An obituary of J. W. Coggins, who died at the residence of his son, J. C. Coggins, Independence, Kan., July 31st, will appear in our next issue. This is the father of J. C., J. W. and L. B. Coggins, all preachers of the gospel, and to all of whom we extend our sympathy.

—We publish in this issue the leading parts of a sermon recently preached in Des Moines, Ia., by J. M. Lowe on "True Discipleship," to which we invite your special attention. It is truly a sermon for the times. Such a view of the world can be had only from one of the highest of the pinnacles of the temple of God.

—The rates for lodging and breakfast in Cincinnati during the convention will be from 50 cents to 75 cents in the homes. Engage your places NOW.

—Two entire hotels and many homes have already been engaged by delegates for the Jubilee Convention at Cincinnati Oct. 13-20.

—Bulletin No. 2, with information about the Jubilee Convention, is just out and reproduced in this paper for the benefit of our readers. The cut of the Central Christian Church which appears in the Bulletin is not reproduced. For copies of this Bulletin for distribution in your community, school, church or Endeavor Society send to Geo. A. Miller, Central Christian Church, Cincinnati, Ohio.

—The same spirit that has moved the offering for Home Missions to the front put into our Church Extension campaign will bring its offering in September up alongside our other missionary interests, where it belongs. The more spirit in the work the lighter the burdens and the greater the results. What we do should be done willingly and with our might. But this the churches will not do unless aroused to it by the preachers. The success or failure of an offering for Church Extension rests in a great degree upon the pastors and evangelists. Will they do their whole duty in arousing the churches everywhere to a glorious offering on the first Lord's day in September?

—A copy of Business and Christianity for March and April ought to be in the hand of every Disciple of Christ in the land. It is devoted largely to the interest of the offering for Church Extension on the first Sunday in September, and contains so many inspiring facts that if read will guarantee a greatly increased offering next month. Preachers should send for copies of this magazine for material for sermons on Church Extension and for distribution in their churches. The editorial statements are strong and terse, and clearly reveal the importance of this branch of our missionary work. The article on the Annuity plan is especially worthy of a careful reading and should not be overlooked by our preachers. Also the article on "How to Enlist Preachers and Churches in Church Extension." Send for the magazine and study these articles. Address G. W. Muckley, Cor. Sec., Waterworks Bldg., Kansas City, Mo.

—By mistake our editorial notice of Church Extension Day got in the wrong part of our paper last week. We hope, however, that it was not missed by any of our readers. Remember that the first Sunday in September is the day for an offering for Church Extension and the $15,000 are needed in order to reach the mark set by the last convention. We want a quarter of a million dollars by the close of the year 1900. There were $192,000 in this fund Aug. 1st, and $210,000 should be reached by the time of the Jubilee Convention in order to reach the $250,000 by the end of 1900. All of the other societies have greatly exceeded their past records and there is no reason why church extension should not go grandly forward in its next annual offering. Remember the day and the cause.

—There have been 950 churches organized in the last two years; 400 of these were able to build homes without outside help, but 450 were not. And yet of these the board could help but 100. The rest had to go without help, and without homes. A larger fund in the hands of the Board of Church Extension would greatly relieve this condition of things. The board has already made 50 loans this year, aggregating over $38,000, and have promised over 50 other churches loans conditioned on the September offering. Shall they be disappointed?

—The article by Bro. Shepherd in reply to A. B. Jones' article on Formal and Actual Remission, referred to in Our Budget last week, had to be left over to this week because of the pressure for space.

—We publish the Foreign Christian Missionary Society's provisional program for the Jubille Convention at Cincinnati in October, in another part of this paper. Read it and see some of the great things in store for the convention from the foreign society and field.

—The last general offering for missions before the Jubilee Convention is the offering for Church Extension.

—The Church Extension funds of the Protestant churches of the United States have builded 30,000 church buildings during the last forty years.—Business in Christianity.

—On July 30th the church at Davenport, Iowa, celebrated its 60th anniversary, and entered upon its 7th decade free from debt. Instead of the usual custom of burning the old mortgage, however, it was given to Leslie League—Ladies' Aid Society—for preservatson. In presenting the mortgage to the league the pastor, C. C. Davis, said that the ladies of the church were to blame for paying it off and that it belonged to them as a trophy of their achievement. The occasion was as a natural consequence one of rejoicing and we congratulate the ladies, the pastor and the church on their happy deliverance from the cruel bonds of a church debt. May peace and prosperity now abound as never before is our sincere prayer.

—The program of the Mississippi Christian Missionary Convention, to be held at West Point, September 12-15, will appear in our next issue.

—Perhaps the following short paragraph from a recent number of the St. Louis Christian Advocate may be helpful to some of our preachers by way of suggestion:

A clergyman of Chicago, noticing what every other clergyman must have observed from time to time, the preponderance of women over men in his congregation, determined to investigate the reasons which keep men from the church, therefore addressed about 1,000 letters to as many men, inquiring the cause. He received, among other plain answers, many such as these: "I can worship alone." "Can be better entertained elsewhere." "No confidence in the churches." "I do not need the church, and I guess it does not need me." "The church is a hospital, and I am not sick." "Indifference." "Lack of religious feeling."

—A new journal has just reached our table from Honolulu, named Austin's Hawaiian Weekly. Its appearance indicates that it might be a first-class journal from some of our larger Eastern cities. The paper, printing, half-tones and literature are all of the first-class order, and some names therein have a familiar sound to our ears. Theologically it leans upon the CHRISTIAN EVANGELIST. Austin's Weekly is devoted to the progress of the Pacific and of this its subscription price—$4.00 per year, $5 00 in the United States and Canada and $6.00 in other countries—would indicate that that country was enjoying a great wave. Two dollars per annum is now generally regarded as an exorbitant price for a first-class weekly journal in this country, especially for a church paper.

—A large number of Missouri's strong preachers are on the program for sermons and addresses at the Nodaway district convention, to be held in King City, August 20-31. It will be good to be there.

—Can a religious daily be supported? is a question now coming to the front in the religious world. That such a paper is needed is generally conceded; but it is feared that the lack of interest on the part of professed Christians in such an enterprise would defeat it. The ability to compete with the secular dailies, however, seems to be a greater obstacle. People generally clamor for the cheapest article. But there ought to be enough of the self-sacrificing spirit and appreciation of good morals in journalism to make such an enterprise a brilliant success. A great religious daily has been one of the predictions of the coming century, which we have thought will be realized.

—We appreciate the compliment which the Christian Index pays us by reprinting in its issue of July 12th a large portion of our editorial on "Harmony Among Disciples," in our issue of June 29th. Such efforts to extend the truth not only reveals a liberal spirit but shows an interest in the welfare of the brotherhood.

—Remember that we have 127 home missionary societies, district, state and national, sending out evangelists to organize churches and only one Church Extension fund. The gain in this fund over last year up to August 1st has been over $13,000. This is a fine increase, but it should be more than doubled by the September offering one month hence. The time is short and will require active work to make this offering what it should be. Let preachers and churches take hold of this at once and roll up a grand report for Church Extension at the Jubilee Convention.

—The Presbyterian Church in the United States, according to the Herald and Presbyter, has grown from 446,561 in 1870 to 983,907 in 1899. Their baptisms, so called, last year were adults, 17,682; infants, 24,998. Last year this church gave $1,095,311 for Home Missions, $764,976 for Foreign Missions and $101,597 for Church Erection. Their total giving for all purposes last year is placed at $13,777,717, or an average of about $14 per member for the entire membership. The baptisms, so called, in the Presbyterian Church, both infant and adult, were considerably below those of last year. The figures for last year are "adult baptisms, 21,574;" "infant, 27,768." On this point the Herald and Presbyter says "there should be no more retrogression."

—Commerce with mediums or spirits is forbidden by the church. Catholics are barred from any such intercourse under pain of mortal sin. This, of course, has always been the Catholic doctrine and discipline. Protestants have no such wholesome guidance. They are at liberty to consult with mediums, and are constantly duped and led astray by them.

The above is from the Church Progress, of this city, an organ of the Roman Catholic Church, and shows that that great religious body is not without some good qualities. But how about the worshiping of saints, the adoration of images and the healing virtue of dry bones, relics, beads, etc. Protestants are barred from such customs by their better knowledge of the true worship, while the Catholics have no such wholesome spiritual influence. They are at liberty to worship before images and are constantly duped and led astray by them.

—Church Extension goes upon the divine principle of helping those who help themselves. The board helps churches in such a way as to develop self-help. Churches are often encouraged by a loan from this fund to begin their chapel enterprise and go on to the completion of their building by their own resources, when they never would have begun had it not been for the promised loan from this fund.—Business in Christianity.

—On our first page this week appears the likeness of our Church Extension corresponding secretary, of whose life we present the following brief statement. G. W. Muckley was born Feb. 1st, 1861, in Tuscarawas Co., O. When 13 years old his parents moved to a farm near Canton, O.; when 18 years old he began teaching school, receiving the highest grade of certificate in the county. He entered Bethany College in 1882 and graduated in the classical course in 1886, delivering the valedictory address. In 1893 he received the degree of Master of Arts from his almamater. Upon leaving Bethany his purpose was to go to Johns Hopkins University and study for a professor of languages, but was dissuaded from that course by his friends and urged to enter the ministry. He graduated on the 18th of June, 1886, and the 4th of July took charge of the Fergus Street Church, Cincinnati, Ohio, to which he ministered for four years and four months. During this time the membership was increased from 40 to 300; missionary contributions run up into the hundreds, each year receiving an increase in his salary, thus proving that preaching, giving and getting collections for missions do not diminish a man's influence with his people. In October, 1890, F. M. Rains resigned the secretaryship of the Church Extension Fund and the board elected G. W. Muckley, who has served the board as corresponding secretary for now nearly nine years. When he took the work there was $33,000 in the fund. There is now over $194-000. He was married to Miss Hartman, daughter of Dr. Robt. L. Hartman and wife, of Independence, Pa., in August, 1888. They have a family of three bright, healthy children. Mr. Muckley's father and his wife's father were born in Germany. In Bro. Muckley's work he is compelled to be away from his family much of the time, to go out among the churches, addressing them from night to night. It is no small sacrifice for a wife to thus give up her husband. Mrs. Muckley has done it uncomplainingly and is a constant source of encouragement to her husband in his work. Bro. Muckley is now deeply engaged in the Church Extension campaign for the Church Extension offering on the first Sunday in September and will not be satisfied until everything has been done that can be done to arouse the churches and preachers to the greatest liberality possible in that offering.

—The followiug is from the Pittsburg Commercial Gazette and shows that the churches of that city are awake to the importance of the Jubilee Convention; also the convention for 1900:

Robert Latimer is chairman of the committee on transportation of the Pittsburg delegalion, and it is said that about 200 will go from this city and Allegheny. Rev. John A. Jayne, of the Observatory Hill Christian Church, Allegheny, is chairman of the committee on hotels, and has assured himself that the Pitsburg delegates will be well cared for.

The delegation from Pittsburg and Allegheny will go to the convention determined to secure it for Pittsburg for next year. There will be plenty of convention boomers and the city that takes the honor away from Pittsburg will be compelled to work very hard indeed. The committee which will look after the interests of Pittsburg is composed of Rev. T. E. Cramblet, pastor of the East End Church; Rev. W. J. Lhamon, of Allegheny; Rev. C. W. Iams, of Hazelwood, Rev. C. L. Thurgood, of Central Church, and Rev. O. H Phillips, of Braddock. This committee has organized and is ready for effective work in securing the convention. Pittsburg is now well equipped for holding such a convention. The sessions would of course be held in Duquesne Garden.

It is likely that the convention committee will issue in a short time a prospectus of Pittsburg showing what it is able to do with this convention, which is worthy of the name of a great convention. The average attendance is 15,000 and it is one of the largest religious gatherings of the year.

—The twelfth annual educational number of the Outlook has a group of articles on educational topics of decided timeliness and of equally decided general interest. The illustrations are numerous and excellent. Among the illustrated articles are "American Education at the Paris Exposition," by the American director of education and social economy for the exposition, Mr. Howard J. Rogers; an exceptionally scholarly and comprehensive paper on "The Educational Progress of the Year," by Professor Nicholas Murray Butler, and many other strong, interesting and timely articles. The cover design of this number is very attractive.

—Arrangements are on foot to run a special train from Springfield, Ill., to the Jubilee Convention. J. E. Lynn is the manager. Write him for particulars at Springfield, Ill.

—Recently a poor widow in Nebraska sent a hundred dollars to Church Extension. The woman who sent the money for her wrote as follows: "This is about the widow's mite, but it has long been her heart's desire to do this and feel that it is in memory of her daughter Martha and herself. I am glad I have been able to help her to do this and trust this money will do the good she has faith to believe it will." Also a widow in Virginia sent $100 on the Annuity plan. When poor widows give at the rate as the two cases jusst cited what ought the richer and abler men and women do for Church Extension? These widows doubtless feel that by these offerings to Church Extension the influence of their lives for Christ and the church will be greatly augmented and prolonged, and they think right about it. Such sacrifices are an inspiration and ought to be extremely contagious. We shall hope to hear of many more such examples of noble giving in the offering for Church Extension, now at hand.

PERSONAL MENTION.

A. C. McKeever has resigned the work at Nevada, Mo.

J. P. Rowlison, of Perry, Ia., has been selected as district evangelist.

J. E. Lynn, Springfield, has returned from Chicago, where he has been attending a course of lectures.

Charles E. Wells, of Mt. Ayr, has accepted a unaminous call to serve the church at Stuart, Ia., and will move this week.

J. L. Parsons is spending a few days in this city. He was at one time the pastor of the First Christian Church, of St. Louis.

James Small, of Des Moines, is in a gospel assembly meeting for the Storm Lake congregation. Two thousand people attended the services last Sunday.

W. F. Cowden, superintendent of our missions in the Northwest, was in Cincinnati last week and arranged a convention home for himself and Mrs. Cowden.

W. E. Harlow and Dr. Jno. Tinder, of Parsons, Kan., called at this office on last Monday morning. They are expecting to spend a few days in the city.

Pres. J. W. McGarvey, while in Cincinnati recently, arranged for room and board for the entire College of the Bible for the Jubilee Convention in October.

W. A. Harp, pastor at Portsmouth, Ohio, visited Cincinnati lately in the interest of his delegation. His wide-awake church will send from 50 to 100 delegates.

A. M. Harvuot visited Bethany Assembly, Ind., in the interest of the Jubilee Convention and now believes that many more than 1,000 will come from that state.

J. G. M. Luttenberger, of Dorchester, Ill., called at this office on his way to Princeton, Minnesota, where he is to hold a protracted meeting. If no preventing circumstances he may hold two or three meetings in that state before returning.

F. M. Rogers, of Edina, Mo., would be glad to correspond with any minister or church desiring pulpit supply during the month of August for one or more Sundays.

Jas. H. Brooks is doing some very energetic and telling work in Mississippi. He began a week's meeting at Guntown, July 30th, and follows with another at Baldwyn, Aug. 6th.

J. R. Mowry, pastor of the church in Maxwell, Iowa, has our sympathy in the recent loss of his wife. An obituary will be sent to appear in our columns.

R. A. Omer completed his summer engagement at Winchester last Lord's day and will begin evangelistic work with a meeting at Northboro, Iowa, commencing the second Sunday in this month.

The sermon preached by J. S. Myers, pastor of the First Christian Church, Philadelphia, Pa., on "The Good That Ingersol Has Done the Churches," was published in the Times of that city of July 31st.

S. W. Crutcher, of Pine Bluff, Ark., who has been "resting by preaching some as a change of work" at Morrell and Dumas, Ark., is now at home again. He has been doing some good work for the CHRISTIAN EVANGELIST on his trip.

H. W. Cies has resigned his pastorate at Craig, Missouri, and will evangelize the remainder of the year. Churches desiring meetings address him at Rockport, Mo. The church at Craig, Mo., is now without a pastor. Applicants will please address W. S. Thompson, Craig, Mo.

W. A. Green, evangelist, assisted by G. B. Williamson, singer, is holding a meeting at Hopewell Church, near Dorchester, Ill. Bro. Green has been appointed evangelist for Macoupin Co., Ill., and is highly commended as a young man of promise in the ministry.

Judging from a list of topics just received, Clark Braden, president Christian College, Alma, Ill., seems to have an address or lecture upon about every phase of infidelity and modern issues. He has debated these themes "in over 100 debates" and delivered "more than 5,000 lectures in the United States and Canada" during the last 40 years, besides his writings there on.

A. O. Swartwood, pastor Christian Church and E. Aston, pastor Presbyterian Church, Waterloo, Neb., will hold union services alternately in the two churches each Lord's day eve during the month of August. Elder Swartwood will preach the first sermon of the series Sunday evening, August 6th. Rev. Aston August 13. A splendid feeling is said to exist between the two churches.

Wm. H. Matlock, who has been spending three years traveling and studying in Europe, and who, during that period, has written frequent letters of foreign correspondence for the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST, has returned to his native land, a more intense American, he says, than ever. He is at present at Kahoka, Mo., with his parents, but expects to resume work in Iowa soon.

The new president of Bethany College has closed his work with the church at Washington, Pa. The church presented him with a purse and gave him on the evening of July 31st a farewell reception which was attended by about four hundred people. He is now established with his family at Pendleton Heights. He will devote his whole time to the affairs of the college, and will be glad to hear from those desiring catalogues or having anything of interest to communicate concerning the college. He should be addressed at Bethany, W. Va.

MACATAWA PARK PERSONALS.

Misses Metta Dowling and Martha E. Boyle have returned to St. Louis, leaving a void in "Edgewood-on-the-Lake."

J. J. Haley, after spending two weeks with his family here, has returned to Cynthiana for a time, but will resume his vacation later on. His congregation is engaged in building an elegant new church.

F. G. Tyrrell, of the First Church, Chicago, whose family has been at Macatawa Park during the summer, is spending a few weeks vacation with them. He reports his work in Chicago as making encouraging progress.

Wm. A. Bellamy, of Grand Rapids, Mich., a graduate of Hiram College, has been called to serve the church at Evansville, Ind., and will enter upon his work there the first Lord's day in September. He is spending the summer with his parents at the Park.

Levi Marshall, of Hannibal, and J. E. Lynn, of Springfield, Ill., passed through Macatawa Park and spent a day or two on their return from their summer outing. A note from J. E. Lynn to the editor says, "My two days at Macatawa Park has persuaded me to mark it down for my summering place next season."

J. H. Gilliland and family, of Bloomington, Ill., have arrived at the park and taken a handsome cottage on Cedar Walk, "Hastings on the Hill," just east of "Old Kaintuck" and "Ole Virginny," the names, respectively, of the cottages of J. J. Haley and J. Z. Tyler. Bro. Gilliland will remain until Sept. 1.

A. M. Atkinson and wife, with their daughter, Mrs. Howe, who have been spending a few weeks here for the daughter's health, have returned to Wabash. With characteristic foresight he has presented the editor a large and ornamental wastebasket for the new editorial sanctum by the lakeside. He asks us to remind the brethren that the Ministerial Relief Fund stands in need of means with which to meet the September allowance to its beneficiaries.

"Better Be Wise Than Rich."

Wise people are also rich when they know a perfect remedy for all annoying diseases of the blood, kidneys, liver and bowels. It is Hood's Sarsaparilla, which is perfect in its action—so regulates the entire system as to bring vigorous health.

Hood's Sarsaparilla
Never Disappoints

C. B. and A. A. Garrett and their wives, of Camp Point, Ill., have taken "The Bungalow" near Edgewood-on-the-Lake and will spend August here. P. V. Pope and wife, of Du Quoin, Ill., are quartered at Bro. Bellamy's cottage.

W. F. Richardson, of Kansas City, left us last week, after a two weeks' visit. His sorrow at parting was assuaged by his capture of a muskellunge, nearly six pounds weight, just before starting. We saw him do it, for he was fishing in our boat and he did it with "neatness and dispatch."

J. Z. Tyler, who has been absent from Macatawa Park for several days preaching and lecturing at Bethany Park Assembly, has returned and resumed his vacation. He reports the best assembly this year which has been held in many years, with a new and better outlook for the future. This will be good news for the friends of Bethany Assembly.

J. P. McKnight, pastor Christian Church at Peoria, Ill., occupied the platform of the auditorium at Macatawa Park last Sunday afternoon, preaching most acceptably to a large audience. J. S. Hughes conducted the beach service in the evening on the characteristics of "The Blessed Man." The attendance was large, as usual, and the interest good.

Prof. Graham Taylor, of the Chicago Theological Seminary and of "Chicago Commons," is about completing one of the handsomest cottages on the lake front, and is also engaged in erecting a building in "Chicago Commons" adapted to the needs of that social settlement. We have seen the plans of this building and the purposes to which it is to be devoted and we can but earnestly hope the Professor will be successful in raising the additional funds necessary to complete this building, as it will be a most useful adjunct in carrying forward the great work he is doing in that district of Chicago.

CHANGES.

St. Louis and Foreign Missions.

We have eleven churches in St. Louis. Eight of these churches observed the March offering for Foreign Missions, as follows:

Beulah, $4.26; Central, $428.56; Compton Heights, $10; First, $26.30; Fourth, $6; Fifth, $11.50; Mt. Cabanne, $141.28; West End, $20. Total, $647.90.

And of the eleven Sunday-schools in St. Louis, eight observed Children's Day for Heathen Missions, the first Sunday in June, as follows:

Beulah, $2.07; Central, $50; Fourth, $16.55 Fifth, $9.09; Mt. Cabanne, $1; Carendelet, $3.70; Second, $6.81; West End, $5. Total, $94.21.

The Christian Endeavor Societies of St. Louis have sent offerings for Foreign Missions as follows:

Mt. Cabanne, $15; Second, $5. Total, $20. Making a grand total for St. Louis of $762.11.

The time will no doubt come when the churches in St. Louis will average $1 per member for world-wide missions. The offerings from St. Louis have increased encouragingly in the past few years.

THE RECOMMENDATION OF THE NATIONAL CONVENTION

The National Convention at Indianapolis recommended that our churches commit themselves to the lifting of our Church Extension Fund to $250,000 by the close of 1900, and the Chattanooga Convention of last October enforced that resolution in the following language:

"We recommend that the members of this convention commit themselves without reserve to a systematic and enthusiastic effort to raise, during the ensuing year, $100,000 for Home Missions, and to swell the Extension Fund to a quarter of a million by the close of 1900."

There is no question in the minds of those who voted for the recommendation as to the great importance of doing our duty to the Church Extension Fund in the Jubilee Year. We are urged to swell the Extension Fund to a quarter of a million by the close of the year 1900. To raise the proper portion of it this year is as imperative as to seek to raise $100,000 for Home Missions, or we cannot reach the goal next year.

On July 1 our Extension Fund was $187,635.45. This means that we must have a clear gain of $15,000 in round numbers by September 30 in order to do our part of the work this year. That would make $200,000 to report to the Jubilee Convention. And what would the Jubilee Convention be with all the other missionary funds reporting great gains unless our Extension Fund reports itself well on the road to the $250,000? Thus far, during the missionary year, the receipts are, to July 1, $20,641.29, a net gain over the same period of last year of $8,404.06. These are the receipts from the field. The interest will bring the new receipts up to something over $25,000. This is very encouraging, and we must keep it going. The September offering must tell for great things. July and August will yield but small amounts. During these months the churches are looking forward to the approaching September offering. It is the church, not asleep, but resting on its arms, recuperating and preparing for the annual collection. The people will be aroused and will do their duty when the captains of the congregations, the preachers, make the call.

It is a most gratifying fact that so many of our ministers are taking their vacation in July, after Educational Day, in order that they may be at home during the middle and latter part of August to prepare their people for the September offering. There can be no question as to our people having a Church Extension Fund as respectable and as adequate to our needs as have other religious bodies, when our preachers are once thoroughly aroused. If the preachers open the church door and let Church Extension come in with its great and sensible plea, there can be no doubt as to the results. Let us remember that it is our duty, this Jubilee Year, to work for "$250,000 by the close of 1900," as certainly as to reach $100,000 for Home Missions, $150.000 for Foreign Missions and $90,000 for the C. W. B. M. Let the word go forth from all our missionary pulpits that we shall do our part to raise this year's portion of the $250,000. In order that there may be no failure, the the Board of Church Extension will mail a just apportionment to each missionary congregation in the brotherhood, and it is hoped and believed that the reasonable amount asked will be forthcoming in September.

Send to G. W. Muckley, Cor. Sec., for supplies of literature and collection envelopes. Address him 600 Waterworks Building, and they will be sent free.

"That New Dictionary of the Bible."

In the Christian Standard of July 1 I find an article from the critical pen of Prof. J. W. McGarvey which, to me, is very disappointing. Usually the Professor's criticisms are read with both pleasure and profit. Under the above caption Bro. McGarvey quotes from a writer in the Outlook, as follows:

"In the account of the genealogy of Jesus Christ this dictionary states, with equal frankness, that the attempt to vindicate the accuracy of the two genealogies given respectively by Matthew and Luke has been abandoned by nearly all writers of authority as a violation of the text or of historical credibility, and declares that there is only one way of saving the accuracy of either account: 'By thus throwing all the burden of inaccuracy on Matthew we may rescue at least a possibility of accuracy for Luke.'"

The question involved in the above excerpt has been a fruitful source of great perplexity to the writer's mind, as it doubtless has been to that of many other close students of the Bible. From my acquaintance with Prof. McGarvey as a thorough, bold and independent Bible critic I had reason to expect at least a reasonable effort to harmonize the discrepancies, real or supposed, which are found to exist between the statements of Matthew and Luke respecting the genealogical line of descent of Jesus Christ from Abraham. For years the writer had sought information upon this vexed question, but to very little purpose. But when Bro. McGarvey took up his pen, usually so clear and convincing, we had reason to expect some additional light on this grave question. Imagine my surprise and disappointment when, after quoting the passage cited, instead of undertaking to clear up the mystery in which this question is involved, he lightly waves it aside with a single stroke of the pen. "Infidels," said he, "have been telling us these things for a long time. Are they less untrue now than when infidels alone believed them?"

Now, seriously, why should Bro. McGarvey, after raising the question himself, put it lightly aside with a mere wave of the hand, without even so much as attempting a single word of explanation? The fact that "infidels have been telling us these things for a long time" explains nothing. The question is left right where it was before, and affords us no relief whatever. Why is it thus? If the question is worth the raising it is certainly worthy of serious consideration.

Besides this, Bro. McGarvey has raised a question in the minds of his readers as to where he stands on this genealogical question. The writers of the new dictionary in question seem to be of the opinion that the accuracy of Luke's account may possibly be rescued by "throwing all the burden of inaccuracy" upon Matthew, but as far as any statement from the Professor is concerned we are left in the dark as to where he stands relative to this point. Does Bro. McGarvey wish us to infer from his silence that he is in favor of "throwing all the burden of accuracy" upon Matthew? Or does he wish us to understand that both accounts are correct in spite of the conflict between them? Adcording to the authorities quoted there seems to be an opinion largely prevalent among scholars that an irreconcilable disagreement exists between Matthew and Luke on the question of genealogy. If this view is erroneous, then it seems imperative that the greater light should be turned on that the error may be dispelled.

While the writer has little patience and less sympathy with the extreme, and, we think, dangerous views of the higher critics, yet there are grave questions which we cannot afford to ignore; and the question under consideration, to the writer at least, seems to be one of them. With a sincere desire for the truth, the whole truth, and nothing but the truth, Bro. McGarvey is hereby respectfully requested to give us his views upon the following questions:

1. Do you believe in the old theological dogma of the plenary or verbal inspiration of the Scriptures? If not, why not?

2. How do yon harmonize the seeming disagreement between Matthew and Luke respecting the genealogy of Christ with the doctrine of plenary inspiration?

3. If you regard the two genealogies as being in practical agreement, then how do you harmonize the doctrine of the literal descent of Christ from Abraham through the loins of Joseph as taught by both Matthew and Luke with the doctrine of the immaculate conception as taught by the same writers?

As these are question that have sorely troubled me in the past, and upon which I am still not very clear, any additional light will be gratefully received by the writer, and will doubtless be hailed with joy by many earnest students of the Word of God.

Attention, Jubilee Convention!

It may be of great assistance to us in securing better railroad rates if every man and woman who intends to go to the Jubilee Convention will send me their name and address. This only refers to those west of the Mississippi River. It will cost a cent to buy a postal card a moment to write it and send to me, and you don't know how much good it will do. Don't delay; get the postal now and send in the next mail. I want it immediately.

Yours in His name,

A $100,000 Jubilee.

We are approaching the red-letter day of our remarkable history as a peole. In fifty years from 200,000 to over a million reads like a romance. Let that day indeed be a jubilee. Let our gifts be in proportion. We have a wonderful advantage—no creed trials, no heresies, no courts—but only to send his name to every part of this glorious land. "America for Christ" does much toward "the world for Christ." We hold to a large extent the key to the situation. God is testing us; are we worthy of greater honor? Let our jubilee prove it.

Missouri Headquarters at Jubilee Convention.

The Palace Hotel and Hotel Emery will be headquarters of Missouri delegates during the Jubilee Convention, Oct. 13 to 20, 1899.

These hotels are centrally located, in a good part of the city and convenient to Music Hall, where the sessions of the great convention will be held.

The hotels will be profusely decorated in national colors, reminding us of the patriotism that burned high in the hearts of our fathers, when fifty years ago they assembled in that city and organized the American Christian Missionary Society, for the purpose of winning America for Christ. A beautiful banner will float across the street from the hotels. This banner will be made up in national colors, reminding one of "home and native land," in the center of which will appear in letters of gold the words, "Headquarters of Missouri Delegates," reminding us of the golden anniversary of the American Christian Missionary Society. Bro. W. H. McClain, who never does things after a halfway fashion, has made ample arrangements for our 1,000 delegates from Missouri, by securing these two good hotels at the following low rate of $1 a day for a room in either of the hotels or room and meals at the Palace Hotel $2 a day.

Every preacher in Missouri should attend this convention. Let us commence now and call frequent attention to the convention.

Our Jubilee.

Nothing has ever so stirred my heart as our prospective jubilee at our American Jerusalem in October. Our plea is a dawning light that will ever shine more and more unto the world's perfect day. Everywhere the people are beginning to hear of us, and they will know us better after October, Anno Domini 1899. Garfield's elevation to the Presidency in 1880 called universal attention to us, and the Jubilee Convention will renew and intensify that attention. Let the giant arouse and know and show the world his strength. If a people, a million in number, can go to Cincinnati in October, represented by twenty thousand delegates, it will do more to advance the kingdom of Christ than has been done in any one year since the days of the apostles. It will be the greatest religious convention and the largest communion service in the history of the human race. This thought should send a thrill through the entire body of Christ. And this convention will give us an impetus that will quicken into a run, and we will come, not with John Ruskin's, but with Jesus Christ's message to the twentieth century.

Wheeling Through Europe—I.

ON TRAVELING FOR PLEASURE.

Damon and I are starting on a summer tour through Central Europe with wheel and camera. The outward voyage is nearly at an end and our ship is moving up the English Channel, bound for Rotterdam. The much-maligned channel is as peaceful as a sleepy kitten, and the purr of distant engines is the only sound that breaks the stillness. The decks are deserted, for all sensible people sleep until eight o'clock on shipboard, and the really wise until nine. Sunrise at sea is very grand, but a sunset is just as good and more convenient to observe. But this particular morning I am up early to catch a glimpse of the Isle of Wight as we pass it. There it lies now, close on the port bow, blue with the haze of early morning, in the midst of the sparkling green of the channel, like a turquoise set about with emeralds. The little town of Ventnor, a mere village in reality, though it passes for a metropolis in tiny Wight, lies close by the sea at the foot of a cliff. I can see the road, a road over which I wheeled last summer, edging its way down the cliff, and, by that same token, I can almost identify the spot where an awkward puncture detained me half an afternoon.

But now the cliffs of England fade from view. Our arrival at the Dutch port is imminent and it is only fair that, before asking any one to follow the narrative of this rambling tour, a declaration of principles should be laid before the reader—assuming, merely as a working hypothesis, that there will be a reader, at least thus far. I would not care to have a confiding public place its hand in mine and follow my wanderings under a misapprehension as to the nature of the journey, or with a vain hope of acquiring much useful information about history, politics, art, or the present condition of theological thought in Europe. It will be seen almost at a glance that the casual papers which are to follow this are ill adapted for use as a text-book in schools and colleges, and candidates for the civil service will find them of little or no value in preparing for their examinations. In fact, let it be confessed at the outset that we are traveling for pleasure. This does not mean that we are in search of the gaieties of the social "season" at Scheveningen, or Wiesbaden, or any place else where they have a season, but that we are out for rest and a vacation. Any agreeable person, who feels the need of vacation and rest, and who will promise not to worry or complain under any circumstances and not to work too hard at sight-seeing, is invited to join us. The other member of the party is L. W. Morgan, late pastor of the Christian Church at Atlanta, Ill.

It is a curious and almost universal characteristic of the human mind that the prospect of a vacation at once raises the question, "Where shall I go?" Of course, there are people who spend their vacations at home; some even habitually do so; but few can pursue this course without a definite consciousness that their procedure is abnormal. No one feels called upon to explain why he spends his vacation in travel, but the man who stays at home when he might just as well go somewhere is liable to be curiously questioned. The normal man travels when he gets a chance.

But the motives to travel are many, though the impulse is universal. Setting aside business and study, which are entirely outside of the present question, one may travel for health, sight-seeing, fashion or pleasure (i. e., recreation). The curious fact about it is that so few travelers really know why they travel. A sober professional man goes off to a summer gathering of men of his profession. He thinks he goes for the conferences and the interchange of new ideas, but perhaps the real motive lies in the recollection of a big trout which he took one afternoon last year when he had strayed away from a dull session, and in the hope of finding its mate this season. Probably, too, he needs the angling more than the conferences. Or, a conscientious sight-seer takes a misnamed "vacation" trip to Europe to see it all in three months. It is a worthy enterprise, but it is hard work and ought not to be called traveling for pleasure or recreation.

Of all the crowds who annually profess to travel for pleasure, whether a little visit to your aunt's up in the country or the grand tour of Europe, there are few who have learned to put away the cares and worries of every-day life without making for themselves other troubles far more dangerous to health and disposition. The present trip is to be made strictly as a vacation tour, and it appeals for moral support to those who have learned the gentle art of traveling for pleasure, or who feel an interest in learning it.

Perhaps there is no mistake which would-be travelers for pleasure commit more persistently and uniformly than that of making too elaborate and too rigid plans in advance. This is especially apt to be the case if the contemplated journey be a long one, as, for example, a European tour. Not that the plans are likely to be carried out with any sort of accuracy, except by the unfortunate few who love to order their whole careers with the exactness of trigonometric formulæ. But, when plans have once been formed, the conscientious traveler becomes a slave to this creation of his fancy, and his tour degenerates into a hopeless struggle on the part of his actual self to keep up with the imaginary self which he pictures as proceeding serenely according to the plan. For myself, I do not fancy the idea of being preceded by my own ghost in any such fashion. I would rather not promise myself to reach such a point at such a time and stay there just so long. That will do well enough for the sight-seer who must cover a certain space in a certain time. But when one travels for pleasure the seeing of sights is purely incidental and the covering of ground is a consideration of no importance.

For my own part, I know of no sensation more pleasing than that of finding one's self in a foreign land and under no particular obligation to go either north, south, east or west. Let fancy have free rein and, for a vacation trip, one cannot go far wrong. This does not mean ignorant travel, for it really requires more knowledge of a country to ramble through it freely than to follow a prearranged route. Neither does it mean lazy travel, for fancy may direct you to proceed at times at a lively pace and through difficult situations. It means simply free, easy travel, unburdened by the cares of close railway connections and lost baggage, and untroubled by the necessity of rushing to see great sights in which you are not interested.

So far as I know, these conditions are met nowhere so perfectly as in a bicycle tour. You have no timetables to conform to, and, with your baggage all on your wheel, you can change your plans at a moment's notice. You can go where the tourists seldom go and stop where they never stop. You can be as active or as lazy as you like. In fact, you can ramble and roam more easily on a bicycle than by any other conveyance.

Next to traveling by wheel, the most peaceful and pleasurable method is by steamer. The ocean greyhounds, which make the trip in six days from Sandy Hook to Queenstown, do not give one time to lose his interest in the affairs of the world before he is back in their midst. One scarcely learns how to do without the morning papers until he finds himself again in possession of them. But on a slow boat like ours, which takes twelve days from New York to Rotterdam, one has a full week of happy and restful existence after he has learned not to care for the news of the day, has gotten acquainted with all his fellow-passengers and has found his place in the little world which the steamer constitutes. The perfecting of wireless telegraphy, which will make it possible to publish a daily paper with Associated Press dispatches on every steamer, will destroy the greatest charm of ocean travel. A bicycle tour in a foreign land has, in addition to the general pleasures of bicycle touring, the extra advantage of being opened and closed with an ocean voyage.

The chronicle of these ramblings through Holland, Germany, Switzerland, perhaps Northern Italy, possibly the Austrian Tyrol and Bohemia, and perchance a corner of France, will appear weekly under the general title, "Wheeling Through Europe," and if the reader cares to travel according to the principles here set forth, we shall be glad of his company.

New York Letter.

It has been reported with some degree of certainty that Dr. Charles Cuthbert Hall, president of Union Theological Seminary, has been appointed to the Haskell Lectureship on Comparative Religion in the University of Chicago. The position, which is one of the highest in the gift of that institution, requires that all lectures shall be given in India. Dr. Hall will be asked to lecture on the claims of Christianity throughout the principal cities of India in order to show the superiority of the Christian religion over all others. The position was held first by Dr. John Henry Barrows, whose course was received in that land with deep interest, and which did much good. His successor, Prof. A. M. Fairbairn, of England, only recently completed a tour of the East, lecturing to eager audiences. It is understood that Dr. Hall will make the trip within the next two years.

Another lecture course of interest to many Americans is that to be given by the Very Rev. Dr. C. W. Stubbs, Dean of Ely Cathedral, (beginning of which dates back to 1081), who will give 100 lectures in the principal cities of the United States. His subjects will be "Shakespeare as a Religious Teacher," "James Russell Lowell," "Poetry and Life," "Milton and the Puritans," "Shelley," "Charles Kingsley and Christian Socialism," "Frederick Maurice," "Florence Nightingale" and a course of thirteen illustrated lectures on "Ely Cathedral." These all are interesting and instructive topics, varied and inspirational, and will be presented in a most interesting manner.

We often go into a community where we find no church, but a few scattered Disciples, who appear anxious to start in an effort looking to and hoping for the establishment of a church. But in most instances like this they are not only few, but weak and timid. Many in these circumstances think they must have a great meeting to start the work agoing. Beloved, this is a serious mistake. These few weak, timid Disciples should go to work together and at once, in the best way possible to them. Have cottage prayer-meetings, start a Bible-school in your private houses, come together to break bread in memory of the broken body of Calvary, and if you are faithful and united God will soon open the way. Such are the very best beginnings for strong and prosperous churches. There are scores and scores of places in our beloved Empire State where such work ought to begin immediately, and so should it in many other states.

We are hoping and planning for a large delegation from the metropolitan district to the Jubilee Convention in October. Up to the present we have not been able to get the Trunk Association to give us half rates, but they have promised one and one-third rates on the certificate plan. If the C. & O. will give us a half rate from Washington, the railroad fare will be about $21 round trip from New York. We desire a sufficient number of delegates from this city to secure a "special car" to Washington, and from Washington we hope to have a "special convention train" to Cincinnati. We would be pleased to have the brethren from the New England states join our party at New York, and also those from the Hudson River district. Our car will pick up the Philadelphia delegates, and also the Baltimore brethren, on the way. At Washington we will allow Brethren Power, Bagby and Wright to come into our party with their people, and our hearts are large enough to include every Disciple in "Ole Virginny" too. Quite a number have signified their intention to go with the New York City delegation, and if others expecting to do so will drop us a line to that effect it will help toward securing better accommodations on the way. We expect to have a royal good time together on the journey and a glorious jubilation when we reach the city whither the tribes are going up. But let us strive to reach that $100,000 home mission mark. S. T. WILLIS.

"The Two Extremes and the Remedy."

Under the above caption in the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST of June 29th, '99, our editor has said some wise things. Speaking of the conservative element he says, "They have been opposed to every enlargement of the work, on the ground that it was breaking with the past, and was without scriptural warrant." This language expresses most fully the attitude of this element, and one is forced to the conclusion that they do not believe in progress or advancement in religious work. If it be true that we should not depart from the customs of the apostles, then we should dress in the garb of the Jewish peasant, and wear sandals, and our preachers should leave their families and travel on foot from town to town, and city to city, preaching the Word. We must also go without scrip or money and have no definite support for our families. The work of our Bible-schools would also be without scriptural warrant. What would be the result if our churches were to return to primitive customs and manners? It is safe to say the church would very largely lose its influence and power over the masses, for the signs of the times indicate that all conservative bodies of our day that do not keep abreast with the age are slowly dying. It is passing strange that this element cannot see these things and work in harmony with the laws of progress, like the great body of the church is doing. The eternal principles of truth are immutable, and for these we stand with the same firmness and fealty of the fathers of the Reformation, and lifting a thousand voices in all this land we are crying in the ears of the church universal, "Back to Christ," back to apostolic teachings and ordinances, but in methods of work no definite rules are given, and it is left as an open question to the wisdom of the church, and she must adjust herself to the needs and demands of every age. The conservative element is opposed to our missionary societies and in places even to the Bible-schools and C. E. Societies, because, forsooth, there is no scriptural authority for these. Is there wisdom in this? No, for if this class have on the gospel harness they are pulling the wrong way, pulling against the tide of progress. It is by organized effort that we are moving and winning the world for Christ, and these auxiliaries are potent factors for good as experience proves, for through them we are training a great host for more effective work in the church of the future. In the old methods of work too much material was allowed to lie idle in the church and become atrophied, and these conditions always bring the church into reproach, but now in modern methods we are harnessing all the forces for work, and the man of the pulpit is strongly urging the obligations and responsibilities of the individual Christian. When we add to these the office or work of the Holy Spirit in the world's salvation, and a deeper and richer spirituality within the church, we are helping to hasten the day of victory, when the army of white banners shall possess the gates of all empires and kingdoms, and from the continents and islands shall be lifted the voice of triumph, "Christ for the world, and the world for Christ!"

A. L. FERGUSON.

Hawaii Letter.

The cluster of eight Hawaiian Islands have a population of 132,140, divided about as follows: Natives, 39,000; Japanese, 37,200; Chinese, 27,000; white, 19,000; Portuguese, 12,000; the remainder of other nationalities, Honolulu, on Oahu Island, has a population of 30,000, only about 4,400 of whom are white; 7,600 are Chinese.

The first missionary arrived here in 1820; his son, born here, now seventy-five years old, and his grandson, a recent graduate from Yale College, are each living here and doing missionary work. The sons each bear the name of the first missionary, Hiram Bingham.

The house built by Mr. Bingham was the first white man's residence on the islands. It was brought from Boston, around the Horn, and now stands where originally built, and is occupied by Brother H. V. Morgan and his father-in-law, Bro. Rhodes. As it was the home of many missionaries, it is the birthplace of several of the most prominent citizens of this city, some of whom are multi-millionaires.

In 1819, one year before the missionaries came, the Tabu system of idol worship was abolished, and following it there was a general burning of idols and temples throughout the whole group of islands. The missionaries found the natives an amiable and highly receptive race, eager for knowledge and easily influenced for good or evil.

As the late Congress made no laws for Hawaii we are under the same laws, with the same men to execute them, that were here before annexation took place. We must pay duty on all dutiable articles sent us, whether by mail or freight. If our friends on the mainland send us a letter weighing less than a half ounce and put but two cents postage on it, we must pay six cents to take it out of the office; if it weighs more than a half ounce we must pay double what the sender failed to pay. It recently cost me twenty-two cents to take from the office a letter from Bethany, W. Va., containing some useless circulars.

The Central Union (Congregational) Church of Honolulu has about 600 members, fifteen of whom are millionaires. Its members are educated, cultured, sociable and liberal. This church is the dominant power religiously, and some say financially, in these islands. One of its members recently gave $50,000 for missions and $50,000 for Oahu College. On the twenty-first of last month the church made its annual offering for home missions, which amounted to $10,268. The following Sunday it made its offering for foreign missions, amounting to $10,500; during the following $3,000 more were added, making a grand total of $73,768 as the annual offering for missions. Large as that sum seems, it was not as much, according to the ability of the church, as the $75 given by the Christian Church at the March and May offerings.

The Catholics and Episcopalians each have several churches on the islands, the Methodists one and the Christians one, with a prospect of another being organized in the near future on the Island of Hawaii, 200 miles from this city, where Miss Alice Beard has been conducting a mission for some years at her own expense.

The Christian Church in this city was organized in August, 1894, by Bro. T. D. Garvin. Its present membership is 118, about 75 of whom are active, resident members. We have a very comfortable house of worship, capable of seating 150. The house is built upon a leased lot, the lease on which will soon expire, when we shall be compelled to ask for aid from the churches on the mainland to buy the lot. The church has had some very serious trials, which have greatly interfered with its growth and usefulness, but the future now seems bright. Twenty have been added since I came here last January. This little congregation of Disciples planted by the Lord at the great crossroads of the nations is destined to wield a mighty influence in the evangelization of the world. WM. A. GARDNER.

BURDENED WOMEN.

We look in amazement at the burdens some women carry upon their heads. Yet how light they are compared with the burdens some women carry upon their hearts. There are childless women whose hearts ache ceaselessly because of the childless home. That burden of childlessness has been lifted from the heart of many a woman by the use of Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription. Many of the obstacles to maternity are removable. Such obstacles are entirely removed by "Favorite Prescription." It contains no alcohol nor narcotic.

Married Six Years and Childless.

"I have never written you how grateful I am to you for your help in securing good health and one of the sweetest, dearest, thirteen pound girls that ever came into a home," writes Mrs. M. Vastine, of 647 South Liberty Street, Galesburg, Ill. "I took six bottles of Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription, four of the 'Golden Medical Discovery' and four vials of Dr. Pierce's Pleasant Pellets. Before I had taken four bottles of the 'Favorite Prescription' I was a new woman. I cannot make pen describe my heartfelt gratitude, so will close by saying if any one disputes the value of Dr. Pierce's medicines I will be pleased to confirm the truth of all I say if they will enclose stamped envelope for reply."

Dr. Pierce's Pleasant Pellets are a ladies' laxative. No medicine equals them for gentleness and thoroughness.

An Iowa Letter from Harvard.

Before leaving this delightful region I must jot down a few impressions which may interest the readers of the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST.

I will soon take a parting look at the statue of the founder of this great university—John Harvard. I was surprised to find that the face and figure of this bronze is ideal, for no picture of John Harvard is known to exist. Like the Nazarene, also, his burial place is unknown. It is supposed to be in a certain spot once a cemetery, but now covered by buildings. But when hundreds of costly monuments have crumbled above known graves this man, John Harvard, will be remembered by a grateful people. A useful life is the best of all monuments—it will outlast marble or bronze or granite.

We have visited Plymouth and have seen with our eyes and handled with our hands the famous Rock. From 1620 A. D. to 1899 seems long to most men, and to children very, very long. It is almost 280 years, or nine generations and ten years to spare. And yet the time is short when measured another way. Three lives carry us back to the Mayflower. At Plymouth are letters from these three. Peregrine White, the first white child born in New England is the first of these links. The second is from a Pilgrim deacon who lived to the age of 106 years and testifies that he knew Peregrine White. The last is from a woman now living at the age of 93 or '4 who remembers the aged deacon. How short time must have seemed to Peter, James and John when they stood face to face with Moses and Elias! What wonderful characters have been wrought with short threads and bits of time!

A few blocks from where I write is Brattle Street, called "Tory Row." At the outbreak of the Revolutionary War the dwellers on this street retreated to Boston within the British lines. And after the war many of them went to England. For it is well known that from Boston alone over 2,000 persons, including 700 leading citizens and 140 graduates of Harvard left this country. Why? They had no faith in its future. They saw its disadvantages, its dangers and its weaknesses. They did not see its possibilities, its destiny or its God. They walked by sight not by faith. We pity them as the angels pity men without eyes of faith.

Our memory of the news of Robert Ingersoll's death will always be associated with our stay in Cambridge. A letter received from a scholarly Des Moines woman says: "Is it not interesting that Mr. Ingersoll did not have a chance to expound how he felt when dying? By this time he has found out whether he was mistaken or not." His attacks upon the goodness of the God of the Bible plunged me years ago into the heat of a long battle. It was fearful and hard-fought, but the victory was glorious and nothing in my spiritual horizon looms so high or shines more brightly than this great truth: "God is love."

In my last letter I mentioned a number of our New England preachers whom I have met. There is another who took great interest in us, R. H. Bolton, of Chelsea. He is the editor of the New England Messenger. He is striving to do for the 2,200 Disciples of these states what so many heroic men have done in the West during our days of early growth. We owe a great debt to the founders of Christian journalism.

We stood a short time ago looking up at the window of "The Den" where Louisa M. Alcott did much of her writing. There were two generations of us who had read "Little Men" or "Little Women" from one to a dozen times. It did my heart good to see the enthusiasm of the juniors over the old apple tree, a limb of which served Jo for a horse. Many of my readers will be sorry to know that Jo's horse is gone, all save a few inches of his body to tell where the riders had so much fun.

There are about 75 buildings of all kinds owned and controlled by Harvard University. I cannot describe them here. Two of them were built from the proceeds of lotteries in days when such things were not condemned by good public sentiment. And some were built with money from English donors, but most of them by liberal givers in our own land. The alumni have been great givers in building up this school. An Iowa man cannot see these things without wondering what good men and women will do for Drake University in the next fifty years. A. M. HAGGARD.

"Actual and Formal Remission of Sins."

Such is the caption of an article in the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST of July 6th, by Bro. A. B. Jones. The contention of our brother is that baptism is for the formal remission of sins which were actually forgiven when the sinner truly purposed in his heart to return to the Father. So he says, "There is an actual and a formal confession of Christ; an actual and a formal living the Christian life." Thus he would have the actual and the formal in everything.

Now if man is forgiven when he purposes in his heart to obey—and before and without baptism—is he not accepted when he purposes to accept Christ, to confess Christ before men; when he purposes to go to God in prayer; when he purposes to live the Christian life? And if this be true, why these externals at all? If God actually forgives the sinner upon his purpose to obey, will he not actually accept the Christian in his purpose to comply with the conditions as laid down in the Scriptures, which constitute the Christian life? He certainly would do so, Bro. Jones himself being the judge.

But suppose the sinner or the Christian purposes to do the things commanded, but fails to carry out that purpose—what then? We do not always carry out that which we truly and fully purpose in our hearts to do. Then do God's judgments fail? He has already judged our moral attitude towards himself to be all right and has given the blessing, according to Bro. J. Will he now go back on what he has done? Oh, no, says our venerable brother, "Every emotion, every intention, every desire of man is known to the Heavenly Father before it finds expression in words or deeds." Be it so. Then, if the actual forgiveness and acceptance depended upon the unerring knowledge of God that the person would do the things required, would these things be any the less necessary to the desired end than if God had not so foreseen? In either case the sinner's acceptance is made to depend upon the compliance with the conditions laid down. Then, I ask again, What the use of these externals? and what the use of formal forgiveness at all? Why, to convey to the sinner a knowledge of such acceptance, says Bro. J. But how can it convey to the sinner the knowledge of such acceptance? What is there in baptism more than in faith, the confession, fruits of repentance, etc., to convince one of previous pardon? According to Bro. J. these are all formal, while the actual has existence antedating each and all and upon this the blessing is given! But if the sinner could not know of such acceptance while acting in his own behalf, and before and without baptism, how could Bro. Jones know of such previous acceptance? Was what the sinner did before baptism stronger evidence to a third party, than to the acting sinner? And how could baptism reveal the previous mind of God toward the sinner? It is easy to see how it might reveal to the sinner something of his own mind, but not the act or state of God's mind! A little more light on this point would greatly assist us.

"Considerations like these,"—mentioned in his article—concludes Bro. J., led Campbell, Errett and others to teach the distinction between actual and formal remission of sins, and caused them to speak of baptism as the "assurance of remission." But could not baptism be the assurance of actual remission the same as of formal remission? What assurance have we, apart from baptism, that our sins are formally remitted? Granted that baptism is for (in order to) remission to the man who is now baptized, could not his baptism be the assurance of present or prospective remission the same as of past remission? With a proper definition before one, with its uses, I think that we would readily come to the conclusion that such could be the case.

A Great Work.

Our Virginia brotherhood have been anxious to start a work at Fredericksburg, an important manufacturing city midway between the cities of Richmond and Washington, and the center of a great and rich scope of country in which we have no organized representation. The place is most favorably situated to become the center of operations for our people in Northern Virginia.

A most serious problem, however, had to be faced and worked out—that of a building. One year ago I made this proposition to our people: that if the brotherhood of Disciples outside of Fredericksburg would give me $1,000 I would put a good house of worship here. Architectural plans have been made, the contract let and a good brick house is now in course of erection which, when completed will give us a church property valued at $5,000. This was a bold undertaking, as we had nothing to start with but an old building erected in 1832, unoccupied since 1860, war-wrecked and time-wrecked, and a dozen members who were not able to give anything toward a new building. To-day work on the building is being rapidly pushed forward toward completion. But the "brotherhood outside of Fredericksburg" have not given me the amount asked for by $200. What I now ask of our general brotherhood of Disciples of Christ is that they will help us furnish our church. I have sent out circulars and personal letters to a few of our stronger churches and individual brethren asking them to contribute each a small amount, a sum they will not feel, but will be a great help to us, and will be a great help to us, and that will enable us to complete the work and dedicate our new church in September. Brethren, this is a great work—a new building at a mission point in one year's time. Will you show your appreciation of it in a small amount to help furnish the new church? CEPHAS SHELBURNE.

An Important Food Law.

HEAVY PENALTIES FOR SELLING ARTICLES OF FOOD CONTAINING UNHEALTHY INGREDIENTS.

The following law, introduced by Senator W. F. Lyons, passed at the last session of the Missouri Legislature, takes effect August 20, 1899:

SECTION 1. That it shall be unlawful for any person or corporation doing business in this state to manufacture, sell or offer to sell any article, compound or preparation for the purpose of being used or which is intended to be used in the preparation of food, in which article, compound or preparation there is any arsenic, calomel, bismuth, ammonia or alum.

SEC. 2. Any person or corporation violating the provisions of this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and shall, upon conviction, be fined not less than one hundred dollars, which shall be paid into and become a part of the road fund of the county in which such fine is collected.

The operation of this law will be mainly against alum baking powders. But the manufacture or sale of any article of food or article intended to be used in food which contains any of the substances classed by the law as unhealthful—from Arsenic or Alum—is absolutely prohibited.

The Chicago Letter.

This letter will be chiefly biographical. I desire the reader to visit in imagination the campus of the Uuiversity of Chicago. We are midway between two great parks. On the shore of Lake Michigan, east of us, is Jackson Park, west of us is Washington Park. The southern boundary of the campus is the Midway Plaisance of the World's Fair fame. North of us is the "Marshall Field" or athletic grounds of the the university. The campus is a large quadrangle inclosing four smaller quadrangles. On it scores of magnificent stone structures—uniform in architecture and symmetrically built—have been reared. The summer quarter of the university has already become very popular. This is due to several causes: (1) Physical. Surrounded by over one thousand acres of grassy lawn and shady trees in parks and boulevards and daily refreshed by the delightfully cool breezes from Lake Michigan, the vicinity of the University of Chicago is an ideal summer resort. (2) The social and religious life at the University of Chicago, during the summer quarter, is far superior to any university in America. This statement is made with due deliberation, after having visited or given Bible lectures at nearly a score of our leading state and endowed universities. One of the most vigorous clubs in the universrty is the Southern Club. The recent lecture on R. E. Lee, the ideal soldier, scholar and Christian gentleman, was under the auspices of this club. Sixty persons, most of them teachers and preachers, came from Georgia to attend the summer quarter in one body. The deep religious spirit of the fifteen hundred or more students in the university manifests itself at the vesper services, the daily chapel hour and the numerous meetings of tbe Y. M. C. A. and Y. W. C. A. (3) The principal cause of the popularity of this summer school, however, is the fact that the university is both able and willing to meet the special needs of thousands of teachers, preachers and graduate students all over the land. To illustrate, there is a high-school teacher, from Kansas City—a wide-awake, progressive young man. For several years he was a student at the University of Michigan. His special department of knowledge is Biology. Among the biological sciences he is specializing in botany. In botany he wishes to do special field work in ecology. He learns that a woman, Miss Culver, has given one million dollars to endow the biological department of the university. He gets the best that a specialist in ecology can give him during the summer quarter and returns to his high-school students with a zeal born of knowledge which he otherwise would not have. His name is Porter Graves. * * * Here is a successful Christian preacher whose charge is at the seat of a great state university. He realizes that a broad, comprehensive view of philosophy would be helpful to him, both in his studies and in his preaching. He comes to the university and studies Greek philosophy under Noah K. Davis, the Nestor of the University of Virginia. He realizes as never before the purity and the power of the gospel of the Son of God, which has assimilated the idealism of Plato and the realism of Aristotle. C. H. Winders will go back to his congregation a humbler, deeper, larger thinker than ever. * * * Here is the dean of one of our best Bible coleges. He desires physical rest where he can listen to specialists lecture on the great masterpieces of literature, Paradise Lost, the Divine Comedy, Job, etc. So even the well-stored mind of Jabez Hall finds food for thought listening to George Adam Smith, R. G. Moulton, W. R. Harper and others.

Let us interview some of these practical workers among the Disciples of Christ as they pass from the Cobb Divinity Hall to the Haskell Oriental Museum on the campus of the university. Dr. H. L. Willett is too busy reading the proof-sheets of "The Teachings of the Books"—a work of collaboration by himself and Dr. J. M. Campbell—to be interviewed. It is a handbook designd to furnish something more than an introduction to the books of the New Testament.

Jabez Hall was born and spent his early boyhood in England. He came with his father and other members of the family to the United States in 1852, and was that year apprenticed to a druggist in Cleveland, O. In 1861 he became a member of the Christian Church in Georgetown, Ky., under the preaching of the renowned John Smith, and was induced by him and certain other brethren, prominent in that region at the time, to enter Bethany College and study in preparation for the ministry of the Word of God. Before graduating he was engaged to become the evangelist for Pennsylvania and entered upon that work one month after graduation. A few months after this he was selected by a committee, appointed for the purpose (consisting of Alexander Campbell, W. K. Pendleton, C. L. Loos and Dr. R. Richardson), to go as an evangelist to Australia, but failed to go. He became the first pastor of the church at Wheeling, W. Va., where he remained until 1871, when he became pastor of the Euclid Ave. Church of Christ, Cleveland, O., where he remained until May 1, 1888. He then became pastor of the Seventh St. Church of Christ, Richmond, Va., where he continued until September, 1896, when he became dean of the Butler Bible College, at Irvington, Ind., which position he now occupies. Bro. Hall does not accept everything he hears, but is very much pleased with the comprehensiveness of the work at the University of Chicago, of which Butler College is one of the affiliated schools.

Wallace C. Payne, who is now in the prime of vigorous manhood, like Jabez Hall, was educated at Bethany (the Alma Mater of many of our truest and best preachers and teachers), taking both the A. B. and A. M. degrees. He afterwards took his B. D. degree from Yale. Most of a ten years' ministry has been spent in large cities—Cincinnati, Philadelphia and New York. His simple, direct, practical preaching has brought more than seven hundren people to Christ. * * * Here is F. N. Calvin, of Milwaukee, a sturdy and typical Christian preacher, who was educated at Eureka, Ill., Canton, Mo., and Kentucky University. He has held positions in New Albany, Ind., Worcester, Mass., Quincy, Ill., Kansas City, Mo., and Waco, Texas. Bro. Calvin is pleased with the enthusiasm of the university spirit, but takes some of the lectures with a grain of salt. * * * P. T. Martin, Butler, '91, A. B.; Wabash '94, B. S. Preached three years at Brazil, Ind. * * * Henry Ward Hoover graduated at Bethany in 1891. Preached at Tonawanda, N. Y., and recently took the B.D. degree form the University of Chicago. His thesis was "George Fox and the English Quakers." He has charge of the Ashland Ave. Christian Church, and is preparing to take his Ph. D. degree. * * * C. H. Winders was educated at Canton, Mo. Before becoming pastor of the church in Columbia, Mo., he preached in Kansas City and Palmyra. He says there were fully one thousand students in Columbia last year. He thinks it strange that more of our preachers do not avail themselves of the advantages the university offers special students. * * * P. J. Rice graduated from Hiram in 1891 (A. B.), and preached at Findlay, O., one year. Since 1893 he has been pastor of the West Jefferson St. Church, Ft. Wayne, Ind. His work is united and prosperous, and he expects to take a large delegation to the Jubilee Convention. * * * John McKee was a student at Bethany from '75 to '77, took A. B. from Butler in 1884. Spent three years at Yale, securing B. D. in 1889, and has preached in Wisconsin, Iowa and Indiana. He will take his doctorate in University of Chicago. Can teach either Hebrew or New Testament Greek. * * * William Herbert Hanna graduated at Bethany in 1892 (A. B.), and preached five years at Carnegie. He has just returned from England. He gives promise of great usefulness to our cause, and I hope he will not remain in the university too long. * * * Space will not suffice to mention such excellent men and faithful workers as E. P. Wise, O. P. Shrout and nearly a score of others who are in the university this quarter.

I cannot close this letter without mentioning the significant editorial upon the death of Col. Ingersoll, by the Times-Herald, one of the greatest secular papers in America. I shall let the editorial speak for itself:

"As we look back upon the life of this singularly gifted man the shadow of his unbelief seems to have turned all his talents and golden opportunities to ashes. In early manhood he yielded to the temptation to ask questions which a child can ask and the wisest cannot answer. Then he refused to believe anything incapable of logical demonstration, and unlike the majority of his peers in study, observation and knowlenge, never arrived at the conclusion that the faith that works miracles is greater than the unbelief whose end is stagnation and death. The mistake of Ingersoll's life was the adoption of agnosticism as his mission, from which it degenerated into a mercenary profession. It was an unworthy use of great talents, and as time went on dear was the penalty. He steadily retrograded into a professional scoffer. The lesson of the career of this strong, able man is, that it is better to cheerish faith and hope than to preach doubt and unbelief. A glowworm sheds more light upon the world than an agnostic."

The Genuineness of the Book of Daniel.

I desire to kindly call attention to some positions taken by Prof. Willett in his notes on the Sunday-school lesson for July 9. He speaks of the date and authorship of the Book of Daniel and the latter part of Isaiah as if there were no question but that the former was written about 166 B. C. and the latter after the Exile. The assumption made by the "critics" is by no means generally conceded by the learned, and it is stoutly called in question by many. When, therefore, Prof. Willett makes the impression upon the students of Sunday-school lessons that his statements are unquestioned, he commits a wrong that is not altogether of a literary character. I do not believe that these questions ought to be foisted upon our Sunday-school literature. But few if any Sunday-school people have either time or facilities for examining such questions fully or accurately enough to form an intelligent judgment of their own. But if a writer feels called upon to inject such matters into Sunday-school literature, fairness requires that he should state that there are differences of opinion among scholars on these points; and for one I most seriously protest against this lop-sided method of training young minds. There is room here for the exercise of some "intellectual honesty."

When a susceptible young mind gets the idea that the Book of Daniel was not written by the prophet of that name, such an idea is liable to generate the notion that the whole thing is a fraud. Nor is such liability confined to young and tender minds. So weighty and distinguished a work as the Schaff Herzog Encyclopedia says: "The work is either by Daniel or else an imposture. The justice of this dilemma is denied by many criticis; but on the very face of it the work seems to shut us up to one of these two views." This position is sustained by many cogent reasons in the work just referred to. In chapters 7-12 the writer repeatedly refers to himself as Daniel in such expressions as "when I, even I, Daniel, had seen the vision;" "I heard a man's voice between the banks of Ulai;" "I fell into a deep sleep;" "I, Daniel, understood by the books;" "I set my face unto the Lord God;" "I, Daniel, was mourning three whole weeks;" "I was by the side of the great river;" "I, Daniel, alone saw the vision," etc. Times almost without number do expressions similar to the foregoing occur in which the writer declares himself to be Daniel, Daniel the prophet. If the book was not written by Daniel the prophet such statements are wholly untrue and the book is an imposture. Renan, an ardent destructive critic, is candid and consistent enough to speak of books of the Bible that pass under the names of men, alleged not to have written them, as fabrications and charges "duplicity" upon the compilers of such books. This is certainly a just and deserved sentence on the hypothesis that those to whom the authorship of such books is attributed never saw the documents that they are said to have written.

Even Dr. Delitzsch, although holding the opinion of the late origin of the Book of Daniel, is fair and candid enough to state the other side of the question thus: "But it must be granted that savants in Assyriology are more conservative in their judgment on this point than others. Lenormant says he is more and more impressed with the genuineness each time he peruses the book. Oppert thinks he has found the very pedestal on which the image of Dura rested. Talbot illustrates the punishment of the fiery furnace from inscriptions. These investigators find confirmative testimony of Nebuchadnezzar's insanity in Berosus, Abydanus and Josephus." Dr. D. S. Schaff says: "Too much stress cannot be laid upon the fact that the great Assyriologists do not grant the conclusions reached by critics unfavorable to the genuineness. Monumental evidence is always decisive as against arguments based upon induction. Discoveries in Babylon have already confirmed statements of Daniel which were denied by the critics."

The theory held by the critics, upon which Prof. Willett writes his notes, is that the Book of Daniel is a religious romance, written to encourage the Jews who were impressed by Antiochus Epiphanes. This view of the book Prof. Willett avows. Over against this view I place the conclusion reached by the author of the introduction to the Book of Daniel in the Pulpit Commentary, which is as follows: "With the facts before us, which we have just presented to our readers, it seems impossible to resist the conclusion that the case against the authenticity has broken down. If we take the first portion of the critical contention, that the Book of Daniel is a religious novel, we find that it presents none of the characteristics that are present in successful productions of this class. The fact that one portion of it is written in one language, while another portion is written in another, is strongly against this view. Further, the incidents narrated do not suit the alleged purpose of the book, viz., to encourage the Jews in their armed opposition to Epiphanes; they would prompt to passive, not active resistance. It can not be maintained that Nebuchadnezzar is a portrait of Epiphanes. [This is Prof. Willett's contention.—B.] The character ascribed to Nebuchadnezzar is utterly unlike that ascribed to Epiphanes in the book itself. The feelings caused by the character and conduct of Nebuchadnezzar are utterly unlike those occasioned by the deeds of Antiochus. The assertion that the badness ascribed to Nebuchadnezzar is due to the alleged nickname given to Antiochus Epiphanes is disproved, as it is shown that there is no evidence that this nickname was ever given to Antiochus Epiphanes. As little are Belshazzar or Darius the Mede portraits of Antiochus. If we now consider the date ascribed to this book by the critical school we think their cause has broken down here too. If we take the argument from language we find that the Hebrew of the Book of Daniel, when compared with that of Siracides, is much older. We know that Ecclesiasticus was written at least a dozen years earlier than the critical date of Daniel. We have seen that the words whose presence is regarded as proof of the recency of Daniel are either not recent or have no right to be in the text. We thus see that the critical case, so far as the argument from Hebrew is concerned, has failed. . . "

In view of the foregoing matter and much more like it I verily believe that the critical theory is demolished, and I again stoutly protest against forcing onesided views upon our Sunday-school literature, as if the evidence were all one way. Not only is the testimony of scholars not all one way, but the Savior himself is against the critics. He says: "When, therefore, ye see the abomination of desolation, which was spoken of by Daniel the prophet, standing in the holy place," etc. Notice, that is not "which is spoken of in the Book of Daniel," but "which was spoken of by Daniel the prophet." If Daniel the prophet did not say that, the Savior said what is not true!

J. B. BRINEY.

[There is no doubt room for honest difference of opinion concerning the date of the Book of Daniel. The evidence is not all on one side, as Bro Briney has shown. Bro. Willett might well have stated in his lesson as he usually does in his lectures, on disputed points, that there is another view of this question, but he perhaps felt in this case that such a statement would be quite superfluous. It was in no spirit of dogmatism, we may be sure, that he stated his view of the matter. It may be stated further that so conservative a scholar as Prof. Sayce, the great authority in archæology, who delights to attack the higher critics on all vulnerable points, concedes the late date of the Book of Daniel, contended for by modern critics. Nevertheless, it seems to us wise in the present state of the controversy to regard the question as an open one and give both sides, as we now have done.—EDITOR.]

Berea Church House Burned.

TO THE EVANGELIST READERS:—Some of the brethren at this place have requested me to lay before you their sad story of the destruction of the church building, which was burned July 3rd. This historic church was first built two miles southwest of the courthouse and was burned down about 50 years ago, It was rebuilt at C. H. 1832 or about that time and was the wealthiest church in this section. Old Father Frazier preached in it for many years, and students at Bethany frequently came down and preached. Among them the Haleys, W. T. Moore and others. We are certain that if these brethren who once labored here and other young men who have gone into other states knew that old "Berea" was in ruins they would send money to help build.

The present membership is over 70, and while the brethren are poor in this world's goods they have already taken steps to rebuild. Three walls of brick are left standing, the two stoves, organ, lamps, most of the carpet, pulpit and pulpit furniture, one window and shutter and 17 benches were saved, and this with the lot is all that is left of "Old Berea."

They meet to-day to clean up the fallen brick and the rubbish generally and will get bids on the job of repairing the walls. But we must have help from outside sources and will need in the neighborhood $1,500 before finishing. Bro. Chandluer, of Newport News, gave $50 and many have given small sums. The old church was in the thickest of the battle of Spottsylvania C. H., and was badly battered in front. A shell was taken out of the ruins, but owing to some defect it had not exploded.

The building committee are reliable men—Brethren Beasley, Archer and Gay. Bro. Gay was formerly from St. Louis and is one of the elders. He has a daughter at Hiram, educating her two sons. His daughter at this place is organist and leader of music. She lives five miles away, but is always on hand. She is committee on finances and all money contributed to the relief of Berea Church must be sent to Mrs. Amy Gay Pendleton, Curlew, Spottsylvania County, Va., and she will see that it is properly applied. This church and the one they are building at Fredericksburg are the only organizations we have in Spottsylvania County, and we must stand by them.

The annual convention of the Christian Churches of Nodaway Valley district, Mo., comprising the counties of Atchison, Holt, Nodaway, Andrew, Worth and Gentry Counties, will be held in King City, Aug. 29-31. A splendid program has been arranged and published, and it is hoped to make this convention of our Jubilee Year the greatest in their history. A large delegation representing liberal congregations will insure it.

The county meeting of the Churches of Christ in Harrison County, Mo., will hold their annual meeting in Martinsville, August 24-27. A good program, upon which appears the names of a large number of able preachers, has been published and a good convention is anticipated. Everybody cordially invited to attend. If you come by rail, write J. F. Kidwell, at Martinsville, the train you come on, and you will be met and cared for. Come! Help on God's work! The people of Martinsville will gladly greet you.

Illinois Items.

Sometime ago I made a visit to Ashland and Philadelphia, west of here on the B. & O. Railway. They have no preaching at either place. At Ashland, a town of perhaps 2,000, they have a good house of worship. Cost $4,000 or $5,000. They want preaching, but don't know how to start at it.

Philadelphia has no preaching. They ought to have.

Tallula, on the C. & O., north of Ashland, has no preaching just now. They are repairing their church.

July 18-21 I attended the Southern Illinois missionary convention at Flora. Bro. Z. H. McCoy is the pastor there. From Flora I went south to Fairfield and staid over Sunday and preached for S. V. Williams, who in October goes to Ashland, O. Bro. Williams has the work well in hand at Fairfield, and shows marks of doing great work for the Master.

I stopped over one night and preached at Cowden, Ill. The little band there under the management of W. Bedall is building a $3,000 house of worship. They expect to dedicate in the fall, if possible, and follow with a meeting. I don't know that I ever looked into more appreciative faces while preaching than at Cowden. May God bless them in the good work started.

The M. E. and Christian Churches at Modesta, Ill., jointly, will run an excursion to Pisa Chautauqua Assembly, Aug. 12.

I begin a meeting at Modesta Aug. 13. I want a singer to aid me in this and four or five other meetings this fall and winter.

Convocation Service.

We are arranging to have a splendid convocation service with which to greet our students on their assembling, Sept. 12. The service will be held in the Tabernacle at 7:30 o'clock P: M. F. G. Tyrrell, of Chicago, will speak. Students are urged to be here i n time to attend, and we invite the friends of the college. We hope to make this occasion typical of the enthusiasm and joy of the whole year.

A New Era at Farmer City, Ill.

The brethren at Farmer City, Ill., have been in hard circumstances in a financial way for several years, a part of the time being unable to employ a minister, and the building in which they have worshiped since the days when Dudley Downs was in his prime, has amply served its purpose. With the advent of two new edifices this year it has awakened the brotherhood to the fact that something must be done. Farmer City being the home of my boyhood, I naturally take a deep interest in the church's welfare, and on Sunday, July 23rd, I preached for them and on that occassion was informed that the sum of $2,000 had been subscribed toward rebuilding and that work would commence at once and will be rapidly pushed to completion and dedicated before snow files. Since Bro. J. H. Gilliland's meeting there last winter the Master's cause has prospered more than in many years and a deep spirituality is being manifested. The congregation is without a pastor, and none need apply until the church building has been dedicated. After that date a wide-awake young preacher will find a field of labor.

For Foreign Missions.

Comparing the receipts for Foreign Missions for the week ending July 26th, with the corresponding week, 1898, shows the following:

	1898	1899	Gain
Amount,	$1,356 39	$1,734 75	$378.36

The receipts to date amount to $125,246 09. We must receive $24,753.91 by Sept. 30th if we reach $150,000 this missionary year.

We ask personal friends of the work to send offerings. Let offerings large and small pour into the treasury of the Lord. The nations are in heathen darkness because they have not heard the Word of life. We are a rich and prosperous people. We cannot plead poverty if the $150,000 is not raised.

Many churches have not responded. We appeal to them now. Hundreds of Sunday-schools have not been heard from. Let us have a united, enthusiastic effort at once. The First Sunday-school, Allegheny, Pa., raised $637 00 on Children's Day for Heathen Missions, the first Sunday in June. It is interesting to note that 335 members of the school gave $1.00 or more each. This school is worthy of imitation. The books close Sept. 30th.

This is more than double the receipts of same month last year. The case before us is a very plain one and "he who runs may read." We are working hard to double our receipts each month. This alone requires gigantic effort; this doubling kept up until Sept. 30th would bring $80.000. Then the Margaret Oliver gift will increase this to $87,000. Now where is the $15,000 to come from? This is no small amount to raise at the close of an offering like this. We will report $85,000 or $90,000 for our Jubilee Year and also report that we gave out in sight of home, unless everwhere preachers and churches take an active interest in raising the balance. Will the preachers announce the receipts each week to their churches and call for voluntary contributions?

Brethren, shall we raise the $100,000? Unless there is one mighty, almost universal sentiment in favor of it we will fail. Who will kindle the fire, who will fan it into a mighty flame? It is in your hands; your secretaries have carefully, prayerfuily, persistently, consistently worked for this result. We now confide in you. Will all with one accord work to this end that no shadow of failure may cloud the jubilee rejoicing of a people particularly blessed of God during fifty years.

The time has come for no half-hearted interest in this matter, and like all work of this kind, help must come from where help has come. Will those who have so nobly fought with us thus far come to our aid with one supreme effort?

Illinois News.

We are glad to say that the preaching brethren of the fifth district are enthusiastic over county organization. It is the desire of the district board that every county shall be in the organization by the next district convention. Under the discussion of the subject, "The Problem of Our Village and County Churches," led by Bro. N. S. Haynes at the state encampment, it was clearly brought out that the problems could be best solved by a strong and active county organization. Brethren of the fifth district, this work is too important to neglect. Where one county is not strong enough to organize by itself efforts are being made to bring it into an adjoining county organization. An effort will be made to bring Mason County into the Logan County organization. A. C. Roach, of Mason City, will be an able agitator on this question.

Bro. G. C. Peters will stir up the brethren in Christian County and get them to organize. Other counties in the district will revive their organization. Too much care cannot be taken in selecting county officers that will attend strictly to business. An officer that will not attend to the county work has no right to be in the way of God's business. He ought to get out. Pike County will have a meeting sometime this fall. The Macoupin County meeting will be held in November, at Carlinville. PAUL H. CASTLE, Sec.

The Churches of Minnesota.

Less than one month remains till our convention at Rochester, Aug. 16-21. You will therefore indulge me a few suggestions touching the work in clearing up the present year.

1. To the churches yet behind with their apportionments and pledges to the state work. The board has made its contracts with evangelists and dependent churches on your pledges. Redeem them. Come to the rescue in this your financial obligation to God. You would not enjoy a deficit reported at the convention, and your congregation named as one that has not kept its covenant with God and the brethren. We are workers together with him.

2. Chose your delegates with an eye to the business interests of the church. We hope to make the convention strictly deliberative as to business and delegative as to acting. Choose men and women full of love and thoughts for the cause.

3. I desire to suggest a few radical changes in our plans and methods of work.

The first one is to divide the state into districts. Place over these districts a preacher or an evangelist competent to use the resources and develop the field. The idea is cooperative. All of these districts will be in touch and auxiliary to the state board.

If this seems not feasable, then I suggest that the state corresponding secretary and state evangelist be made one.

Such a combination in one man would require experience in handling men, raising money, distributing money, as well as the powers of an evangelist.

By such a plan the corresponding secretary's salary could be used to supplement the evanlists salary, field work done, and the interests of the churches be made more reciprocal.

The discussion of these suggestions will have a place on the program. Give them your thought and prayer. Bring us the thought of your church on how to take Minnesota for Christ.

Brethren, we have a feast for the soul awaiting us at our convention. A larger number of visiting brethren from out of the state than ever before have promised to be present. We hope to make this the foretaste of the great Jubilee Convention. Come and enjoy the good things the Lord hath in store.

E. T. GADD, Cor. Sec.

Missouri Bible-schol Notes.

At our July meeting of the board we very seriously contemplated putting one of the best young men of the state in Northwest Missouri, and if the schools of the north part of Missouri that were not at Plattsburg will respond favorbly to inquiry by accepting their apportionments for the work this year we will do so long before the snow flies, and I am most anxiously waiting to hear from the cards just sent out. Will not our school representatives consider this immediately and favorably and drop me a card that your school will see to remitting its part sometime during the year ending May 31, 1900?

While at the board meeting J. W. Mounce handed me the full amount of the school pledge for the present year, $75, and this put our treasury ahead for the work to August 1st. "He that pays in advance pays twice," so that I feel grateful to the schools that are going to help us that way this year, as well as those that promptly meet their apportionments each quarter. In all this prompt giving Levi Marshal leads the way, so I am told, and the brethren delight in saying it.

At Paris the school is working against the summer exodus, so that on my visit some of their very best workers were absent. The superintendent, a busy knight of the bar, was away, the assistant and D. B. Ellis, the rustler, were gone, making the work heavier on W. H. Alexander, the faithful, and his corps of assistants, but the work goes on, and in some of the departments I saw manifestations of its efficiency in the ready answers of the children. Miss Jennie Burgess is handling the primary in just such a way as will make for good after while. Paris had no delegate this year at our Bible-school convention, for the pastor, W. N. Briney, was in Kentucky forming a partnership that will help in all his future work for the church, and while the brethren are proud of him and his work, they will be more so in the future. The officers and teachers authorized the same pledge for the coming year that they have paid for years in the past. It was here that my friend, Jacob Hugley, fell asleep, and here his widow and children; reside also our Sister Randall, and among no better people could their lot be cast. Near Paris I first began my ministry, and its leading citizens gave me help for my dear old grandmother's sake, and I strive to honor the friendship of men like Dr. Gore, D. H. Moss, S. S. Bassett, who with all their business cares love God and seek to serve him, and their children walk in the way.

At Russ, M. H. Wood reports $700 for another meeting house in South Missouri, and I verily believe that the time will come when our greater numerical strength will be in South Missouri. Brethren Giddens and Wood are both anxious to do us a great work this year, their letters breathing the constant prayer that they may honor God and their trust more and more; and did you notice, did you call the attention of your school to the six new schools organized in June, to the money raised for the two meeting houses, while the July reports gives us another new house or the money for it, and another new school, so that with pleasure I mailed the men their July salaries promptly, on receipt of their reports for the month, doing that much to help them as they seek to help us, and if you can remit your school's part for this first quarter, will keep this up every first.

But I must tell you of a Bible-school in the Klondike, superintended by one of the Paris elders, J. B. Davis, than whom there is no truer or more devoted man of God. It meets regularly and will do good, and I am told that very wicked men participate in its work with pleasure, and that they honor men like our brother. God bless him and Osborne and such as they, and prosper them in their way.

Let no county superintendents fail to see that their schools are represented at the several county meetings, also seeing that the program includes that needed in their respective counties. You know better than any one else, then have it. H. F. DAVIS.

State Mission Notes.

The Nodaway Valley district has had one of the most successful years in its history. Under the wise management of the district board and the enthusiastic evangelism of T. W. Cottingham they have had nearly 350 additions in seven months. They have still one month to work and the evangelist is now at Fillmore in a meeting and will go from there to Mt. Zion, in Gentry County, where he will finish up his year's work. It is expected that he will have 400 additions to report at the district meeting, which convenes at King City, and that in the whole district there will be an actual gain of 500 to the churches this year. Remember, this is not a new settled country, but in a place where it seems as though the work had already been done. If the ratio of this increase were to obtain in all parts of the state there would have been an actual gain to our people in the state of nearly 10,000.

What has been done in this district is possible in every other district in the state. The lethargy, the indifference, the neglect, suggests the question as to whether the spirit of evangelization has died or is dying out among us. In the Northeast districts, in the Audrain, Boone and Callaway districts, there are opportunities for the planting of the gospel that are wasting for the want of effort on the part of the churches there.

I fear that we are sleeping, and while we sleep the enemy will sow tares. Do you think the work is all done? Do you know that in St. Louis County proper we have but one church, Tuxedo? In St. Charles County but one, Foristell? In Warren County one, Warrenton? Take the leading railroads out of St. Louis. On the Burlington we travel 60 miles before we find one of our churches, to Foley. On the Wabash 50 miles, to Foristell. On the Missouri Pacific 54 miles, to New Haven. On the Frisco 100 miles, to St. James. All this vast territory lying around this great city, teeming with tens and hundreds of thousands of people, and yet we have no church in it all.

We ought, we must have a fund to employ men to enter this field as evangelists, to support men at the places of importance as pastors, or else acknowledge to the world that we have lost the enthusiasm, the devotion, the zeal of the fathers for the propagation of the truth of God. Have we the truth? Is it necessary for the conversion of men? Then for the sake of concistency let us arouse to the need of the hour and not supinely perish.

There are serious questions confronting us. Do you know that nearly twice as many churches so far have contributed to Foreign Missions in Missouri as have paid anything to our state work? Now, why? I know that I have yet two months in which to bring up the arrearages, and many, very many, of the churches will respond to the appeal. But still there will be many who will not give heed at all. I have a letter before me in which one of the best of men tells me about, to how many things the church of which he is a member has contributed this year. The list is long, the total a credit to the church, but he closes up by say that they do not feel able to contribute, to our work at all this year. This seems to say that every other interest comes and ought to come before our state work. I do not believe it. We must have a new rallying and state missions must come to the front. No church ought to feel that it has done the full measure of its duty till it has come heartily into this work.

In the beginning of this month we sent out cards for the last quarter and we hopep to have money in the treasury to pay the men for the month of July. Yet our treasury is empty. Do you wonder that your secretary becomes discouraged and disheartened? Will you not help now in this work?

Yours in His name,

T. A. ABBOTT.

Lake City, Aug. 1.—Twenty-two additions in July; 20 by confession and baptism. Church united and aggressive.—F. HEY LEMON.

At Pleasantvilte, during the year ending July 30th, F. D. Ferrall has added 50 to the church without the aid of an evangelist; 31 by baptism, six from other religious bodies and 13 by letter or statement. A flourishing Junior Society has been organized and the old church debt paid off. The missionary offering home, state and foreign was $55. Mr. Ferrall has been called to serve the church another year.

OHIO.

Findlay, July 31.—A baptism July 27th, another July 30th, also a confession the same day at our mission school. I preached Sunday 23rd night to a full house on "The Influence of Ingersoll" and at close of sermon took a confession which is reported. Last night preached to a full house with deep interest pervading.—A. M. GROWDEN.

Bellaire, July 31.—Four confessions yesterday and three confessions and one added by reinstatement on the preceding Lord's day. We expect a good-sized delegation from the Upper Ohio Valley to Cincinnati in October.—C. M. W.

Avoca, Aug. 2.—The church here closed a six days' meeting last Wednesday night with 17 added; 12 by baptism, one of whom did not take membership with us, but got a statement to unite with the Rogers church. J. C. France did the preaching and Bro. Jordan, pastor of the church at Rogers, did the baptizing. This church now numbers 40 members, all in good order and working nicely.—F. M. SEAMSTER, pastor.

MISSOURI.

Marionville, Aug. 4.—Our short meeting at Smithfield of two weeks resulted in eight additions. Bro. France is doing a good work there. We start Monday to North Missouri on a tour.—MORGANS AND DAUGHTER.

Kansas City.—Two added to Westport Ave. Christian Church Sunday; one by confession.—THOS. J. DICKSON, pastor.

Joplin, July 31.—We had three additions here yesterday; two by letter and one by confession. Our Jubilee service and reception will occur next Thursday night.—W. F. TURNER.

Tarkio, Aug. 1.—Four additions during July. One of them my good wife. We have just finished some repairing and painting on our church house at a cost of nearly $100. Our county convention at Fairfax was a success. A tent meeting at Westboro has just closed. Only two were added to membership, but much good was done. Bros. McCluer and McKenzie, of C. C. C., Albany, did the preaching. Fairfax, Rockport and North Star churches are thriving under the able ministry of Edwards and Glascock. All aboard for our district convention at King City, Aug. 29-31.—A. R. HUNT.

KANSAS.

Columbus, July 24.—Two more confessions at regular services here yesterday.—M. MCFARLAND, pastor.

Kanapolis, Aug. 4.—Meeting nine days old; 23 added. We hope to locate a pastor and buy a church house before we close.—H. V. SCHOLES, evangelist.

Pratt, July 28.—Our tabernacle meeting with R. L. Lotz continues. Bro. L. is giving us some strong meat. My next meeting will be at Holt, Mo.—V. E. RIDENOUR, singer.

Horton, Aug. 1.—The church at Horton has just closed the most successful meeting ever held in the city. It was cocducted by Bro. S. M. Martin and was a community stirrer. As a direct result of the meeting 104 were added to the church and many more given a better understanding of the claims of the gospel. As a preacher of the simple gospel of Christ as "the power of God unto salvation," Bro. Martin is an effective force. The converts of this meeting are singularly well instructed, and there is not one but realizes that it means much to be a Christian. At the close of the meeting an indefinite call was extended to the pastor to remain after the completion of his first year, Oct. 1.—B. F. VAUGHAN.

In the American Monthly Review of Reviews for August the editor comments on educational conditions in the South, with reference to the future of both the white and colored races. In the same magazine is the address delivered at the Capon Springs (W. Va.) conference in June by Dr. J. L. M. Curry, one of the foremost educational leaders of the South, and an active executive officer of the Peabody and Slater Fund. The results of the Peace Conference, Secretary Alger's resignation and other of the foremost issues of the day are ably discussed in this number of the American Monthly Review of Reviews.

The North American Review for August is remarkable for the number and diversity of subjects of present interests which are represented in its large pages. Some of the most important events and movements of the time are discussed in it by those who are either closely associated with them or have made a special study of them; and, at the same time, as befits a magazine intended for summer reading, it contains several brilliant articles of an entertaining character on literary, dramatic, artistic and athletic themes.

The August number of Self Culture continues to show the rapid strides made by that unique magazine. The half-tone pictures are superb, and they illustrate such interesting subjects as "Quebec the Gibraltar of America," "The Birth of the American Flag," "A Decade of Institutional Development in Philadelphia," "Papal Possibilities" and "Andreas Hofer, the Tyrolese Patriot." The portraits in "Papal Possibilities" are from photographs by the official photographer at the Vatican.

The Infidel and His Daughter.

[Suggested by reading a newspaper paragraph describing the scene between Ethan Allen and his daughter on the eve of her death. She asked the stern infidel in whose faith he should have her die, his or her mother's.]

"The damps of death are coming fast,
My father, o'er my brow;
The past, with all its scenes, has fled,
And I must turn me now
To that dim future which in vain
My feeble eyes descry;
Tell me, my father, in this hour,
In whose stern faith to die?

"In thine? I've watched the scornful smile
And heard the withering tone,
Whene'er the Christian's humble hope
Was placed above thine own;
I've heard thee speak of coming death
Without a shade of gloom,
And laugh at all the childish fears
That cluster round the tomb.

"Or is it in my mother's faith?
How fondly do I trace,
Through many a weary year long past,
That calm and saintly face!
How often do I call to mind,
Now she is 'neath the sod,
The place, the hour in which she drew
My early thoughts to God.

"'Twas then she took this sacred book,
And from its burning page
Read how its truths support the soul
In youth and failing age!
And bade me in its precepts live,
And by its precepts die,
That I might share a home of love
In worlds beyond the sky.

"My father, shall I look above,
Amid this gathering gloom,
To him whose promises of love
Extend beyond the tomb;
Or curse the being who has blest
This checkered path of mine,
And promises eternal rest,
Or die, my sire, in thine?"

The frown upon that warrior brow,
Passed like a cloud away,
And tears coursed down the rugged cheek
That flowed not till that day.
"Not—not in mine," with choking voice,
The skeptic made reply—
"But in thy mother's holy faith,
My daughter, may'st thou die!"

A copy of the above poem was sent to the Sunday Republic by Mrs. A. J. Tommerson, of this city.

Blessings of a Rainy Day.

BY LOUISE BOVILLE.

"The day was dark and dreary,
It rained and the wind was never weary," sang the poet, and Nettie Forrester wondered if he had not written those words on a day like this. It was Sunday, too, and Nettie did so dislike rainy Sundays. "Oh! dear!" she thought, despondently, "everybody will be cross and disagreeable today; why can't it wait until to-morrow to rain?"

Just at this moment the figure of a young girl, clad in a mackintosh and carrying a dripping umbrella, appeared around the corner.

"Ready, Nettie?" she called, cheerfully. "Isn't this glorious? Why, my dear girl, how blue you look!" she exclaimed.

"Isn't this enough to make any one look blue?" the other returned.

"Why, certainly not; though it is rather disagreeable," admitted truthful Maimie; "but that is a better reason for us to look cheerful and

"'Let a little sunshine in,'"

she replied, laughingly, singing the line from a Sunday-school hymn. Nettie smiled too, and the two happy-faced girls started off to church. Many sad and ill-humored people met them on the way, and a glance at those pleasant faces unconsciously brightened their own. On account of the weather many of the Sunday-school teachers were absent, and the superintendent came anxiously to the teacher of the class of which these two girls were members, asking if she could spare two of her little flock.

"Mamie, will you go?" she inquired.

"Yes, Miss Brown," the girl replied promptly.

A number of others were asked, but refused. At last Nettie said quietly, "I'll go if no one else will."

"Thank you, dear," said Miss Brown, gratefully, and Nettie was soon installed as teacher of a class of little boys.

The prospect was rather discouraging, as not one had even read the lesson, and they were all mischievous boys. But Nettie bravely did her best, and when the bell rang sat down among them and wondered if she had done any good.

"Well, I tried," she thought, hopefully.

"How do you like teaching?" asked her friend, when Sunday-school had been dismissed.

"I would like it if I knew enough to teach," replied Nettie, "but I need to learn so much more myself."

"Yes, that is true of us both," said Mamie, earnestly. "But if we all wait until we know enough, where would we get enough teachers?"

"I never thought of that," replied the other. "But I am afraid I didn't do those little boys any good."

"Nettie, you sowed the seed and God will give the increase," was the earnest rejoinder.

There was no reply to this and the two friends walked on in silence.

When Nettie's home was reached the girl clasped the hand of her friend, saying warmly, "You are one of the greatest blessings a rainy day ever brought, Maimie; don't you ever grow cross or discouraged?"

"Yes, very often," returned the girl. "But I just try again, with the help of Christ."

These words were true and Nettie never forgot them, and whenever inclined to give up she only repeated these words, and did as they advised. Though meeting with many failures and often falling into temptation, Nettie kept on trying and did much good that she knew not of. She was happy in her life, and like all Christians found joy in the Master's service.

Lottie.

RHITTA C. FOOTE.

It is the new-old story. You sit in the twilight with your Bible on your knee and a sigh upon you lips; you are a father no more and your wife listens in vain for a well-known voice.

But list! Out of the deep unknown there comes a voice, sweet, gentle, harmonious: you hear it in the tinkling of the twilight bell; you hear it in the softest murmur of a Sabbath breeze. "And the child grows and the grace of God is upon it." Heaven's breezes now fan her cheeks; heavenly manna feeds her soul; she drinks of the river of life eternal; she bathes in the silvery tide; a new life is breathed into her heart; a new name is written on her forehead. Shall we call it "Charlotte May," or shall we call it Angel?

A year passes, a year is gone, and still your earthly home is shadowed, and still from upper courts the same sweet peace, the same sad love, the same gentle voice: "And the child grows and the grace of God is upon it." And the "Rock of Ages" seems nearer and clearer and dearer than ever before.

Lottie is a woman now and you are going home to her. Slowly the sun sinks in the western sky, and over the mountain and valley the twilight breezes sing their lullaby as down the horizon sinks the orb of day, and gently down like a summer rain comes the evening. 'Tis midnight now, and clinging with reluctant hand to the remnant of the dying day, you whisper to earth—"Good-bye."

Good-bye to sorrow, good-bye to pain,
Good-bye to earthly loss and gain,
Good-bye old earth with your sighs and tears,
And mingled mercies of many years,
We never shall meet again

'Tis morning now! The gate swings wide to glories unexplored. The Savior shows his smiling face in wondrous splendor wrapt, and joys unequaled are spread before your gaze. A sweet voice whispers, "Aren't you glad for me, papa, aren't you glad I'm waiting for you." What a grand reunion, what a welcome on the other shore where we no longer weep for what has been, but smile at what must be!

"Where the mists have rolled in splendor from the beauty of the hills,
Where the sunshine, warm and tender, falls in kisses on the rills;"
Where there is no sorrow and crying, where all tears are wiped away.

O "low green tents!" O lowly mounds,
Where treasures buried lie,
May sunbeams kiss your grassy tops
Where gentle breezes sigh.

A golden chain of holy love
Has linked our hearts to you,
And angels whisper of her life,
Of the old ones and the new.

How sweet the waving pine trees swung,
And when the preacher said,
"Ashes to ashes, dust to dust,"
We thought that she was dead.

And so we placed her 'neath your care,
We plucked the lilies white,
Our eyes were dimmed with sorrow's tears,
And so we thought 'twas night.

O bleeding hearts, by sorrow torn,
Still gazing on the sod,
Those "low green tents" shall not be pitched
In the city of our God.

A Valentine Story.

KATE W. SEARCY.

It was February 12, two days before St. Valentine's Day. The boys in Miss Partridge's room could hardly recite for thinking of it.

One corner of Timsie Foreman's desk was packed with the cheap colored pictures he had bought at the drug store.

"Wasn't it fun, though, to look at 'em in the show window an' pick out the ones that fit folks I'm goin' to send 'em to!" thought Timsie.

That night he spread them out on his bedroom floor and giggled over them.

One was the sourest, ugliest kind of an old maid. She had thin hair and wrinkles and a turned-up nose. One eye was squinted in the most comic manner. A big, lean, black cat stood on the back of her chair. She was darning a sock. Under the picture were some printed verses. They were very coarse, but Timsie thought them fine.

"This will 'zactly suit Miss Howard!" he laughed. "She's not quite that old an' ugly, but she's got a squint eye an' a black cat an' she sews for a livin'. I'd like to see her when she gets this! He, he!"

One was a little boy with a deformed body.

"That's Billy O'Brien! He couldn't help the hack runnin' over him an' bendin' him up so, but he fires up an' uses his fists so rough when a feller looks at 'im, won't it be fun to send it an' be safe! He, he!"

The others were bad enough, you may be sure. "I guess some folks won't feel so big when they see theirselves as St. Valentine sees 'em!" quoth Timsie, as he went chuckling to bed.

While he slept a great change took place. He heard a rumbling sound; then felt a jerk and a queer, gliding motion. He sat up and looked around to see what it meant. He was in a big chair, rocking. The room was warm and neat, but not like his own at all. A large mirror hung on the wall. In it he saw that he was no longer a little boy, but a tall, gaunt woman. To make sure, he rubbed his eyes. As he took his hands away he saw that one eye was all drawn and squinted. Then he knew that he was Miss Howard. He began to feel and act just like her.

She stooped and stroked the cat and picked up the sewing in her lap. Her heart was light and there was a quiet smile on her face.

At that moment the gate opened and the postman came up the walk. The sight of him made her happy, for she did not often have letters come to her.

She leaned back in her chair and joyfully cut the envelope with her scissors. Out fell the gaudy picture of an ugly old woman with a squinting eye like hers! Beneath it were some cutting, unkind words about old maids. O how it hurt her to be thus rudely shown that people noticed and laughed at her misfortunes! She bowed her head in her hands and tears crept out between her thin fingers. But she must not waste her time in tears. With trembling fingers and a heavy heart she took up her sewing again, and worked at it the best she could, straining her weak, red eyes to see through the tears that filled them.

There came another rumble and jerk, and Timsie turned uneasily over in bed. He rubbed his eyes a little and the squint was gone. He sat up and stared. It was broad daylight. Scattered on the floor were the hateful Valentines he had thought so funny the day before.

It was a very quiet boy who went from Timsie's home that morning and slipped into Timsie's seat at school.

"What's the matter, Timsie?" shouted the boys at recess. "Where's your pile of Valentines? Got 'em all ready to send?"

"I'm not goin' to send any," said Timsie.

"My ma says she wouldn't either, if she was me!" said Tommie Burton.

"An' ma told me not to dare send one!" said Bennie Woods. "But I thought 'twould be fun to see you send yours. Wisht you would!"

"It ain't fun," said Timsie. "Besides, it's wrong. I don't want to get any o' that when I'm old an' can't outgrow 'em."

"Tell you what!" cried Tommie. "Le's send some pretty ones!"

"Le's do!" urged Bennie. "Ma'll let me do that! There's just heaps of 'em down to Mr. Graham's, with angels an' babies an' hearts on 'em!"

"Com on, then!" cried Timsie. "Maybe he'll swap some nice ones for the old ugly things I bought yesterday. Le's ask him."

As they trooped to the teacher for permission to go, Timsie was not so full of fun, 'tis true, as he had been the day before, but he was happier. And is it not better to be good and happy than merely to be funny? I wonder what the young folks of our "Family Circle" think of it?

Personal Work.

On a cold winter evening, said Dr. T. L. Cuyler, recently, I made my first call on a rich merchant in New York. As I left the door, and the piercing gale swept in, I said:

"What an awful night for the poor!"

He went back and bringing to me a roll of bank bills, said:

"Please hand these for me to the poorest people you know."

After a few days, I wrote to him the grateful thanks of the poor whom his bounty had relieved, and added:

"How is it that a man so kind to his fellow creatures has always been so unkind to his Savior as to refuse him his heart?"

That sentence touched him to the core. He sent for me to come and talk with him, and speedily gave himself to Christ. He has been a most useful Christian ever since. But he told me I was the first person who had ever talked to him about his soul in twenty years. One hour of pastoral work did more for that man than the pulpit effort of a lifetime.—New York Observer.

Dreams of the Holy Land.

I know not if the coming years shall darken into night,
Or from Egyptian bondage lead my soul to Canaan's light.
I know not if these waking eyes shall e'er behold thy face,
Dim land of awe and mystery—dread cradle of our race!

But when the dying day begins his misty veil to weave,
And 'mid the holy hush descends the sweetly solemn eve,
My dreams are golden with the light of Asia's amber sky—
I stand amid the stately scenes of ancient days gone by.

Night fades away; the slumbrous air grows faint with fervid beams
And the glory of the Orient upon my vision streams.
Around me rise the purple hills; I tread the golden sand;
I breathe the airs of Palestine, the ever Holy Land.

Rich perfumes flush the charmed air; Gilboa's spicy breeze
Sings softly through the silence of the odor-dropping trees;
Adown the winding vales the flocks are sheltered from the heat;
The palm trees bend in beaty, and the spring is at my feet.

Up from the mist of ages soars the grand primeval morn,
And calmly in its radiance stands the seers of the dawn;
In robes of light, all century-white, they pass before my gaze,
Soft shining in the chastened glow of patriarchal days.

They pass, the prophet, priest and king, immortal evermore,
With brows all luminous with faith, eyes deep with mystic lore;
They pass, the world's great patriarchs, with slow and solemn tread,
And all the lordly legions of the saintly, sceptered dead.

The sunlight wanes—a wondrous change comes o'er the burning sky;
Robed in a rarer radiance the hallowed hillsides lie;
The placid moon is at her full; I see no cloudy bars
To mar the silver-shining of the everlasting stars.

Milton's Last Poem.

I am old and blind;
Men point at me as smitten with God's frown,
Afflicted and deserted by my kind:
Yet I am not cast down.

I am weak; yet, dying,
I murmur not that I no longer see;
Poor, old and helpless, I the more belong,
Father supreme, to thee.

O merciful One!
When men are farthest, then thou art most near;
When men pass coldly by, my weakness shun,
Thy chariot I hear.

Thy glorious face
Is leaning toward me, and its holy lsght
Shines upon my lowly dwelling-place,
And there is no more night.

On bended knee
I recognize thy purpose, clearly shown,
My vision thou hast dimmed that I might see
Thyself—thyself alone.

I have naught to fear;
This darkness is the shadow of thy wing:
Beneath it I am almost sacred, here
Can come no evil thing.

The Rich Man's Burden.

Is it a disgrace to die rich?

From the peak of a fortune that is popularly supposed to be $200,000,000, Andrew Carnegie has declared that the man who dies rich, dies disgraced. On the other hand, Russell Sage, who has gathered a a great many millions himself, retorts that the disgrace is in dying poor. It does not seem to have occurred to either of these rich men that they are virtually of the same opinion. They measure success by the same yardstick—the ell of money.

The question, stripped of all sentimentality, is simply this: What is the responsibility attached to a great fortune? Is the rich man's first duty to the financial and commercial interests of the country, or to that part of the community that stands in need of private benefaction? By "dying rich," Mr. Sage means dying in harness—fulfilling to the end his obligations to the meney-breeding community. Mr. Carnegie believes that it is his duty to give the latter half of his life to distributing the fortune he has accumlated in the first half.

The distribution of surplus wealth is the chief problem that confronts American civilization. What the slavery question was forty years ago, that question will be to-morrow. Mr. Carnegie has discerned the evil; but what is his remedy? Charity—beneficence—expending money in an attempt to check poverty. At first glance this seems to be a magnificent intention. There is a moral beauty about charity that appeals with singular power to this generation.

I met a New York politician the other evening just after he had given alms to a sturdy beggar. "I refused that fellow at first," he said, "and somehow or other I didn't feel right, so I went back and gave him a quarter." "Why?" I asked. "Well, I like to have my conscience all right, so I can sleep with impunity."

That was the crude Tammany way of defining the impulse that has led Mr. Carnegie to devote his millions to ameliorating poverty.

Now the beneficence that attempts to fight poverty is a positive injury. Said Herbert Spencer: "To help the good-for-nothing at the expense of the good is a social crime." Philanthropy has done good only when it has fostered a desire for a well-ordered life—the instinct toward social well-being—love for order and beautiful things. The daily war with want must be waged by the individual. The business of philanthropy is to reward the man who fights this battle well. To make him richer—to increase his physical comfort—is to pull down his self-respect.

If Mr. Carnegie expends his fortune—be it in art galleries, concert rooms, libraries, public baths, theatres—in aiding the poor poor man to lead a well-ordered life while waging war with want, he will do $200,000,000 worth of good; if he tries to fight poverty he will do just so much harm, and had far better left his money to breed in trade and commerce. VANCE THOMPSON.

A Pleasant Smile.

BY DE WITT COSGROVE WING.

There's a great poem in a smile. The cold, unsmiling face we sometimes see does not make its possessor a friend unless there is something about the man or woman to counteract the repulsive countenance. It is easy to smile, whether one sees anything funny or not. The smile that makes those who see it feel its influence is one that comes from the heart. The habitually smiling face is like the one that never smiles,only it may have less bad influence. When one meets a stranger and the occasion makes it necessary to establish an acquaintance, or at least to talk a few minutes, he has a kindlier feeling toward the stranger if he is pleasant, and, when asked a question, replies in a pleasant, agreeable manner. If a smile is seen on each face when the conversation seems to warrant it, a feeling of ease, one that breaks up stiff formality, is experienced. A pleasant look should be mutual. There are some cross, gruff old sinners, saturated with beer and whisky, however, who never smile only when a dime is seen coming their way. Where you find selfishness and moroseness in a man you are not likely to find smiles. Kind words from a smiling but not deceptive face makes the cold world seem much more merciful and just, and those who can't smile are either dyspeptics, heretics or lunatics. Smiles make life sweeter and pleasanter, and tend to a more substantial brotherhood.

There are far too many unsmiling faces in this world. Too many men are wrapped up in self. I believe the men who maintain the cross, angry looking face and answer their fellowmen in a voice of young thunder are earthly representatives of His Satanic Majesty and haven't the power to smile from the heart, whence true and influencing smiles come. The cheerful man with a smile on proper occasions is the happy man, the helper of humanity. His smiles and pleasant countenance will be remembered by those with whom he associated. Nature abounds in smiles. Why not we, as she, abound in smiles?

FREE TO SUFFERERS.

The New Cure for Kidney, Bladder and Uric Acid Troubles.

Almost everybody who reads the newspapers is sure to know of the wonderful cures made by Dr. Kilmer's Swamp-Root, the great kidney remedy.

It is the great medical triumph of the nineteenth century; discovered after years of scientific research by Dr. Kilmer, the eminent kidney and bladder specialist, and is wonderfully successful in promptly curing kidney, liver, bladder and uric acid troubles.

Swamp-Root has been tested in so many ways, in hospital work, in private practice, among the helpless too poor to purchase relief, and has proved so successful in every case that a special arrangement has been made by which all readers of the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST who have not already tried it, may have a sample bottle sent free by mail, also a book telling more about Swamp-Root and how to find out if you have kidney or bladder trouble. When writing mention reading this generous offer in the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST and send your address to Dr. Kilmer & Co., Binghamton, N. Y. The regular fifty-cent and one-dollar sizes are sold by all first-class druggists.

Pitching Toward Sodom.

Men pitch toward Sodom with regard to their children over and over again. A father says, "What am I going to make of my boy?" He makes up his mind what business his boy is to have, and then he sets himself with full purpose to endeavor to find the college or situation where that boy is most likely to receive the best preparation for his business or profession.

You say that is right.

That is not right! His first business is to put the boy where his character will be kept right and pure. His first business is to see where he can best secure his child's eternal interests, even though he may have to sacrifice something in temporal things. Men are pitching toward Sodom with their children over and over again, and to secure them a competence in earthly things and bring them to places of success in life, they are risking and ruining their eternal welfare.

Another way in which a man pitches toward Sodom is this: He lives in one of our large cities. God prospers him in his business. But what is he moving for? His children are growing up. He is looking for the best suburb, and when he makes up his mind he looks for the best house, and presently tells you he has found what he wants.

"But where are you going to worship?"

"I never thought of that. I must go and see."

In scores of instances men have blighted the spirituality of all their family by taking them away from the city house and old home sanctuary into a neighborhood where there is nothing to help them spiritually. You are piching toward Sodom unless you have taken into account what spiritual food you are going to provide for yourself and your bairns.—Rev. G. Campbell Morgan, in "The True Estimate of Life." (Chicago: The Bible Institute Colportage Association, 15 cents.)

Pay as I Go.

I met a feilowman, the other day, who was very severe on another who had failed to pay a debt due him, and who puffed up as he said, with a good deal of fervor, "I pay as I go." This suggested some questions, and I began to fire them at him.

"How much did you pay your preacher last year?"

"Nothing; 'cause I don't owe him nothing."

"What did you contribute to missionary work during the year?"

"Not a cent; it is none of my business."

"What did you give to charity in 1898?"

"Nothing. I believe in charity beginning and remaining at home."

"What have you contributed to the support of disabled soldiers?"

"Not a dime. Let the state care for them."

"What taxes did you pay on money you have loaned out?"

"Not a penny. That's none of the government's concern."

"Did you help the cripple begging in our community the other day?"

"No. Let all such go to the free hospital."

"Did you ever contribute to the support of a free hospital?"

"No. It's no home of mine, and I don't ask shelter from any of them."

"Did you offer to help the poor widow who lives near you, and whom you know to be in want?"

"No, for the poorhouse is the place for all such."

"Did you help nurse that neighbor who suffered such long and painful illness?"

"No. Doctors and nurses are paid for that work."

"Did you welcome the stranger you saw in church last Sunday?"

"No. Let the ushers attend to that."

"Did you ever give a word of cheer to a discouraged brother man?"

"No; don't ever bother with such folks."

"Did you ever speak a word of sympathy to a sorrowing soul?"

"Never did, and never expect to."

"Did you ever offer a hand to a fallen sellowman?"

"No; my hands are busy at work."

"And yet you say you pay as you go?"

Hopelessly insovlent! Criminally in debt! Many times a bankrupt! Selfish spendthrift! Faithless to a high and sacred trust! Cowardly dodger of duty! False to God and man! Miserable miser! Repent! Ask for mercy, or soon you will stand in the presence of a just Judge, and be pronounced an eternal bankrupt!—Union Gospel News.

Important Commercial Positions for Women.

Taking in the whole country there is no position connected with the running of a great mercantile establishment that is not filled by women. There are women advertising managers who receive salaries of $5,000 a year, women buyers and women dressers, and superintendents and managers who earn very nearly as much, and traveling saleswomen whose commissions amount to more than is received by two-thirds of the men drummers. In this industry, at least, woman has demonstrated that she possesses executive and administrative qualities equal to those of most men.

WHY is it that the brands of White Lead made by quick or patent process are almost invariably sold below the price of standard brands?

Because practical painters and consumers generally know that they are inferior to the brands made by the "old Dutch process" of slow corrosion. The brands named in margin are genuine.

The Preacher Who "Took to the Woods!"

My pleasure in the society of "nature" has always been as much a matter of "dress" as in that of "people!" A man would form but a poor opinion of a picnic if he should attend it in a "swallow-tail," and would be utterly wretched at an evening reception in corduroys or blue jeans. You must have on the "wedding garment" to enjoy the "wedding feast," and there are probably millions of people who do not "love" nature simply because they have never worn the proper clothes into her presence. She has her own grim humors and razor-edged ironies, and can make a man in patent leather boots and high collar as uncomfortable in a woodland glen—as can a bevy of girls a young fellow in a parlor—if they find him there without his cuffs!

I dress with as much care when I go to visit the haunts of nature as I do when I enter art gallaries or churches or dining-rooms. No wonder men "hate" rain storms in boiled shirts and lavender trousers. No wonder they "abominate" mountain climbing in tight boots! That satirical old lady, Mother Nature, means to make them! —Chas. Frederic Goss, in the Interior.

London's Population.

The human population of London is one of the wonders of the world, but still more marvelous is its animal population.

Concealed in its walls, drains and sewers are from 20,000,000 to 25,000,000 mice, and between 5,000,000 and 6,000,000 rats.

To prevent these from multiplying into billions and eating the people out of house and home there are 1,000,000 cats and 200,000 dogs.

Of domestic fowls and pigeons there are over 500,000, and a certain computation shows that within the boundaries of the metropolis there are 12,000,000 sparrows, thrushes, blackbirds and other birds of all kinds.

Of fishes in the various ponds and lakes aquaria, and in private houses, there are from 3,000,000 to 4,000,000.

And of horses, donkeys, mules, cows, goats and sheep there is a total of 300,000.

This makes the immense total of 42,000,000 to 49,000,000 animals of all kinds. Add the 6,500,000 human beings, and you have from 45,500,000 to 55,500,000 living animals within the metropolitan radius, not to speak of the thousands of millions of worms, flies, bees, wasps, butterflies and the like.—New York Telegram.

Good Advice.

Every young man should take care of his money. It is a religious duty, I think, for one to get all the money he can, to keep all he can, and to give away all he can. I have followed this principle all my life, as is evidenced in this little book. It tells me exactly what I did with my money during my first few years in business. It shows that between September, 1855, and January, 1856, I receiued just $50. Out of this sum I paid for my washing and my board, and managed to save a little money to put away. I find in looking through the book that I gave a cent to Sunday-school every Sunday. It wasn't much, but this was all I could afford to give to this particular object. I was giving to several other religious causes at the same time, and what I could afford to give regularly, and this has been a lifelong habit of mine. The next year after this I earned $25 a month. I was beginning to be a capitalist, and I suppose I ought to have thought myself a criminal for having so much money. I paid all my own bills at this time, and had some money to give away. I also had the happiness of saving some. I'm not sure but I was more independent then than now. I couldn't secure the most fashionable cut of clothing, but I dressed well enough—as well as I could afford, anyhow. I certainly did not buy any clothing that I could not pay for. I did not make any obligations that I could not meet. I lived within my means, and my advice to every young man is to do the same.—John D. Rockefeller, in the New York Voice.

With The Children.

CONDUCTED BY

J. BRECKENRIDGE ELLIS, PLATTSBURG, MO.

Don't be deceived, friends, when our society is printed as the "Advanced Society." The correct name is "Advance"—we haven't reached a finished state yet; pity the type-setters of the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST don't belong to our society; it would do them good, and they would not print us as "Advent" and "Advanced" if they were members and knew how it felt. Do you know there are over four hundred of us? There are. Just think of that! More than four hundred people in nearly every state, as well as Canada, who are keeping the same rules, or trying to. Why? Because they are determined to do all they can to improve that smart, nimble part of themselves that goes by the name of Mind. So we read five pages of history a week and thirty lines of poetry, not because we dote on history and poetry, but because they make healthy food, and the mind grows on them, and develops and becomes strong. For the person who only reads fiction is like one who only cares for candy and cake. And if he don't look out he will lose all appetite for useful victuals, and his teeth will get bad, and his stomach will play him false, and he will get cross and sickly. But we of the Advance Society will by-and-by get to like history and poetry, and so come to appreciate only good books, and when the Master demands an account of our talents, we will not bring out our minds wrapped up in napkins, like some people's minds I know of—only it is best to name no names. Some people can't tell a linen handkerchief from a nice cotton one; they will display the cotton goods in all innocence, but better trained eyes know; and some people will fall into raptures over sentimental, weak, foolish books; they can't tell cotton books from linen. And the only way to tell is to read good books and train your eyes. Dear children, avoid cotton books! You can't tell 'em by the price—some of the best books are printed in yellow paper. You can't judge by your friend's opinion—probably your friend is misguided in this matter. Train your eyes by planting them on history, poetry, good quotations and, above all, the Bible.

The other day I got a letter from the post office, the envelope very soiled, the stamp so faded that it showed only a pink stain, and this was printed on one corner: "Damaged by Water—Wreck." Evidently the train had been derailed, the mailbags had been plunged under water, and I held in my hand a piece of an adventure! I imagined the confusion, the crash, the terror of the passengers, the flashing of lanterns—I hope nobody was hurt—and at last the mailbags were rescued and the letters spread out to dry, and just think, somebody scraped off enough mud from a certain envelope to find my address, nearly faded from sight! I am glad it was my letter instead of me! Well, I didn't break open the envelope, because it was already wide apart, but I read the following and with pleasure: "I thought I would write and tell you how our Kansas Advance Society is getting along at Parsons, Kan. We have nineteen active members. Last month we elected the following officers: President, Ethel Dennis; vice-president, Edith McLaughlin; secretary, Minnie Ames; treasurer, Gussie Harter; librarian, Bessie Ellis; manager, Gertrude Everet. We had an ice cream social and cleared $3.45, with which we bought some books for our library. It was a rainy night, so we did not make as much as we otherwise would. A little later I will send four names for the Honor List." This letter is from Minnie Ames, and it names the nineteen members. I would like to know what books they bought and what kind of programs they have. I think that library a splendid idea. By the way, where there are circles of this kind, why not take a good magazine? Six cents apiece from each member would make over a dollar, and a dollar will buy an excellent magazine.

Mabel Fleming, Athol, Kan.: "I feel that I should have sent in something for our page, but we have been so busy; we are just through harvesting, and we have been having so much company. Bro. Drummond held a meeting in the schoolhouse at Athol; he stayed at our place. On Memorial Day five of us children were baptized. I intend to keep on reading—I know it is doing me lots of good; I hope it will do for the rest what it has done for me." From Houstonia, Mo.: "When my oldest brother was about four years old, mamma took him to grandma's. He was playing with a chair and stuck his head between the rounds, but when he tried to get out his head seemed bigger; so he was fastened. Mamma and grandma worked to get him out, but they couldn't, so grandma took the hatchet and cut the round. He got up and looked at the chair awhile and said, 'I 'ought 'at ole 'air was 'oing to 'll me.' Anna B. You might not know me by that name, so I'll put Anna Black." Mattie Lorena Upton writes that she feels acquainted with me because her mother knew my mother, and her sister "used to see me sitting in the door feeding the chickens." Mattie also lives in Houstonia, Mo. Floy Popplewell (Eureka Springs) spent last summer in the country, helping her mother put up fruit. She says she is going to do the same this year. She could put up all the fruit there is in this part of the country and have lots of time left to play. Gerald Dever and his mother have been reading "Little Lord Fountleroy;" they are reading my story, "A Lost Memory," in the Young Folks. Gerald is a member of the one-dollar league of the Foreign Missionary Society. He received a souvenir button. He lives in Hume, Ill.

Mabel Gunther writes from Waterloo, Ia.: "My sister, Willoughby (seven), would like to join our society. I would like to have some of our members write to me, so I could read to our Waterloo band, to encourage us. We had a small program last Saturday because it was the last week in our quarter. We now have our badges. We have ten members. The best quotation I have learned:

'Five little things observe with care,
Of whom you speak, to whom you speak,
And how, and when, and where.'"

A. L. Patton, Annada, Mo.: "I wish to join the Advance Society. I am twelve and live in the country. I am fond of reading." Lillie Tinken, Upper Lake, Cal.: "I have read about the Advance Society, and would like to join it. I will try to keep the resolutions; I am ten." Lilamay Dawson, Turley, I. T.: "I have been reading 'With the Children' ever since it started, and now I ask for admittance. I read about George and Jennie Weston the very first thing when the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST came, and I am very sorry the story closed so soon. My papa is a doctor and a preacher. I am fourteen." Vera McCain, Coldwater, Miss.: "Here comes a Mississippi sandraker that wishes to join the Advance Society and advance with you. I enjoy our page very much. I am fourteen. I like to ride horseback, but I haven't any horse I can ride. Papa is a teacher, but is resting now. I hope to be on the Honor List in twelve weeks."

Next week we will have more of the continued story. You will remember that Abimelech had determined to kill all his half-brothers; but Caleb succeeded in warning one of them, a boy of his own age, named Jotham. The next chapter will tell how they tried to escape from the band of murderers, and whether they got away or not. You will remember that the main facts of this story are from the Bible.

New Honor List: Florence Leavitt (second quarter), Frankfort, S. D.; Mabel Fleming; Mabel Gunther (second quarter); Mrs. M. D. Dever and Gerald Dever (third quarter); Floy Popplewell (second quarter); Mattie Upton (second quarter); Anna Black (second quarter); Elsie Conklin and Anna Conklin, Imogene, Ia.; Gladys Fulghum, Mason City, Ia. In your reports always state what quarter it is, or how many times you have been printed on the Honor List.

THE LIFE-GIVING RIVER.*

The work of Ezekiel in restoring the confidence of the community of Israel in Babylon took a variety of forms and continued through a series of years. The final section of his book (chs. 40-48) deals with the new sanctuary which he already sees in prophetic vision rising in the restored Jerusalem as a result of the divine blessing. This sanctuary is not like that which stood in former days, built by Solomon and gathering to itself the riches of the East and the reverent homage of the Israelites; but was to be much more elaborate and carefully planned. It served the double purpose in Ezekiel's ministry of holding before the people the divine assurance of their return and renewed prosperity in the homeland, and of preparing the way for that most emphatic type of holiness which grew up after the return and made Israel in the period after the restoration less a nation than a church—an attempt to realize an ideal theocracy grouped about a central sanctuary and wholly absorbed in the ministries of the sacred place.

Ezekiel saw the value of using a definite illustration of what God would enable the people to do and to become in the future. He was not satisfied to hold before them general promises of return, nor simply to indicate that the land would once more become fruitful and the nation prosperous, so that astonishment should strike the beholder as he contrasted the present beauty with past desolation. Something more definite even than this was needed, and the plan which Ezekiel drew up, embodying his conception of what the restored temple ought to be, served as a picture to be printed upon the mind of those Israelites whom he could reach with his addresses or his writings distributed in the form of tracts. These plans for the temple would naturally form the theme of conversation in widely scattered groups of exiles, and the more they talked and thought of the bright future the more their hearts burned within them with the assurance that they also should go back when the period of exile came to its close. Thus, the possibility of a restored commonwealth was kept before their minds and the prophet prevented that growth of indifference and despair which had threatened to make impossible any future outcome for the chosen people.

It is of special value to observe the various ways in which the prophets of the time, as Jeremiah, Ezekiel and the still later evangelical prophet who speaks to us through the closing chapters of the book of Isaiah, realize the importance of keeping alive or kindling anew the fire of patriotism and hope. In the community of Jews resident in Babylon lay the promise of Israel's future ministry and of the coming of the Messiah. One needs only to reflect on the spiritual consequences to the world of the total loss of Israel's existence in this period to see what immeasurable importance attaches to the labors of the prophets who preserved in the hearts of their countrymen some remnants of enthusiasm for the religion of their fathers and for their own national future.

The lesson concerns itself with the holy stream that issued from one of the gates of the temple which Ezekiel saw. Coming out from under the threshold and flowing eastward past the great altar in the forecourt, it widened and deepened without apparent increase of volume from tributaries, so that when measured at intervals of five hundred yards it was observed to grow marvelously until it became a flood, too great to be crossed except by swimming. Its banks were fringed with trees whose fruit was nourishment and whose leaves were fadeless. It flowed on through the waste places of eastern Judæa and poured itself at last into the great salt sea, which under its power was transformed into a sweet, life-giving lake, in which multitudes of fish had their home, insomuch that the whole coast of the sea became a rendezvous for fishing industries. Salt was still to be obtained by the people in the salt-beds here and there, but the awful barrenness of the former years was quite swept away.

In this picture Ezekiel presents an ideal view of the influences which shall go out from the restored sanctuary. One need not press the figure beyond its legitimate limits. The prophet probably expected no such river literally, but he emphasized, by the proclamation of this vision, the healing and restoring qualities that should go forth from the new house of God. Is it not true that from that temple, however small and meagre it looked to the community as they returned—and some of them remembered the old house in its glory—there did actually go forth influences restorative and sweetening to the whole world? From that temple came forth a new ideal of holiness. To that temple, in its later restoration, came our Master himself on more than one occasion, and from it, as from the center of Jewish life, went forth the earliest preaching of the gospel to proclaim salvation to the ends of the earth.

From another point of view that temple represents the Church of Christ, which collectively is the dwelling-place of the divine Spirit and from which there go forth to-day all those redemptive agencies which promise the salvation of the world. And may it not be equally true that from our own lives individually, from our hearts as the temple of the Holy Spirit, there may and should go forth just such streams of healing and of health, sweetening the waste places of the earth, as the prophet saw gushing out from the portals of the house of God in Zion?

TOPIC FOR AUGUST 20.

THE LEAVEN AND THE MEAL.

(Matt. 13:33; Dan. 2:31-35,45.)

Some things are powerful in inverse proportion to their size. When fire is condensed to its smallest compass and packed into a grain of giant powder or a stick of dynamite, behold what a great matter a little fire kindleth! When a bit of slander or of gossip is packed into a single word of innuendo, what a powerful little unruly member the tongue becomes! The most powerful poisons are hidden in the smallest grains.

This illustration of Jesus, of the leaven and the meal, his use of the little stone cut out without hands which was rejected and finally made head of the corner, the parable of the mustard and all the like are used of the gospel with its obscure beginnings among peasants and the obscure, with its little company of disciples and with its apparent feeblenessnes. But this small beginning—how it has leavened the world!

Jesus at one time alone represented the kingdom of God—one man. All left him and fled; he stood before Pilate with no advocate or adherent. He was hanged between heaven and earth all alone, except for thieves. But he had said, "If I be lifted up, I will draw all men unto me." And how it has been fulfilled! He is not alone now. The little kingdom of one man is made up of a vast multitude whom no man can number, out of every kindred and tongue and tribe. Thus it is that wherever a Christlike life is lifted up, though it be alone, it draws all men unto it. God with one is a majority; but God within one is almighty.

Some very small things are powerful besides the small, cunning animals mentioned by Solomon. From my study door at the church, a block of stone steps tightly cemented together descends to the sidewalk. Between the heavy block of stone and the wall of the house, a very small crack was left, thin as a knife blade. Some water trickled down between one winter night and some very small crystals in this very small bit of water formed and pushed and pushed until that mass of stone was moved, little by little, till now you can thrust your arm into the crevice.

So strong and penetrating are some of the thoughts that enter our minds, harmless they seem and so small. But they are powerful. If they are allowed to stag and crystallize, how they can push and push till great gaps yawn in our hearts for the entrance either of whole floods of evil thoughts, or whole sheets of light and life according as the thought be ill or good. Keep thy thoughts clean and pure, for out of them are the issues of life. If thine eye be single, thy whole body shall be full of light.

So strong and pungent are some of the words we use, that they permeate all the atmosphere about us as heartshorn does the air, or as leaven does the meal. According as these words flung out into the air of heaven are good or ill is the effect of the them. How a single little word, or a single little monosyllable, or a silence, or a look, or a gesture can wound or can inspire! The most tactful and thoughtful people are careful even of the glances of their eyes. How wise it is and how considerate, sometimes, to look another way or to make but a rapid glance! What a mark of breeding is a well-regulated eye! So petty are all these suggestions for the dignity of a prayer-meeting. They are chosen precisely for their smallness, for a little leaven leaventh all.

So, also, but a little gospel in the heart, but a small measure of the Spirit of God, but a little weak purpose that forever needs strengthening by prayer, may prove a light to lighten the whole soul and purify the whole life. Poor and weak at best is any resclution we may possess. By nursing this and fostering it, it shall grow even as a poor, struggling flame in the dry wood of the great fireplace in winter. Lord, strength our weakness, foster our bit of strength. Let the leaven of righteousness, the presence of thy Spirit, fill us and grow.

Western Montana.

The Western Montana Christian Association held its second annual meeting in the heart of the beautiful Bitter Root Valley. This was the first time that the Christian Church at Corvallis has had an opportunity of entertaining an assembly of the Disciples of Christ.

The convention did not open as auspiciously as we had hoped, owing to high water and unusual amount of sickness. We were under necessity of going to Stevensville and conveying the Missoula delegation by "transfer," as the melting snow from the mountains had swollen the Bitter Root River until it had gone far beyond its bounds, taking railroad and wagon bridges before it. (It is reported that the snow is still ten feet deep on the summit of the range.)

The train was delayed some two hours, but when it arrived the success of our convention was assured, for on it were Bro. W. M. Jordan, State Sec'y, Bro. O. F. McHarg, of Bozeman, and Bro. and Sister Stivers, with eight or nine of their staunch Missoula workers. Fortunately, three of the delegates had thought to bring their "wheels," which were now made use of, and the remainder were securely packed in the "transfer," and away we went for a moonlight drive of seventeen miles, with snow-capped mountains on either side and the rushing water at our feet. When about four miles from our destination it was announced that we were approaching the ranch of Bro. and Sister J. L. Humble, and that we would there change teams and unload part of our passengers before going on. All were happily disappointed when they saw it was not a "shack" nor dugout, but a large, spacious house, well furnished, and that all were invited to come in and enjoy the hospitality of these good Christian people for the remainder of the night.

On Wednesday morning, June 21, the convention was opened with a sermon by Bro. W. M. Jordan. In the afternoon we first listened to an interesting address by Bro. Jas. H. Cowan on the work of the Disciples in Montana. Following this the entire history of our religious movement was briefly brought before the minds of the people: 1. "Religious Conditions and Transition at the Beginning of the Century," by Bro. Stivers; 2. "The Work of the Pioneers," by Bro. Grim; 3. "The Expansion of the Plea Advocated by the Disciples of Christ from 1866-1899," by Bro. Jordan, and in the evening we listened to a most telling address by Bro. McHarg on "The Threefold Mission of the Death of Christ—Its Application to the Present and Future." At this time Bro. W. R. Burroughs welcomed the delegates in a hearty manner, which was responded to by President Stivers, who presided with dignity over all the sessions. On Thursday there were two papers presented for which we had all too little time for discussion: "An Introduction to the Study of the Holy Spirit," by Fred. F. Grim, and "The Place of Woman in the Church," by Bro. Stivers.

The afternoon was given to the work of the C. W. B. M., which was presided over by Mrs. Plummer, of Missoula. Mrs. Edith M. Stivers gave an excellent address on the work that the Woman's Board is doing, and also conducted a question box. An outline of the Bible Chair work was given, and then all listened with interest to a paper on the work of the Juniors, by Miss Jessie Stivers. A fitting close to the day's work was a thrilling sermon by Bro. Stivers on "The Last Commission." With the exception of an address by Bro. McHarg on "Church Discipline" (which should be sent to some of our papers for publication), the next day was given to the Bible-school and Christian Endeavor work. The following are some of the papers which we should not fail to mention: "The Bible-school, Actual and Ideal," by Bro. W. D. Lear, one of our first preachers in the state; "The Lesson—Its Preparation for Teacher and Pupil," by Bro. Llewellyn; "The Relation of the C. E. to the Church," by Bro. Stivers; "Practical Committee Work," Miss Maggie Slack; "C. E. Library and Literature," Miss May Pettit; "The C. E. and Reforms," Bro. H. L. Carter; "The Quiet Hour," by Miss Helena Cramer. On Friday evening Bro. Walter Jordan seemed to be at his best in his stimulating address to the Christian Endeavorers. Saturday was given to sight-seeing and recreation. The invited guests were taken over the immense ranch of Marcus Daily, where are kept the finest horses in the world, and through the large sawmill at Hamilton, which was owned until recently by the Anaconda Copper Mining Co. Bro. Stivers and Bro. Jordan were compelled to leave Saturday, so that Bro. McHarg was kept busy from this time on, preaching to large and interested audiences Saturday evening, Sunday morning and Sunday evening. The sermon on Sunday afternoon was preached by Fred F. Grim, pastor of the church.

An offering was taken Sunday morning for home and state work, amounting to over $75. The C. W. B. M. also took an offering of $10. Thirteen subscribers were secured for the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST. The following officers were elected: J. C. B. Stivers, president; vice-president, J. L. Humble; secretary, J. J. Jones; treasurer, Mary Sloane. The invited guests were profuse in their expressions of appreciation of the kindly welcome they received and the hospitality accorded them. Thus closed an assembly of the followers of Jesus who are earnestly contending for the faith once for all delivered unto the saints. May God's blessing rest upon us, and may we go forth in the power of his Spirit to do a greater work for the Master in the winning of souls which shall become consecrated to his service.

Obituaries.

GREEN.

Died at his home in Carthage, Mo., in the 72nd year of his age, Judge Leander Green. He had been a great sufferer for more than a year with an incurable disease. He was a soldier in the war of the rebellion, and participated in some of the fiercest battles. He bore sickness and misfortune with Christian fortitude, and died in the full expectation of a glorious immorality. For more than 50 years he was a member of the Christian Church, and was always at his post unless detained by sickness. He leaves an aged widow, a son and grandson. W. A. OLDHAM.

JOHNSON.

Claude F. Johnson, who departed this life July 16, 1899, was born in Mason County, Ill., July 9, 1870. He graduated from the public school of Chandlerville, Ill., with the honors of his class. He afterwards graduated from the State University, and in 1895 graduated in law from University of Texas. He was married to Virdie Strubel, of Memphis, Feb. 6, 1896. He leaves a little girl 18 months old. The funeral service was coaducted by the writer from the Christian Church, of which he was a faithful member. The order of Modern Woodmen and Fraternal Tribune attended the funeral in a body. Besides the loss to the community, the Christian Church has lost one of its faithful members.

GRANVILLE SNELL,
Pastor of Christian Church.
Memphis, Mo.

STACY.

Died in Tempe, Arizona, July 22nd, 1899, Milo A. Stacy, aged 27 years. Bro. Stacy came to Arizona from Nebraska in 1894 with his parents. They were all active church workers. About a year ago S. S. Stacy died very suddenly of heart failure, and shortly after the family moved to Tempe. Bro. Stacy's health had not been good far some time, and it was noted by his friends that he was failing, but the end came as a great shock to all and he will be mourned by a large circle of friends. The last sad rites were conducted in the Presbyterian church in Phoenix on Sunday afternoon by Bro. L. O. Ferguson, and his remains were laid away beside his father by tender, loving hands. His sorrowing young wife and mother and sister have the sympathy of all. The church has lost a staunch supporter, the community a worthy citizen and the family a loving and tender-hearted husband, son and brother. "He was a Christian." What higher eulogium can be pronounced? A. P. WALBRIDGE.

America or Rome? Christ or the Pope?

With the close of the war with Spain the world has learned much concerning the ignorance and superstition that have so long prevailed in Spain and her territorial possessions. Catholicism rules Spain and her colonies. Statistics reveal that 68 per cent. of the population of Spain can neither read nor write. This may account for the predominance of the Catholic Church and the power and rule of the Pope of Rome. Contrast Spain, an old and once powerful nation, ruled by Catholicism, with younger Protestant nations, in which there is but little illiteracy, and where gospel liberty makes them a free, prosperous, happy and intelligent people.

The evils of Romanism are clearly set forth by John L. Brandt in his work, "America or Rome—Christ or the Pope." Now is the time for agents to place this book in the hands of readers. We are now offering extra inducements to agents to handle this work. Peolep will now want to read this kind of literature, and an active agent can do well by showing and selling this exposition of the despotism of Rome. Write us for our special inducements to agents on America or Rome—Christ or the ope.

THE EXILED PROPHET

By J. G. ENCELL

For 60 Days We Offer This Book For $1.00, Postpaid

This book is of especial interest to Sunday-school teachers just now. Some of the Sunday-school lessons for the third quarter of 1899 are taken from the Book of Daniel, and the first seventy pages of "The Exiled Prophet" contain an Essay on the Book of Daniel, written by the well-known author and Bible scholar, Dr. D. R. Dungan. This essay will explain the Prophecy of Daniel, and should be read and studied by the Sunday-school teachers of to-day. Having read this they will be prepared to present the Sunday-school lessons in the present quarter to their classes in an acceptable manner. In addition to Dr. D. R. Dungan's explanation of Daniel the book is an able treatise on Revelation, the author of which has devoted many years of study and investigation to what many think is a "Sealed Book."

The book embraces 245 pages, neatly bound in cloth and profusely illustrated. Send orders to CHRISTIAN PUBLISHING CO., ST. LOUIS.

Christian S. S. Literature

WHY USE IT?

For the same reason that Christian Churches employ Christian preachers. Preachers are instructors, but not more so than the literature placed in the hands of the children. If first impressions are most lasting, would it not be safer to put sectarian preachers in our pulpits than sectarian literature in our Sunday-schools?

Sunday-school instruction should be in harmony with the teaching of the Bible. The literature published by the Christian Publishing Company is sound to the core, and proclaims the Old Jerusalem Gospel in all its simplicity and purity.

Publishers' Notes.

"I have read 'Queen Esther,' by M. M. Davis, with great profit. It is the best little book I have read in ten years. Its style is easy, its language eloquent, and its practical lessons most helpful and suggestive." The above is an extract from an opinion of "Queen Esther" by James Small, of Columbus, Ind. The book is bound in neat cloth, contains 132 pages, and the price is 75 cents, postpaid.

While the Sunday-school lessons are found in the Old Testament, books on Bible characters would prove quite beneficial to Sunday-school workers. We suggest that such books as "In the Days of Jehu," "King Saul" and "Queen Esther" would materially aid in a better understanding of Old Testament history. You may have read the Bible account of these characters, but a careful study of these books will lead you into a deeper knowledge of God's word.

The school-teacher will find that a very profitable way of passing a portion of the vacation season will be in the careful reading of "Jesus as a Teacher," by Prof. B. A. Hinsdale. The author sees in Jesus the greatest teacher and clearly points out to his readers the great features of Christ's teaching. How Christ taught should be of interest to all teachers of the present day. It is a work of 330 pages; price, $1.25.

Our church members of to-day should be well informed concerning the lives of those who have been foremost in promoting the Current Reformation. "Men of Yesterday" will give you a biographical sketch of Walter Scott, Barton W. Stone, John Smith, Isaac Errett, Barton W. Johnson and Otis A. Burgess. This book is written by Thos. W. Grafton, author of "Life of Alexander Campbell." Much research was required to gather the facts found in "Men of Yesterday," and its contents can be depended upon as accurate and reliable. It is a work of 291 pages and the price is $1.00, postpaid.

Sunday-School Literature

THE matter of Sunday-school Literature is one of very great importance. For, whether it should be so or not, the fact is that the character of the instruction given in nine-tenths of the Sunday-school classes throughout the country is determined by the contents of the Lesson Helps they use. This being true, and the fact that first impressions are most lasting, how important that Pastors and Superintendents of Christian Sunday-schools see that their Schools are supplied with Christian Periodicals. If the children are taught that one church is as good as another, that certain divine commands are of little or no importance, or can be changed or set aside by man, what effect will it have on the church of the future? "Think on these things."

We understand a FEW of our schools are using sectarian or union (so called) supplies, in order to save a few cents each quarter. Are you one of that number? Samples of our Supplies sent free.

What We Plead For

The Christian-Evangelist pleads for:

The Christianity of the New Testament, taught by Christ and his Apostles, versus the theology of the creeds taught by fallible men—the world's great need.

The divine confession of faith on which Christ built his church, versus human confessions of faith on which men have split the church.

The unity of Christ's disciples, for which he so fervently prayed, versus the divisions in Christ's body, which his apostles strongly condemned.

The abandonment of sectarian names and practices, based on human authority, for the common family name and the common faith, based on divine authority, versus the abandonment of scriptural names and usages for partisan ends.

The hearty co-operation of Christians in efforts of world-wide beneficence and evangelization, versus petty jealousies and strifes in the struggle for denominational pre-eminence.

The fidelity to truth which secures the approval of God, versus conformity to custom to gain the favor of men.

The protection of the home and the destruction of the saloon, versus the protection of the saloon and the destruction of the home.

"In faith, Unity; in opinion and methods, Liberty; in all things, Charity."

Vol. xxxvi. St. Louis, Mo., Thursday, August 17, 1899. No. 33

CURRENT EVENTS.

A dispatch from St. Thomas, D. W. I., reports sad havoc by a West Indian gale throughout the island, which is said to be completely laid waste by the storm. Seventy-four deaths are reported up to date. The same hurricane wrought severe damage also in the Island of Porto Rico. A dispatch from San Juan says that the hurricane broke over the south coast of the island at one o'clock last Tuesday morning and swept northwest; that there was no abatement for nine hours. At San Juan four natives were drowned in the harbor, eighty houses were demolished and hundreds unroofed. At Ponce, also, the storm wrought great devastation, almost destroying the town. Nearly all the frame buildings were blown down, the bridges swept away, and there is no communication between the port and the city proper. The damage to this island alone will perhaps not fall far short of $1,000,000. A dispatch to the Secretary of War from General Davis states the devastation which has been wrought by the hurricane the severest since 1876 and suggests that public notice be given in the United States to the effect that contributions of food, clothing and money for the destitute would be received with the greatest gratitude and will be applied strictly to the relief of the destitute. He says there are many thousands of families which are entirely homeless. He has appointed a board to supervise the relief of the destitute. Here is an opportunity for the people of the United States to manifest in a practical way their sympathy with the people who have so recently become closely identified with us.

Matters in the Transvaal have not assumed the pacific character which was hoped for a few weeks since. The greatest uneasiness prevails in England concerning the situation in South Africa. As a means of averting war and at the same time of securing justice for the Uitlanders, Great Britain has submitted a proposition for a joint inquiry. Much will depend upon the answer to this proposition. About the only chance for peace which clear-sighted observers in England can see lies in the possibility that President Kruger's answer to this proposition will not be a refusal, but some sort of modification in the terms of reference to a joint commission, so as to avoid the objection that the internal autonomy of the Transvaal is threatened. In such an event the President of the Transvaal Republic would have a strong minority support in England, while a point-blank refusal, it is believed, would consolidate all parties in England, except the peace-at-any-price party, in favor of war. The friends of peace fear the influence of Mr. Chamberlain's speeches, as his attitude is a very uncompromising one. A mass meeting has been held in Rotterdam, Holland, attended by more than two thousand persons and addressed by leading Hollanders, in which two resolutions were adopted, one appealing to the English people to respect the rights of the Boers, and the other urging President Kruger and the people of the Transvaal to persevere in defense of their inviolable rights. Sympathy with the Boers is said to be spreading throughout the Netherlands.

Aguinaldo, the would-be president or dictator of the Philippines, has issued an address to the powers, asking for their recognition of the Philippine Republic. This may be understood as the last desperate effort in what this pretender now sees to be a hopeless game. Without the interference of the powers in his behalf his insurrection against the United States Government is doomed. But the powers will not recognize his republic. Perhaps Aguinaldo is himself shrewd enough to know this, but it serves to keep alive in the public mind what might otherwise be forgotten, that there is such a thing, on paper, as the Philippine Republic. Meantime, Gen. McArthur has advanced on the Filipino forces encamped near San Fernando, one of the many "capitals" of the so-called republic, and has routed them. He has begun a forward movement from San Fernando which has for its immediate terminus Angeles, a base of operations which is said to be of greater importance than the one he has occupied for the past two months. He has left San Fernando with a force of five thousand men. He is finding the flooded condition of the country a much greater obstacle to his progress than the insurgents. The latest accounts report Gen. McArthur as camped on the outskirts of Angeles, and the probability is that an assault will be made and the place captured before this goes to press. Angeles will be then made the northern base of operations instead of San Fernando. A garrison of six hundred men will be left at the latter place.

As was expected, the trial of Dreyfus following the examination of the secret dossier reached the sensational stage. On the assembling of the court on Saturday morning the president of the court presented Dreyfus with a document, taken from the lining of his coat by the prison authorities, which belonged to the famous secret dossier. This accusation Dreyfus bravely admitted, adding that he had taken it for a souvenir document, and nothing more was made of the event by the court. After this incident the examination of witnesses began, of whom Mercier was the chief of attraction and interest. Mercier's testimony occupied four hours, and was in the nature of a review of the case as it stood in his mind rather than the presentation of incriminating facts. In concluding his testimony he affirmed his willingness to declare Dreyfus innocent if the testimony permitted, but could not. At this juncture he was confronted by a statement from the prisoner that he ought to declare for his innocence. This brought the court and the entire audience to their feet, bayonets were presented by the guards, and for awhile the wildest excitement prevailed in the court room. In the meantime Mercier had made statements by no means satisfactory to M. Casimir-Perier, who confronted him before the court, demanding a hearing at the next session. This the court granted, and adjourned in the midst of intense excitement. It is said that Mercier left the court room a greatly humiliated man. However this may be, it is certain that his testimony was a disappointment to his staunch admirers and friends, and the famous secret dossier, to which the enemies of Dreyfus have attached so much importance, is about to become their humiliation and their shame. But testimony, or the lack of it, seems to have little weight with the enemies of Dreyfus. France is rent in twain, and no man can now predict the outcome of the trial.

An expedition has recently been fitted out for the purpose of going in quest of "the secret of the strait." The belief seems to be firmly fixed in the minds of all scientists who have investigated the subject, and this opinion is supported by tradition, that the continents of North and South America were at one time separated by water. It is said that the last voyage of Columbus was in search of this strait, the discoverer believing he would find somewhere through Central America a passage by which he could sail to the Pacific and on to the Indies. He succeeded in finding a tradition among the Indians that such a strait once existed, but the strait itself he was unable to find, although he tried every entrance along the Caribbean side of the isthmus. Other navigators have tried to find the secret of the strait, but no one now believes that such a strait exists at the present time, though there is not wanting evidence that it once existed. In a recent report, made to the government by a Capt. Shunk, he refers to the belief among the residents of that region that such a pass once existed, and suggests that it might be worth while to search the crest of the Cordillera with a view of ascertaining if there may not be a more feasible route for the canal along what was once the natural passage than has yet been discovered. It was in harmony with this recommendation that a part of the force delegated by the government to make a survey of a route for the canal will devote some time to looking up this natural channel which at one time separated the two continents.

One of our exchanges gives some figures showing the appalling magnitude which the trust business has assumed in this country in recent years, and especially within the last year. It is estimated by the Wool and Cotton Reporter that between the months of January and July the new trusts formed in this country represent, on paper, a capitalization of $7,370,783,383, of which $1,628,706,900 was preferred, and the remainder, $5,742,076,483 was common stock. It is the opinion of the same authority that the preferred stock "includes everything of tangible value" and that the rest is "water, pure and simple." This indicates what a recent well-known writer states is the real harm of trusts, viz., the excessive capitalization and the efforts which will be made to pay dividends on this watered stock. No one acquainted with the laws which govern business expects the trusts to be a permanent feature of the commercial life of the country on the present basis of capitalization. These inflated values will sooner or later work the destruction of the trusts, or at least so change their character as to make them comparatively harmless. Perhaps the most effective way to deal with the trust mania will be to enact such legislation as will prevent excessive capitalization, for it is this feature that constitutes their popularity.

The attempt upon the life of Maitre Labori, junior counsel for Captain Dreyfus, while on his way to the court on Monday morning, has brought France to fever heat over the Dreyfus affair. Labori was shot in the back and it is feared that the wound will prove fatal. This is the fourth life sacrificed over the affair and the end is not yet in sight. The shooting of Labori greatly embarrassed the counsel for Dreyfus in the trial on Monday in that he was the one who had prepared for examination of witnesses. It was generally expected that his examination of Mercier's testimony would be especially severe and crushing, and the opinion is expressed that the shooting was for the protection of Mercier. At all events the absence of Labori was a great relief to him. In the trial it clearly developed that Mercier and M. Casimir-Perier were quite apart in their statements about matters of serious import. After Perier's confrontation of Mercier, M. Cavaignac, General Chanoine, M. Hanotaux and General Billot each testified in turn, but press reports do not indicate that any new evidences of the guilt against Dreyfus were revealed beyond the opinion of these witnesses. At the conclusion of Gen. Billot's testimony the court adjourned until Wednesday. The arrest of Derolede and his allies continues to be a matter of overshadowing interest. Jules Guerin, with a number of sympathizers, is barricaded in his home in Paris, where he defies arrest. The Paris papers almost to a unit deplore the shooting of Labori. The would-be assassin has not yet been caught, and all things continue in a state of mystery and extreme anxiety. Grave fears of an internal upheaval are freely expressed by men of prominence in France and by their leading journals. The eyes of the world are now upon France.

The great storm that swept over the West Indies was far more destructive than at first known. It is now thought that the number of lives lost will reach into thousands. Secretary Root has issued a call to the governors of the United States for relief. Not only have houses been destroyed in Porto Rico and other places, but the means of subsistence as well. At least 100,000 persons, it is stated, are in distress for food, and the means of subsistence for months to come. The storm had lost its severity on reaching the Coast of Florida.

The last word from the Transvaal, as we go to press, is that every preparation is being made for war both by the Transvaal and the British Governments.

SALVATION BY GROWTH.

The doctrine of salvation by grace is fundamental in the New Testament. It is not by works of righteousness which we have done, but through the divine mercy that we are enabled to rejoice in the knowledge of sins forgiven. No theory has ever been more hostile to the real spirit of Christianity than the legalistic theory of justification by works.

It is equally true that salvation is through faith. This is the great contention of Paul in the Roman and Galatian letters. It was the backbone of the Lutheran Reformation. It is held by every evangelical church in the world to-day. There have been, and are yet, many misconceptions as to the nature of this faith and the process by which it comes, but more and more the consensus of Christian thought is settling down to the truth that the faith which saves has Jesus Christ for its object and commits the soul to him in loving, loyal obedience.

In this article, however, we wish to speak of salvation by growth. This is a conception of salvation that is too often overlooked. It is not denied for a moment that there is a salvation which comes to the believer the moment he commits himself to Christ. Then and there such an one may rejoice in the assurance of the forgiveness of sins and of having passed from death unto life. But there is a larger view of salvation than that which makes it consist in a change of heart and in the assurance of pardon of past sins. There is a salvation into the enjoyment of which we can only enter by growth.

In a letter addressed to Christians who were saved in the sense of being forgiven, the Apostle Peter exhorts them "as newborn babes" to "long for the spiritual milk, which is without guile, that ye may grow thereby unto salvation." Here is salvation by growth. There were heights in the Christian life to which these early disciples had not attained. There was a depth and a breadth of meaning in the term "salvation" which they had not yet experienced. There are thousands in our churches to-day, it is believed, whose conception of what it is to be saved needs very great enlargement. Only a very impoverished and enfeebled Christian life can come out of a narrow and inadequate idea of salvation.

In what respects, it may be asked, can we be saved by growth? This is the question to which we invite the careful attention of the reader.

1. In the first place, it should be said, we are saved from being spiritual dwarfs by growth. The child that does not grow is soon regarded as a dwarf. Beautiful as childhood is, the absence of growth in its physical and mental powers soon converts it into an object of pity. There is reason to fear that there are many cases of arrested spiritual development in our churches. Whereas they have been church members long enough to have developed some of the elements of spiritual manhood and womanhood, they are yet children in their knowledge of spiritual things, and in their capacity to achieve spiritual results. In other words, they are spiritual dwarfs, a burden to the church instead of a source of strength. The only way childhood can be saved from dwarfage is by growth.

2. Physical deformity is generally, if not always, associated with arrested physical development, changing beauty into hideousness. Moral deformity is always associated with arrested spiritual development. There are many deformed Christians who, in their disposition and habits, are neither lovely nor winsome. They have closed their minds and hearts to the forces and influences, to the spiritual nutrition and exercise which make for growth, and are reaping the penalty in the dwarfed, impoverished and deformed lives they are living.

3. We are saved by growth from moral decay and apostasy. Decay very soon follows the cessation of growth. The man who fails to go forward in the Christian life will very soon find himself going backward. It is either progression or retrogression. The elements of apostasy are already present in the disciple who refuses to use the means of growth, and it only takes a little time for them to manifest their presence.

4. Growth in the divine life can alone save us from the loss of that rich reward that is promised to the faithful Christian. The growing Christian is the working Christian, and every man is to be rewarded "according to his works." Granting the possibility of ultimate salvation, in its narrowest sense, to the disciple who ceases to grow, which may well be considered doubtful, what infinite difference there must be in the future life between the condition of such an one and the state of one who has given himself unstintedly to Christian growth and service, growing up into Him who is our living Head, even Christ!

In what respects, let us ask, ought we to grow in order to attain unto the salvation to which Peter refers?

1. There should be constant growth "in grace and in the knowledge of our Lord Jesus Christ." As we know Christ better, we know God better, we have a truer and worthier conception of religion, and we have vaster motives for self-sacrifice and holy living. This growth involves reading and study, as well as right living. One must acquaint himself with the religious thought and life of his time and study the movements of God in current history.

2. We need constant enlargement in our affections and sympathies. There are infant Christians who cannot get interested in any religious work outside their immediate church or locality. Others are so restricted in their survey of the kingdom of God as to feel no interest whatever in the religious operations of other religious bodies than their own. All this indicates a narrow range of sympathies. A full-grown Christian loves all men and is interested in every movement that is tending to advance the kingdom of God upon earth.

3. If we are to be saved from ignorance and from narrowness, there must be a constant growth in the range of our religious thinking. We must needs grapple with the profoundest problems connected with Christian faith and doctrine. Our minds must be kept open and hospitable to all the results of the investigations going on in the various fields of Christian thought. We must become such as no longer have need of milk, but can partake of solid food. We must not be afraid to think, if we would grow, and should feed our minds on the best thought of the age, as well as of past ages.

4. There must be ethical growth; that is, we must grow into a clearer discernment between good and evil and be able to distinguish that which is injurious and sinful from that which is harmless and helpful. With increasing spiritual growth there must inevitably come the breaking away from ideas and practices which we at one time deemed innocent, but which, with keener spiritual discernment, we have come to see hinder the soul's progress in virtue and knowledge.

Let no one, then, be deceived with the idea that he can attain unto salvation in the large and full meaning of the New Testament without constant growth in the divine life. The chief of the apostles said: "When I was a child I spake as a child, I felt as a child, I thought as a child; now that I am become a man, I have put away childish things." This is the law of progress; this is the condition of the enjoyment of that full salvation made possible through the blessed mediation of Jesus Christ, our Savior.

THE NEW PRINCIPLE AND THE OLD LIFE.

Whatever may be the vocation or the function of a Christian in the world, it must be made Christly. Whatever his calling in life may be, he must take the apostolic advice to abide therein with God. The sovereign would best follow Christ, not by renouncing the crown and adopting the garb and function of the traveling preacher, but by learning to rule as Christ would rule if he were an earthly sovereign. The workman is not to leave his bench or his tools, but to use them as Jesus did in the days of his preparation. The converted merchant may not become a missionary, but he must be a better man in the field of merchandise. The United States senator may not resign his seat or abandon politics, but he must abide therein with God—an event, by the way, that is not at all likely to happen this side the millennium! Whatever condition we are in, whatever relation we sustain, if not actually sinful, we are to abide therein with God. If we are in a condition or occupation that cannot be made Christian, we must abandon it.

The Christian profession, however, is not so much a subtraction of cetrain habits and elements from life as the addition of an element, and that element is God. The inspired injunction is, let each man, wherein he was called, therein abide with God. It is farming plus God, teaching plus God, business plus God, politics plus God, home and social and individual life plus God; whatever your calling, condition or occupation you are to take God in as an active partner—you are to abide therein with God. Every department of life is to be illuminated and sanctified by the presence and power of God.

Paul became a fisher of men, not by giving up his trade as a tentmaker, and his profession as a scholar, but by diligently pursuing them both. We gather that Peter was a preacher of great power; but for aught we know the other apostles carried out their apostleship, not by preaching exclusively, but in more ordinary ways. When the corrupt notion emerged that only a certain order of men were called to be fishers of men, legend had to busy itself by finding spheres of preaching for the Twelve in remote and improbable parts of the world. But with all its ingenuity legend could not allot all the Twelve to these imaginary districts. Consequently, we have this beautiful probability, that the majority of those who first followed Jesus, and companied with him in the days of his flesh, carried out their mission of following him in the ordinary occupations of life. And this is the true idea of fishers of men. Putting aside the work of the missionary, who carries the gospel for the first time to a new country, the most notable fishers of men are not preachers and teachers, but mothers, fathers, men of business, artisans, the women of the home-people who, in the occupatfon in which they were called, follow Jesus, and draw insensibly all who know them to the Lord. King Alfred took Christ with him into the rulership of England. He abode in the calling wherein he was called with God; but Edward the Confessor and Henry the Sixth, who tried to be monks rather than kings, missed their mark, and followed their own fancies rather than Christ. Oliver Cromwell followed Christ, not so much in the rude homilies which he addressed to his soldiers or his parliaments, as in that patient and laborious grasp of the covenants, which made his whole conduct, whether as captian or protector, a strenuous attempt to bring the principles of Jesus into the government of a modern state. Gladstone has taken his permanent place in history as a follower of Christ for the same reason. His theological writings are an accident; his ecclesiastical theories were such as have often been held without any religious results; but his life was a humble imitation of Christ in the sense of Thomas a Kempis, and now when the strife of parties is hushed we all recognize that he was constantly endeavoring to act as Christ would do if he were Chancellor of the Exchequer, leader of the House, or First Minister of the Crown. He brought God into his calling as a statesman, and abode therein with him.

The incoming of God into a life calling, and our abiding with him there, not only casts sin out and breaks up our evil habits, but it adds a positive force to our lives that sets us forward as active agencies for good. There is the tearing down of what is bad and the building up of what is good in the Christian life, the negative and positive aspects of the question. A man needs the power of God to quit his meanness, and also the grace of God to take on the forces and virtues of goodness. It is not enough to abstain from what is wrong, we must do what is right. Abraham Lincoln's don'ts are good, very good, as far as they go, and it takes a great deal of positive grit to observe them, a great deal more than the average boy possesses. Old Abe used to preach a little sermon to his boys, consisting of a series of don'ts. "Boys," said he, "don't drink, don't smoke, don't chew, don't swear, don't gamble, don't lie, don't cheat, don't disobey your parents." Excellent. I wish all boys had strength of character to observe these negatives. They helped to make Lincoln and every great man who is good as well as great, but the positive virtues standing over in opposition to these vices do most to make the manliness of the man. Christ would say, "Boys, be sober, be clean, be reverent, be honest, be truthful, be kind, be upright in all your dealings, obey your parents." If a boy desired to do these things, Christ would go into partnership with him and help him to make the effort successful. If God has fellowship with a man in his character and abides with him in his calling, he will be both negatively good and positively righteous. The native Africans spoke of Bishop William Taylor as the "Fire Stick," and the "Flaming Torch," not alone because he abstained from their heathen vices, but because of the magnetic, enthusiastic, luminous energy of the man in carrying the light of God into darkest Africa, and the secret of this was explained by the other name they gave him—"God-man."

When Christ was crucified the apostles had learned enough to refrain from violent outbreaks of wickedness, except Peter, and his defection was only temporary; but after Pentecost, when the transforming, uplifting, positive energy of the Holy Spirit came, from negatives and cowards they became the greatest character makers, nation revolutionizers and world builders known to history.

Shall the buisness man in the church abide therein with God?

Shall the politician abide in the calling wherein he is called, or is the business too rotten to abide in with God?

Shall people who profess Christ do the same in the less conspicuous and honorable calllngs of life?

SUPPOSED INCONSISTENCY.

EDITOR CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST: Dear Bro.—An item in the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST of July 24 shows that the editor of the Observer and yourself have been somewhat amused over the real or supposed inconsistency of some preachers, in that they oppose higher criticism while utilizing some of its results. Of course, when you speak of "higher criticism" in such connection, you mean its rationalistic phase, as there are no preachers that oppose higher criticism, pure and simple. But be this as it may, will you kindly show wherein consists the inconsistency of using some of the results of a system of criticism, while rejecting the system as a whole. As I am one of those who do this without misgiving or compunction I am interested in having the impropriety of the thing appear. Hitherto it has been considered entirely proper to use any good thing without regard to the character of the system that may have given it birth. Since when has there been a change in this matter? Is it forgotten that Professor Ames and the present writer were perfectly clear that we may properly utilize some of the results of the Schleiermacherian system of theology, while opposing the system? Why may we not do the same with the good results of any injurious kind of criticism? A little light here is very much desired.

H. MCDIARMID.

The remarks of the Observer, quoted by us, referred, no doubt, to those preachers and editors who condemn higher criticism indiscriminately, regarding it wholly bad; who know nothing of a permissible "higher criticism, pure and simple," to which Prof. McDiarmid refers. Of course there is no inconsistency in accepting some of the results of higher criticism, while rejecting others. That is what every intelligent and conscientious Bible student, as it seems to us, is bound to do. But if Bro. McDiarmid thinks there are no preachers among us who oppose "higher criticism, pure and simple," we could undeceive him by allowing him to read some of the manuscripts which reach us. Of course, Bro. M. is too widely read and too candid to take any such position. We are not surprised that a man in his position should exercise a wise discrimination, in availing himself of the actual results of higher criticism, while refusing to accept the conclusions of the rationalistic school of critics, who reject the supernatural. This has been the attitude of the CHRISTIAN-EVGANELIST on this subject from the beginning, and it is the attitude of the large body of our most enlightened ministers and laymen. But there are many exceptions in all the religious bodies, with whom "higher criticism" is a synonym for infidelity. These were the persons meant in the paragraph referred to by Prof. McDiarmid.

Hour of Prayer.

TASTE AND SEE.

(Uniform Midweek Prayer-meeting Topic, Aug. 23.)

(Ps. 34:1-10; 1 Pet. 11:1-5.)

CENTRAL TRUTH: The highest proof of the excellency of the divine life is in its practical application to our human needs; in the actual experiences of our individual lives.

The psalmist had been experiencing the gracious providences of God in his life and breaks forth into praises of Jehovah:

"I will bless Jehovah at all times:
His praises shall continually be in my mouth."

He then calls upon the people to "magnify Jehovah" with him and "to exalt his name together."

The ground for this outburst of praise and thanksgiving is thus stated:

"I sought Jehovah and he answered me,
And delivered me from all my fears. . . .
This poor man cried, and Jehovah heard him,
And saved him out of all his troubles."

Who would not lift up his heart in gratitude and praise Jehovah after such an experience as that? No wonder the psalmist in view of his own blessed experience exclaims:

"O taste and see that Jehovah is good:
Blessed is the man that taketh refuge in him."

So every man feels who has had the same experience of the goodness of God and the blessedness of trusting Him. He feels that if the whole world would only "taste and see" how good Jehovah is they would submit themselves completely to his control and trust Him for time and for eternity. There is no question but that the man who accepts God's invitation to come to Him and make Him his refuge has a proof of the supreme excellency of such a life of trust as the world cannot know. It is not a theory nor a speculative belief with such a man. It is a demonstration. It is a blessed experience. It is faith which has passed into knowledge.

In view of the troubles which vex us, the burdens and anxieties which weigh us down, the wounds and defeats which sin inflicts upon us, is it not strange that so many refuse to accept Jehovah as a divine refuge from all these afflictions? To every burdened, anxious, weary soul the invitation comes—"O taste and see that Jehovah is good."

But what are some of the conditions upon which we may give this practical test to the efficacy of the religion of Christ? In the second quotation above given the Apostle Peter tells us how we may thus "taste" the Lord. "Putting away, therefore, all wickedness, and all guile, and hypocrisy, and envy, and all evil speakings, as new-born babes long for the spiritual milk which is without guile, that ye may grow thereby unto salvation; if ye have tasted that the Lord is gracious." We can give no practical test of the value of Christ to us while continuing to live in sin. It is only as we surrender our evil ways and put ourselves in complete subjection to the will of God, in Christ, that we come to know His graciousness. To the objection, sometimes made, that Christianity is a failure, it has been well said in reply, that Christianity has not been tried very much, and could not, therefore, be pronounced a failure. No man, it may safely be said, who has really and truly accepted Christ, and has experienced the knowledge of sins forgiven, and tasted the sweetness of redeeming love, and has come to know the peace which passeth understanding, has ever doubted the goodness of Jehovah or the power of his religion to purify the soul and give it a joy which the world knows not.

The most prevalent mistake on the part of Christians is their failure to give the Lord a fair chance at them. They do not fully surrender themselves to the divine care and guidance. They follow their own wills in part instead of the divine will, and then are led to doubt the reality and power of the Christian life. No one is qualified to utter a disparaging word concerning the efficacy of Christ's religion until he has given it a fair test by allowing the Lord full sway in his life.

This prayer-meeting will be a memorable one if those attending it resolve, here and now, to submit themselves wholly to the divine will, in order that they may test the divine promises of peace and rest, and know the supreme excellency of the life which is hid with Christ in God.

PRAYER.

O God, our Father, we thank Thee that Thou art the refuge of all those who put their trust in Thee. When we remember the blessed experiences through which we have passed, how Thou hast heard us when we have called upon Thee in the day of trouble and hast dispersed the clouds and darkness which have shadowed our path, and how Thou hast forgiven our iniquities and hast given us the kiss of love and reconciliation, we can but call upon men everywhere to magnify and exalt Thy name. We rejoice that we have been permitted in some measure to taste Thee and to know Thy goodness and Thy graciousness. We thank Thee for the peace and joy and rest of this life of trust. We pray Thee that Thou wouldst help us to put away from our lives everything that hinders the fullest and freest intercourse with Thee, to the end that we may know the height and the depth, the length and the breadth of Thy love, which passeth knowledge. In Christ's name. Amen!

MACATAWA MUSINGS.

The approach of that season of the year when colleges are wont to throw open their portals to the young men and women of the land who desire to make something out of themselves renders it appropriate that we give a considerable part of our space this week to our different institutions of learning. No doubt there are earnest discussions going on now in many homes on the question of whether the boys and girls will go to college the coming session and where they will go. Not in the interest of our colleges alone, but in the interest of our young people themselves and in the interest of the cause we plead, we sincerely hope that the decision will be reached, in a large number of cases, to send the boys and girls to college. This is apt, in many cases, to involve sacrifice, but what cause is worthier of sacrifice than the better equipment of our children for their life work? Better by far give them a good education, including the cultivation of the heart as well as of the mind and body, than to leave them an inheritance in lands, stocks or bonds. If the decision of the question—to go or not to go to college—rests with the boy or girl, we plead with them to be far-sighted enough to look into the future and try to forecast how much more useful they can make their lives by the preparation they can get out of a college course. It does not pay to enter life without the best equipment we can secure.

A friend has sent us a copy of the Christian World Pulpit, of London, containing the celebrated sermon by Dr. Joseph Parker on "Cromwell and Crowellism," in which the London pastor calls down the curses of God upon the Sultan. The sermon was preached in connection with the celebration of the tercentenary of Oliver Cromwell, from the text, "And when I heard this thing, I rent my garment and my mantle, and I sat down astonished" (Ezra 9:3). The distinguished preacher bemoans the fact that there is not, at the present time, a sufficiently strong conviction in many people to make them do as Ezra did. He mentions a number of things that make him feel disposed to rend his mantle and sit down astonished, among which are the wrong-doing of the Prince of Wales, the "lying communicant" who partakes of the emblems of his Lord's body and blood and denies Him in his daily life, the "recreant nonconformist" who gets rich, goes into the Cabinet and turns his back on his father and mother and their principles, and upon the Kaiser who visited the Sultan and in an after-dinner speech said, "My friend, the Sultan." It is in this connection that his wrath rises to its highest pitch, and after enumerating the sins of the Sultan he invokes the curse of God upon him in words which have created such a sensation throughout the world. The sermon, as a whole, should command general approval, but his curse is so worded that we do not feel at liberty to quote it in these columns.

A secular journal, the Grand Rapids Herald, referring editorially to the funeral of Robert G. Ingersoll, makes the following sensible comment:

The services were brief and cold and comfortless. The eulogy pronounced by Colonel Ingersoll, some years ago, over the remains of his own brother, was read. Colonel Ingersoll's declaration of his religious belief and the last poem he wrote were given, and that was all. There was no sweet and tender music, no word of sympathy, no consolation for the mourners, no hope expressed for the future meeting of loved ones, no prayer. It was purely secular, and though the hearts of wife and children may have been breaking, there was no balm for them in the faith which Christianity teaches. It may be easy to be an unbeliever when the heart beats strong and all the world is bright, but who will envy the unbeliever in the days of trouble and sorrow? And who would be an unbeliever in the presence of death?

Not a few effective sermons have been preached by the daily press in connection with the death of the eloquent agnostic. It shows that after all Mr. Ingersoll had a small following and that in the popular mind it does not pay to be an infidel.

The Macatawa Assembly is now in progress. The attendance at the Bible lectures in the forenoon and also at the popular lectures in the evening is much larger than at any previous assembly. Bros. Willett and Campbell are carrying forward the work begun here last year, the former giving the historical and literary character of the books of the New Testament, and the latter presenting their spiritual teaching. The study of the Pauline epistles has developed great interest, and especially that of the eschatological epistles—First and Second Thessalonians. Perhaps there is no department of Christian thinking about which there is greater difference of opinion than the doctrine of the "last things," including the second coming of Christ, the resurrection and the judgment. It is not the facts themselves, but the manner or method in which they are to transpire that is generally the subject of discussion. The work of these two brethren is to appear September 1, in book form, from the publishing house of the Fleming Revell Pub. Co., Chicago, under the title "The Teachings of the Books." This will be the second book resulting from our Macatawa Assembly. We feel sure that this last volume, like its predecessor, will prove to be a valuable contribution to modern religious thought. Our readers will do well to be on the lookout for the appearance of this volume.

The love of the truth is perhaps one of the noblest elements of character. Indeed, it is made a test of character in the New Testament. What a true disciple of Jesus wishes, above all things, is to know the truth concerning all questions that relate to doctrine and duty. In the search for truth difference of opinion is inevitable. This very difference of opinion and the discussion that grows out of it is one of the means of eliciting the truth, and when carried on in the right spirit should always be welcomed by the true learner. We have often inculcated this idea and have sought to prepare the minds of our readers for those differences of judgment concerning many biblical problems which are as sure to come as the fact that we shall do any independent thinking or make any progress in religious thought. Some of our readers, however, are troubled about any difference of views which appear in our papers concerning any religious or biblical question. If the writers of our Sunday-school lessons write from different points of view and differ in their conclusions concerning questions of history or chronology, some are troubled by this fact and write to know what it means. The meaning is obvious enough. It means that we have writers who are independent enough to form their own judgments, based, of course, on the best data available to them, and that they do not always reach the same conclusions. This ought to alarm no one. Since these differences of view exist concerning any given question, is it not better that those who are seeking to know the truth should have both sides? Uniformity of opinion is not so desirable as to be purchased at the sacrifice of honest convictions. Let every one be true to the best light he can get on every question that comes before him, and let each one be magnanimous enough to accord to every other seeker after truth the same honesty of motive and love of truth which he claims for himself, and then we shall make real progress in our religious thinking and shall come to a fuller and clearer knowledge of the truth.

Questions and Answers.

In the Budget department of the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST of July 27 the statement is made that "higher criticism has stimulated rather than retarded the study of the Holy Scriptures." In what way? I would ask. I fail to see any good that has come out of the higher criticism. What is higher criticism, anyway, and what good has come of the efforts of these so-called higher critics? T. H. Edwards.

It should not be difficult for any one to understand how the historical and literary criticism of the Bible has stimulated the study of that Book. The very fact that old theories have been called in question, concerning dates, composition and authorship, would provoke new investigation to meet these new positions. Such has undoubtedly been the result, and that quite independent of the motive by which any class of higher critics may be actuated. It was the denial of the doctrine of the resurrection by some men down in Corinth that brought out Paul's splendid argument in 1 Cor. 15 on that subject. The question as to what higher criticism is, is one which our brother should have raised and answered before pronouncing all its results as positively evil. Higher criticism is a name given to the investigation of the historical and literary questions connected with the Bible, such as "Who wrote the several books?" "When were they written?" and "What are their literary characteristics?" These are all legitimate questions for investigation, and many of the ablest scholars in Christendom, who are also loyal to Jesus Christ and who believe in the inspiration of the Bible, are engaged in these investigations. It would be strange if their labors had been entirely fruitless. The fact that some erroneous conclusions may have been reached and some false theories advanced by a class of critics, who have carried into the investigation their presuppositions against the supernatural, by no means obliterates or neutralizes the increased knowledge of the contents, characteristics and historical development of the sacred literature of the Bible resulting from modern investigations. Those who are sufficiently interested in the subject to make a criticism against higher criticism should read some of the books which have been produced by Christian scholarship, on this subject, and see what progress has been made in the better understanding of the Holy Scriptures.

It is acknowledged that even infidels have good qualities, such as philanthropy, love of liberty, love of purity, love of home, etc. It must likewise be admitted that there are noted men in the church who are lacking in these same commendable qualities. Which of the two classes have the better chance of salvation in the world to come? Querist.

Neither the benevolent qualities of unbelievers nor church membership availeth to salvation. If neither is sufficient to redeem the soul from the love and practice of sin, and to open the heart to all noble and pure sentiments and true benevolences in this life, they cannot be depended on in "the world to come." Only that which saves now can save hereafter. The benevolent infidel must open his heart to faith and come into union and communion with God through Christ in order to be ransomed from the power of sin. The nominal Christian must learn that something more than profession or church membership is essential to salvation. His faith must become vital, his repentance sincere, his self-surrender to Christ unconditional and complete, before he can cherish the hope of salvation hereafter or rejoice in its present possession.

Do you consider it wise to teach children in the Sunday-school that the Book of Daniel was written by a Maccabean about B. C. 166? F. L. Taylor.
Ionia, Mich.

We should not think it wise to raise any question of this kind with the children in Sunday-school. It is far more important to teach them the moral lessons to be drawn from the book. Should the question of the date of the book come up in the Bible class, it would be proper for the teacher to state as clearly as he was able the two views held by Bible scholars in reference to the date of the book and the reasons therefor, as far as he is able to state them. In no case, however, should even the Bible class be switched off into an unprofitable discussion on disputed questions.

Will you please give your view on card playing and dancing for church members, who have dancing and card parties at their homes? What is the remedy? A Sister.
Jacksonville, Mo.

Without classifying these practices along with the chief sins of our age, we should say that those who have accepted Christ as their pattern of life, and who have enlisted under his banner to assist in redeeming the world, ought to find something more valuable with which to employ their time than dancing and card playing, and something less likely to prove a stumbling-block to young Christians. We know of no remedy for this or any other form of worldliness than a deeper and more earnest religious life, a higher conception of what a Christian ought to be. These practices are symptoms, really, of a superficial religious life, and must be treated constitutionally rather than specifically.

Reformation of the Nineteenth Century

NINE DECADES OF HISTORY

THE FOURTH PERIOD.

T. W. GRAFTON.

III. The Society Controversy.

For seventeen years the name of Alexander Campbell stood at the head of the column of our missionary host. He had helped by voice and pen to foster a missionary spirit among the churches as indispensable to the ultimate triumph of New Testament Christianity. But his voice was scarcely hushed in death before the enemies of missionary co-operation in general, and of the American Christian Missionary Society in particular, made use of his great name in defense of their methods of obstruction. They quoted the early numbers of the Christian Baptist in justification of their claim, and as the true followers of Mr. Campbell in the restoration of primitive ideals, raised their cry against "man-made plans."

It has already been shown by the writers who have preceded me that "the great Christian life of Alexander Campbell presents no such monstrous contradiction as a lifelong consecration of his own powers and labors to the proclamation of the gospel on the one hand, and opposition to a similar work through the co-operation and means of brethren at large on the other." But I venture to add the testimony of W. K. Pendleton on the true position of Mr. Campbell, given in an address at the eighteenth anniversary of the American Christian Missionary Society in the autumn of 1866:

"We feel that it is due to the great name of Alexander Campbell to vindicate his memory from the charge that he was ever opposed to true missionary work, or true and scripturally conducted missions. It must be remembered that in his early writings he was engaged almost incessantly in the fiercest and closest conflicts with the various forms of sectarianism, which surrounded him, and which, as organizations, both in their theory and their practice, he was deeply convinced were injurious to the highest interests of the church, and incumbrances upon the primitive power of the gospel. As such he attacked them. 'Their missionary plans' was but one feature of many, and this as a plan, not as a legitimate purpose, he criticised, with a moderation and caution, however, which showed that he desired to touch it but gently. His arrows were directed against the 'scheme.' 'Our objections to the missionary plan,' says he, 'originated from the conviction that it is unauthorized in the New Testament; and that in many instances it is a system of iniquitous peculation and speculation, I feel perfectly able to maintain. . . . There is another difficulty of which we are aware, that, as some objects are manifestly good, and the means adopted for their accomplishment manifestly evil, speaking against the means employed, we may be sometimes understood as opposing the objects abstractly, especially by those who do not wish to understand, but rather to misrepresent. For instance, that the conversion of the heathen to the Christian religion is an object manifestly good, all Christians will acknowledge; yet every one acquainted with the means employed, and with the success attendant on the means, must know that the means have not been blessed; and every intelligent Christian must know that many of the means employed have been manifestly evil. Besides,' he says, and this I take to be the key to all his opposition to these sectarian missions, 'to convert the heathen to the popular Christianity of these times would be an object of no great consequence, as the popular Christians themselves, for the most part, require to be converted to the Christianity of the New Testament.'

"This is the author's own explanation of the motives of his opposition as expressed on the the earliest pages of the Christian Baptist itself, and I need not pause to show how utterly irrelevant it is to the uses for which it is now sought to be employed. The fact is, his heart was too full of the benevolent and saving power of the gospel to allow him to impose any trammels upon any legitimate means which the liberality and the wisdom of the church might devise for its universal proclamation. When this society was first formed he was made its president, and in this relation he continued by the partiality of its members and with his own consent till he was called to join the congregation of the first born in heaven. From the first he threw his mighty influence in its favor."—Millennial Harbinger, 1866, page 497.

Notwithstanding this able defense of the missionary spirit of the sage of Bethany by one who had stood nearest to him, the closing months of the year of 1866 witnessed widespread disaffection. Men who during Mr. Campbell's life had manifested their disapproval in quietly holding aloof, now became outspoken in their denunciation of the methods of co-operation employed. The missionary societies were branded as disguised ecclesiastical machines. "If these societies are right, then," they urged, "so are the papacy and sects." They were to be classed with "dancing," "gaming," "horseracing" and other similar works of the flesh.

It was, indeed, a critical point in our missionary history. In September the California Missionary Society adjourned sine die because of the conviction of many members that there was a "want of Scripture precedent for holding delegate conventions." This step was hailed with joy by anti-society men and claimed as an indication of the "decided tendency of things," and the early death of all such "unauthorized efforts" among us was confidently predicted.

At about this time occurred the defection of Benjamin Franklin from the missionary ranks, which gave further comfort to the opposition. He had been reckoned one of the supporters of missionary effort from the beginning. He had at one time served as corresponding secretary, and was then one of the vice-presidents of the organization. But near the close of 1866 he changed front and from that time on, the weight of his influence was against it, and no reasonable compromises were able to win him back from his new position.

The conversion of Benjamin Franklin was the occasion of great rejoicing among those bent on the destruction of our struggling missionary society. Talbot Fanning in the Gospel Advocate hastened to extend the hand of fellowship to this new accession to the anti-mission ranks:

"While we are rejoiced to know that Bro. B. Franklin is now, for the first time since the year of grace 1853, making war upon all human organizations as substitutes for the Church of Christ, it strikes us that he has made so many side cuts at good brethren who have stood the heat of the battle, which is now almost over, that he might afford to confess before God and his brethren that in his bushwhacking experiment he has neither done justice to himself or the cause of his Master. We thank God, however, that our brother is now ably and no doubt successfully defending the Church of Christ against missionary organizations and all other human inventions for the service of the church."

The battle was not so nearly over as the enemies of co-operation imagined. The loss of Bro. Franklin was deeply felt, and the transfer of the American Christian Review to the side of the opposition added, at the time, to its strength, and increased the difficulties in the way of missionary success. But the friends of missions were by no means disheartened. The life, the growth of the cause, they felt depended upon their hearty co-operation, and obedience to the letter and spirit of the great commission. The Christian Standard, with Isaac Errett at the helm, had already proved a valuable help to the cause of missions, and its editor now threw his great strength into the conflict over plans which was soon to turn the tide and make us a missionary people. In 1867 Mr. Errett was compelled to write:

"The Standard is the only weekly paper among us now that advocates missionary societies, and we want the brethren to know this fact. When there is a great end to be accomplished, a scriptural end, and the Word of God does not shut us up to any special routine of operations, we go for the best expedients that the united wisdom of the brethren in a given district, state or nation, may suggest. . . . But we have no idolatrous attachments to the General Missionary Society. If it can do the work proposed, we will encourage it. If it fails to command sufficient confidence and sympathy to enable it to do its work wisely and well, we shall go in in for whatever form of associated effort the general wisdom of the brotherhood may approve. But we record our deliberate conviction here, that if the attacks on our General Missionary Society prevail to its destruction and we are left to rely simply on what individual churches may see fit to do, we will throw back our cause at least half a century, and devolve on a coming generation at least tenfold labor to recover lost ground."

The next three years of our missionary effort were spent in fruitless attempts to divise some plan that would harmonize all factions and secure the co-operation of the entire brotherhood. The friends of the society kindly invited suggestions with a view to finding a true and scriptural basis for missionary enterprise that would be acceptable to all. To some of these overtures Mr. Franklin replied in the columns of the Review, from which we quote:

"Our 'unreasonable change' is not from a missionary to an anti-missionary man, but from a society to an anti-society man; not from a co-operation to an anti-co-operation man, but from a society scheme, formed after a sectarian model, which we have tried twenty years and completely demonstrated to to be a failure, having no effective co-operating in it, for evangelizing, to the simplest method of co-operation ever practiced as well as the most effective, the method practiced by the first Christians and practiced again in our own time, by which we have pushed the gospel half round the world in fifty years."

In suggesting a safe ground, he said let it be "understood that all constitutions, laws, memberships, life memberships, life directorships, presidents and vice-presidents will be wiped out. There will be no society. The reports will not show what the society has done, but what the churches of the Lord and individual Christians have done in a certain work, or through a certain channel. When the meeting is convened it can select some one to preside for the occasion and another to serve as clerk. The churches then can give to their co-operation, the state meeting or the general meeting what they think proper, or as they dispose in their hearts. Something of this kind would harmonize the brethren generally and open the way for all to go to work."

At the anniversary meeting of the American Christian Missionary Society, in 1867, a committee was appointed to so change the constitution of the society as to remove some of the most serious objections, and if possible conciliate the brethren of the opposition. The following year several changes were made on the recommendation of the committee, the most radical of which was the abandonment of life memberships, life directorships, etc. It was then resolved "that in view of the abandonment of life memberships and life directorships, from which the principal income of the society has been derived, the board of managers be and they are hereby requested to devise and carry out a plan of annual and life subscriptions, whereby a constant income may be secured and a permanent basis provided for the operations of the society."

A committee composed of W. K. Pendleton, Isaac Errett, W. J. Pettigrew and Geo. W. Elley was appointed to advise the opposing brethren of the change, and solicit their co-operation, which they did in a note declaring that "these changes had been made on the motion and by the advice of many of the oldest friends of the society who have been influenced mainly by a desire to harmonize with others who thought them necessary, and it is hoped that the generous spirit of fraternity which they have thus manifested will be met by an equally generous advance on the part of those to whom this offering of Christian fellowship is extended. If we cannot all agree as to the details of a plan, we can at least consent to work together under that which has secured the unanimous approval of so large a body of our best minds, and be content to hold our private opinions subject to the voice of the majority."

An order went into effect June 1st that sweeps liquor from all restaurants and eating houses connected with the Southern Pacific Company. This order we tried to get Senator Stanford to issue. Mr. Huntington sees the inconsistency of demanding total abstinence on the part of employees and at the same time placing the temptation before them at every eating house. Now banish all liquor from the buffet cars, and the thing is complete. The order that has gone into force will have a wonderful effect for good in the cause of prohibition. The saloon papers are berating Mr. Huntington for issuing the order, but Uncle Colis is not caring or losing sleep over it. It is a grand step forward.—California Voice.

CHURCH EXTENSION CATECHISM.

Question. What is the Church Extension Fund?

Answer. It is a permanent and perpetual fund, created by the brotherhood, to be loaned at four per cent. to aid in completing houses of worship.

Q. Where is the office?

A. In Kansas City, Mo.

Q. Why located there?

A. Because Kansas City is in or near to the territory where most of the money is loaned.

Q. Is this money loaned in the West only?

A. No. It is loaned in any part of the United States or Canada, or in our new possessions, where missions cannot borrow money on the ground or cannot borrow except at high premium and interest rates.

Q. Why was the fund started?

A. Because secular loan concerns will not loan money to mission churches except in rare cases. It was started, also, to stop indiscriminate appeals and to aid missions to build by a loan rather than by a gift.

Q. How is this fund built up?

A. By an annual offering in September among the churches, by 20 per cent. of the receipts from "boys' and girls' rally day for America" in the Sunday-schools on the Sunday nearest Thanksgiving, by bequests, annuity money and personal gifts.

Q. How many organizations have the Disciples of Christ?

A. Over nine thousand.

Q. About how many churches sent offerings last year?

A. About 1,000 observed collection day.

Q. How many congregations out of the 9,000 are without homes?

A. Over 2,700.

Q. When was the board created?

A. At the National Convention of 1898.

Q. Who and what kind of men are on the board?

A. D. O. Smart, Pres.; T. R. Bryan, Treas.; Langston Bacon, Atty.; Fletcher Cowherd, R. L. Yeager, all successful business men of Kansas City and members of our church; and T. P. Haley and W. F. Richardson, two of our pastors in Kansas City.

Q. When does the board meet?

A. Regularly on the first Tuesday of each month in the afternoon at 600 Waterworks Building.

Q. Is the board an incorporated body?

A. It is, and its corporate name is "Board of Church Extension Fund of American Christian Missionary Society."

Q. Is the treasurer under bond?

A. He is.

Q. How much money is there in the fund?

A. $194,000 on August 1st.

Q. How many churches have been aided since the beginning?

A. Four hundred and thirty.

Q. How many have paid back their loans in full?

A. One hundred and fifteen.

Q. How much has been paid back to the board in loans and interest?

A. Over $110,000.

Q. How many have asked aid since the organization of this fund?

A. Over 1,800.

Q. On what conditions can one of our churches receive aid?

A. (a) That the building is actually needed. (b) That they have done all they could toward first buying the lot and commencing the building. (c) That the loan asked pays every debt. (d) That they insure the house for full length of loan.

Q. What interest is charged?

A. Four per cent.

Q. Why charge interest?

A. It stimulates the congregation to return the loan, and pays the current expenses of handling the money and disseminating information.

Q. Then this a perpetual fund, is it?

A. It is, and will go on continually building houses when we are gone from earth. The principal and interest are both loaned as fast as they come into the treasury.

Q. Why not give the churches the money?

A. Because a loan at four per cent. to be paid back in four or five years answers the same purpose as a gift, and the money is saved to help another congregation every four or five years.

Q. How many churches have been aided this year up to August 1899?

A. Exactly 50; 67 others are promised aid.

Q. Where will the money come from?

A. From the September offering if the churches respond as they are expected.

Q. Is money loaned to pay old debts?

A. In no case except to keep a church building from being sold for debt.

Q. Why are mortgages being foreclosed on so many mission churches?

A. Because they borrowed money at exorbitant rates and on short time, vainly hoping to pay out.

Q. How much money is needed each year to answer worthy appeals?

A. Not less than $100,000.

Q. Do other religious bodies have a church extension fund?

A. The Methodists have raised nearly six million, the Presbyterians over two million, the Congregationalists two and a half million, etc.

Q. What are our people seeking to do?

A. To lift our fund to a quarter of a million by the close of 1900.

Q. How much does the board call for in the September offering?

A. $15,000.

Q. Where and to whom is money sent?

A. To G. W. Muckley, Cor. Sec., Kansas City, Mo.

Commercial Travlers at Jubilee Convention.

EDITOR CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST:—Can you not create, through your most excellent paper, an interest for a meeting of commercial travelers at our Jubilee Convention? The very best meeting at the Detroit C. E. Convention, outside of our own rally, was the meeting of commercial tourists. About 300 met in a parlor of a Detroit church and it certainly was the very best meeting at that great convention. There are 375,000 commercial tourists employed in the country and if they were all Christian Endeavorers what a mighty work they could do for the Master. Just think of it. By using the same energy to bring sinners to Christ as they do to sell goods what a wonderful work they could do. They are the brightest and brainiest men we have. What would it mean if all this host of drummers were turned loose for Christ? Yours truly,

J. D. JOHNSON.

Canton, Ohio.

[The above suggestion of Bro. Johnson is a very good one, indeed, and we see no reason why it should not be carried out. Among the 375,000 commercial tourists in this country, there must be a large number of them which are connected with our religious movement, and a special meeting of this class at Cincinnati in connection with our Jubilee Convention would constitute a very interesting feature of that great assembly. Such a meeting would give opportunity for impressing upon these the special opportunities they have for disseminating the influence of Christianity, as well as the special perils to which they may be exposed. We trust that the secretaries of the A. C. M. S. will interest themselves in this matter, and see that such a meeting be called.—EDITOR.]

When an editor or a preacher says, "Let us be better Baptists," or better Methodists, or better Presbyterians, is he not emphasizing denominational distinctions? Would it not be better to say, "Let us be better Christians?"

Our Budget.

—Jubilee Convention Oct. 13-20.

—Church Extension offering September 3d.

—September is the last month of the missionary year.

—CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST Church Extension number next week.

—Our colleges, the Jubilee Convention and Church Extension, the leading features of this paper.

—We continue to receive expressions of very high appreciation of our historical series of articles. They are a feast of great things for our older brethren and a schoolmaster for the young.

—There are indications that the mystery enshrouding Christian Science, Spiritism, faith-cures, etc., will soon be taken away and the true science underlying the phenomena attending these falsely so-called sciences be revealed.

—The success which the agents of some of our educational institutions have had during the past year in raising money for debts, for current expenses and for endowments is a clear indication of a deeper interest in the welfare of our schools by the people. Their importance and usefulness are beginning to dawn upon the church, and a better appreciation is being shown in the response to appeals for relief and for increased strength.

—The man who in his journey comes to a guidepost that clearly points the way to where he wants to go does not usually spend the rest of his days around that guidepost commenting on its clearness, its simplicity, its beauty, its logic and its authenticity, but presses forward under the stimulus of its information. There seems to be exceptions to this rule, however, in the religious domain. The guidepost in religion, as in the physical journey, is of first importance as to the way, but of second importance only as to the end.

—The following paragraph from the Standard (Baptist) is a good explanation of a very common phenomenon and the moral:

The reason it takes so long for church work to get started in the fall is because so few besides the pastor give any time or thought during the summer to preparation or definite plans. Thoughts cross the mind of some possible improvement in methods, but not until people get together again and cool weather is well advanced is anything new actually undertaken. August is the time to "begin to get ready."

—The schedule of our educational institutions, both personal and general, on another page of this paper, will help to give our readers a more definite idea of our educational forces and their efficiency. In studying the school problem from the basis of this chart it will be well to ask whether, in the light of our strength as a religious body, they are such schools as they should be and as we are able to make them. Where, then, is our ground for boasting? True, we are proud of our schools and many of them have done a grand work for Christ and for humanity, but we are not ready to rest our educational oars. Our schools must be strengthened mightily if they are to survive the demands of the 20th century. The weaker ones should be articulated with the stronger and the stronger ones made doubly strong against the present and approaching burdens. We need more pride in our schools, more interest in their welfare, more concern for their future.

—The total valuation of college property given in our schedule in this paper is a little less than two million dollars, or scarcely enough to well endow a single university. But this amount is divided among about forty institutions of learning, making the average property valuation less than $50,000. Then it must be remembered that the indebtedness of the college is not deducted from the valuation given. This will greatly reduce the total and average valuation of the property of our schools. What stronger argument could be put forth for the need of greater liberality toward our schools than this? They all sorely need better equipment, or at least what they have paid for; and, in addition, liberal endowments, if they are to be what both the church and the times demand that they should be.

—The editor of the St. Louis Christian Advocate must be making a study of mental aberrations. The subjects of his editorial articles last week were "Cigarette Insanity," "Fads and Follies," "A Useful Miracle" (the painting of the late Empress Elizabeth bleeding at the point where wounded), "A Wonderful Occurrence" (the eyes of a picture of the Virgin turning in their sockets) and "The Novel as Illustration" (the extreme uses of the sensational in the pulpit). Not long ago he told us his views of a certain healing school sensation, etc. We hope that the esteemed editor shall soon be able to explain the mystery of the dominance of politics in the churches to the moral detriment of the nation—on the saloon question, for instance.

—The annuity plan is a fortunate solution of the question of giving to missions in large sums to many persons. They have money which they intend to give for missionary purposes, but need the interest thereon while in the flesh. By the annuity plan they can give this money at once, get a good interest on it during life, and then live to see the rich fruits of it therein and the wisdom of the gift. And while several such gifts have been made to the Home and the Foreign Societies, we are glad to see that Church Extension is not being forgotten along this line. Brother Pickens, of Tyler, Texas, has just given Church Extension $5,000 on this plan and thereby greatly helps forward this indispensable part of our work. This shows that business men have confidence in the usefulness, good management and perpetuity of the Church Extension Fund and are not afraid to leave their money to its care. And then, too, the thought that it is not only a good but also a permanent investment is important and should not be overlooked. There are but few things in this world to which money can be left with the assurance of perpetual usefulness aside from Church Extension. This thought is well explained in the perpetual motion cut on the last page of this paper, to which we invite your special attention.

—The receipts for Foreign Missions for the first seven days of August were $904.36. The total receipts to date for the year are $127,740.22. To reach the $150,000 mark the board must receive $22,259.78 by Sept. 30th, when the books close. The time is short.

—R. B. Neal, of Grayson, Ky., has issued tract number five of his Anti-Mormon Tracts. The title of this tract is "The Stick of Ephraim vs. The Bible of the Western Continent; or, The Manuscript Found vs. The Book of Mormon." This tract is in small type and contains much matter which Bro. Neal thinks is of such a character as will blunt the pen and tongue of any Mormon elder who may attempt to reply. Bro. Neal is devoting a great amount of time to this work, is careful in his quotations, and indefatigable in his purpose, which is the product of the most profound and sincere convictions, and what he says carries weight with it. He assures all who read his tracts that he may be quoted therefrom with the utmost confidence. Bro. Neal is at work on tract number six and is depending on large sales of the present one to publish it. The tracts do not overlap each other in matter, but make a continuous refutation of Mormonism from continuous material. We hope that tract number five will meet with the large sales that its author and its merit deserve.

—The last number of the Christian Guide, published at Louisville, Ky., is unusually interesting. The large number of half-tone pictures of historic buildings, prominent men and noted preachers will not fail to catch the attention and to stir up the memories of its readers.

—Out of 9,000 congregations about 1,200 contributed to Church Extension in 1898. That number should be doubled this Jubilee Year. Every congregation that takes an offering for Home and Foreign Missions should contribute to Church Extension.

—The Church Extension Catechism, on another page of this issue, should be read to the end. It contains a mine of information within small compass. Information is what our people want. The people give money when they know it is needed. Let in the light.

—On August third the board of Church Extension received $5,000 on the Annuity plan, from D. R. Pickens, of Tyler, Texas. This liberal gift is made out of a full appreciation of the needs of Church Extension and from a knowledge of what the fund has done for Texas mission points. The board has aided 34 churches in Texas. The Tyler church property was saved by a $1,200 loan, and seven other points are promised aid in Texas. Surely, Church Extension has been and is a friend to Texas mission work. Will the churches in Texas not now come up to the full measure of their duty in the forthcoming September offering? In looking over the annual report for last year we find only 34 contributing churches in Texas to Church Extension with an aggregate gift from all of $266.95. Texas will do better this year, but the churches should see to it that Bro. Pickens' gift does not stand alone. For information on Annuity plan write to G. W. Muckley, Kansas City, Mo.

—There should be many to follow the example of D. R. Pickens in his handsome gift of $5,000 to Church Extension. This board now has the right of way and people should send gifts in abundance from now until the the Jubilee Convention. This year the board has received, besides the above, $8,000 from one source; four have given $500 each; $333.1-3 and another $100 on the Annunity plan, $15,433.1-3 in all. If you have money to leave to Church Extension in a will, give it to the board now, for which you will receive a bond signed by the proper officers. You will be paid six per cent., and your money will be building churches. Missions are glad to get money on the easy terms of the board at six per cent. Your money is not taxed, you never need to reinvest, and at your death your money goes into the fund where you want it to go.

—In this number much space is devoted to our colleges and educational interests. It is, in short, an educational and college number. The great increase of interest in missions and missionary work necessitates a corresponding interest in our educational institutions. It is to our schools and colleges that our missionary boards are most largely looking for suitable men and women for the mission field. It is proper, therefore, to keep our schools and colleges abreast of our missionary interests in the public mind. One cannot go forward successfully without the other; neither the church.

—During the past year the Institutional Mission and Benevolent Society, of St. Louis, has given away chiefly to the inmates of the city institutions $123.83 in money, 408 garments, 15,000 papers, 479 books and magazines, 77 Bibles and Testaments, 529 tracts and booklets, 484 picture and Scripture cards and 850 flower boquets. Only God knows how many hearts have been touched and how much good done by these messages of love and benevolence.

—We publish in our Family Circle this week an artice from H. F. Hewes, M. D., removing misapprehensions that may be formed by Prof. Atwater's report of experiments with alcohol as a food and as a beverage. While we have no fears of any of our readers being led astray by Prof. Atwater's statements, we feel sure that you will find Dr. Hewes' article worthy of careful reading and consideration. Dr. Hewes is as good authority on the chemistry of alcohol as Prof. Atwater.

—Archbishop Ireland, who has recently returned from a long sojourn in Europe, says that "the American poor are happier and a hundred per cent. more intelligent" than are the poor of the Old World. This he says is true of the poor both in and out of the church. This testimony is as remarkable as it is strong, and would justify the Archbishop, it seems to us, in adhereing to "Americanisms," which he, as is generally supposed, surrendered to the Pope, whom he saw frequently while in Rome.

—As the school question in the Cumberland Presbyterian Church is that of many other religious bodies, their efforts at its solution become worthy of consideration by other religious bodies. On the question of strengthening these schools and raising their efficiency the following suggestion from Rev. B. P. Fullerton, D. D., this city, from an article from his pen in a recent number of the Cumberland Presbyterian, is worthy of more than casual attention. Church schools, like church mission fields, often need something else besides money for their efficiency and perpetuity:

The church has been inspired with a commendable desire to educate her young people, and on this account most denominations have a number of smaller schools which have been named colleges, and have undertaken to do college work with only academic facilities, and the consequence has been that we have a number of struggling institutions, poorly paid teachers, and young men and women sent out from year to year with college diplomas and only academic training. When it was too late these young people have become painfully aware of their deficiency, and have been compelled to take secondary positions and remain content with partial training, or through a series of painful years struggle for better equipment while in the active duties of life. This new movement proposes so to articulate these various schools that due credit will be given for work done in one of them when their graduates make application for admittance into our colleges and universities, and students may therein pursue a college course where men and facilities are ample for such work. This does not undervalue in any way the splendid work which has been done and is being done by these schools, but it makes possible the enlargement of their work and the better equipment of their graduates. Arkansas Cumberland College has wisely adopted the plan and has articulated itself with Cumberland University, and now its students will go right on from their completed work therein to a larger and fuller course in the university. While if any of them prefer to go elsewhere to our colleges they will have the same credit for work done in the academy they will receive should they attend the university.

—Of the colleges written to for a statement for this number all have responded except Drake University. Evidently Chancellor Craig did not receive our communication in time; perhaps he was on a journey in the interest of the university. We mention this that no one may think that Drake has been slighted by us in this special college number.

—The theory of suggestive therapeutics is based upon the theory of the duality of the mind—the objective and the subjective mind. Mr. Hudson's treatment of this subject makes it reasonably clear that all the mysterious phenomena of faith-cures, telepathy, mind-reading, Christian Science, Spiritism, etc., are clearly attributable to the powers of the subjective mind. We have no doubt but that there is a legitimate field for the use of suggestion in the cure of diseases, but we are not prepared to admit all that its enthusiastic advocates claim for it. It may substantially assist medicines in the cure of diseases, and in some cases wholly supplant them, but we are by no means persuaded that it would be wise to wholly abandon them and the physician, as some assert. The system as such is new and there is yet much to be learned about it. One invention may displace another, but not so with the sciences. Once a science always a science, if true, is a safe maxim. But sciences in name only cannot abide.

—On our first page this week we present a group of our leading university and college presidents. Their names and their faces are familiar to thousands of our readers without further introduction. These men carry upon their hearts great burdens. Like "the care of the churches," the care of our schools is one that weighs heavily upon the consecrated educator's heart. In his hands is, not only the responsibility of the character of each individual student, but in the case of these men and others that of the pulpit and church of the future as well. As you look into these picture-faces do not forget that you are looking into the eyes of men beseeching your prayers and your support in behalf of institutions that stand for the welfare of our children, our homes, our country and of the church of the living God. May this animating half-tone group-picture of our representative educators inspire you to greater interest in our educational institutions, is our hope.

—In this paper we have permitted a number of our leading educational institutions to speak directly to the people for themselves, hoping thereby to awaken a deeper interest in their welfare and in the cause of education in general. What has been written will be read with interest, and the value of our schools better appreciated, we trust, than ever before. It will be observed from the articles written that our schools generally are in a prosperous state as to attendance and hopeful as to their future usefulness and stability. Some of our institutions which were threatened with extinction of life by debts have been able to secure a new lease of life and now hope to remove the debt, entirely, and stand on solid ground, financially. Considerable money was raised last year for various colleges, both for current expenses and endowments, and they will enter upon the new year this fall with new life, new hope and new energies.

—As matters now stand, if the education of our young people were left wholly to the state there would of necessity be an omission that would be almost fatal to the full and proper development of character in the student; we mean the spiritual training of the head and heart. On the other hand, if the education of our children were wholly in the hands of the church there would be the danger of narrowness and the dominance of the sectarian spirit. It is necessary, therefore, that both the state and the church engage in this work. Or, in other words, we must look to the church to see that the religious element in the nature of man is not neglected, and that, too, in the education of our children.

—M. M. Davis, pastor Central Christian Church, Dallas, Texas, also our Texas correspondent, was in this city last week on business and made us a pleasant visit. Bro. Davis has become the business manager of the Christian Courier and will hereafter have the general superintendency of the paper. Bro. Homan will remain the editor in chief of the paper, but will be relieved of all the business cares of the office. In this way these brethren hope to greatly increase the usefulness of the paper, and in so large a country as Texas we see no reason why they should not succeed. The new management of the Christian Courier has our best wishes in the new era movement.

—In addition to the college articles in this paper we ask the special attention of the reader to their advertisements, also in this number. They are sources of information, especially to those contemplating a course of study for themselves or for others, and we ask you to read them carefully.

—Forever reading about a rich and bountiful feast to which you are invited without money and without price will not satisfy the hungry soul, however clear, precise, plain, simple and authentic the description and invitation. These are of first importance as to the knowledge of the feast and its freedom, but of no use in saisfying the hungry soul. "Except ye eat my flesh and drink my blood ye have no life in you," says our Savior.

—The Boys' Friend, edited by A. W. Conner, now in its third volume, has greatly improved both in appearance and matter. It is now a model paper for boys. Its purity, helpfulness by way of suggestion, and store of knowledge rightly claims a place in every family circle. Such a paper in our hands a generation ago would have been almost a priceless treasure. Good literature for the boys will help to save the country.

Dr. Moulton Misrepresented.

Our readers will remember a recent question from Bro. Keeler, of Chicago, concerning a reported statement, in the Chicago Record, of what Dr. R. G. Moulton should have said in his lectures at Detroit concerning the story of Joseph. At our suggestion, that he ascertain, first of all, whether Dr. Moulton ever made the statement attributed to him, Bro. Keeler wrote to Dr. Moulton and has received the following reply, which he sends to us with the suggestion that we make it an occasion of warning the brethren against accepting too readily the reports in the daily press of heretical statements of ministers of the gospel:

MR. W. P. KEELER:

DEAR SIR:—The quotation from the Chicago Record which you send me is utterly unintelligible to me, and has not the remotest resemblance to anything I said at Detroit. There was nothing in my lectures likely to raise any critical questions, and apart from Chicago newspapers, I have not heard of any "sensations," as attending them. The "higher criticism," which your queries touch, I always indicate as entirely outside my field.

Sincerely yours,
R. G. MOULTON.

J. M. Springer, of Carthage, Ill., is spending a ten days' vacation at Appleton City, Mo.

H. A. Denton, of Centralia, Mo., and A. W. Pasley, of Saling, Mo., are in a fine meeting at Friendship, Mo.

J. V. Coombs, with A. O. Hunsaker as singer, will begin a meeting with the church at Ottumwa, Iowa, Sept. 5th.

G. A. Hess, formerly pastor of the church in Waldron, Ill., is now pastor of the church in Greene, Ia.

Geo. L. Snively, pastor of the church in Jacksonville, Ill., is attending a summer course at the University of Chicago.

Carl C. Davis, pastor of the church at Davenport, Ia., together with his wife, are spending their vacation with relatives at Fairfield and Packwood, Ia.

C. A Young, of the University of Chicago, under the direction of the C. W. B. M. will give two courses of lectures on the Bible in the University of Virginia this fall.

C. D. Purlee, minister at Irving and Litchfield, Ill., is raising money to build a new house of worship at the latter place. Already enough has been raised to insure the errection of the building.

A neatly printed card received at this office, bearing the name of Evelyn Hastings Russell, Aug. 1, 1899, and underneath Rev. and Mrs. W. J. Russell, Rushville, Ind., we understand, if rightly interpreted, to be an expression of over running joy.

Geo. Manifold, after completing his course of study in Kentucky University about Dec. 1st, will sail for Japan under the appointment of the Foreign Mission Board at Cincinnati. Bro. Manifold will go by way of New Zealand to visit relatives there.

R. J. Tydings, whose name is familiar to our readers as a contributor to our columns on sociological questions, has returned to his work in the service of the government at Washington, D. C. He has been enjoying a vacation with his friends at Middlegrove, Mo.

M. P. Hayden, of Eureka, Ill., is ready to hold meetings or locate as pastor of a church. Write him at once. He wants work, and some church certainly wants a preacher. He also has a number of popular and instructive lectures which would profit any church to hear.

H. M. Brooks, Paris, Ill., has three lectures entitlde, "Great Men," "What I would do Were I Czar of the World" and "What Made Ingersoll an Infidel," which he is ready to deliver to any church or audience wanting to hear a good lecture.

James Small will preach at Columbus, Ind., during the months of August and September, and after that will continue in evangelistic work. He will hold a meeting, after the general convention, for J. H. McNeill and the congregation at Muncie, Ind.

J. V. Coombs, of Indianapolis, Indiana's most successful evangelist, will conduct a series of revival meetings for the Garfield Boulevard Christian (mission) Church, Chicago, Ill., beginning about the 20th of this present month. Bro. Huston will be with him. They expect a good meeting.

W. F. Watkins, formerly state evangelist of Maryland and Delaware, has accepted a call from the Christian Church, Savannah, Ga., and is now in that field. Bro. Watkins has had wide experience, and besides being an able scholar and teacher is a most affable gentleman; one who cannot fail to make many friends, and we hope that a new era is opening for the church in that important field.

J. L. Parsons, now of Indianapolis, Ind., who has been in this city for some days, gave this office a pleasant call on last Monday. Bro. Parsons has been attending Dr. Pitzer's school of suggestive therapeutics, from which he has just received his graduating diploma. Dr. Parsons does not intend to abandon preaching, but he has decided to add this branch of work to his ministry hereafter.

The golden wedding of Mr. and Mrs. Ann E. Jeffries was celebrated in Central Hotel, Ottawa, Kansas, July 31st. E. L. Allen, pastor of the church there, read a poem composed by him for the occasion. The hearty esteem of the people of Ottawa was expressed in a purse of nearly $100 in gold. Having personal konwledge of the parties thus honored the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST joins in congratulation and well wishes for the future.

Comments on Recent Editorials.

DEAR BRO. GARRISON:—I write this to you personally. If it should tend just a little to direct some editorials in the future, then it is well. The two leaders in the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST, July 17, are the subject The first one, "Crowning Feature of a Great Movement," is a thoughtful and valuable editorial. It is untimely somewhat, since it should have been written probably five or ten years ago as thought comes to some people. Certainly two or three years since was its seeming time.

But God works in his people to will and to do, and these are the days he is bringing such thought out, and we conclude that he knows well his own time. Seek somehow to have such editorials read, and if you go into the Ram's Horn's field and show daily answers to prayers and present evidence of the work and personal indwelling of this Holy Guest, I do not believe it will be too far or contrary in any way to the facts. I have personally seen and studied the question until I am fully satisfied that there is a "peace that passeth understanding," "a boldness to speak in Christ." A liberty to reprove sin and a patience to suffer long and be kind, a genuineness of grace and love that cannot come of human culture. It is the grace of God. It is the life of his Holy Spirit in men. Using men. The great body of the church do not know this. It is Greek even to some brethren who preach. We understand where the beginning corner is and can run the lines of the gospel field to a link, but have too much supposed that the Lord's territory was for the raising of logical athletes and chapter-and-verse critics. These are well, but they are natural forces to be used only for the raising of men and women filled with the Spirit of God.

Men who will suffer long and be kind, who will vaunt not themselves, who are not puffed up, who do not behave themselves unseemly in the use of their talents, their time or their money.

And this brings me to the second editorial, of which just a few words. I believe when we see the blessings to come from crowning our lives with the work of the Holy Spirit, filling the church with the Spirit, there will be no need for this second editorial. The first, the work of the Spirit, will solve the problem of saving the rich so far they can be saved, and saving the poor so far as they will be.

Spurgeon preached to rich and poor, educated and uneducated; so does Moody.

Cannot you preach to either class? Especially when you are filled with the Spirit? Suppose Moody does sometimes blunder in his interpretations. Who is better able to see the work and power of God in him than honest, educated people, whether rich or poor, Christian or not Christian?

The rich and cultured who despise the preaching of Moody and Spurgeon, or disdain it and seek something especially for themselves, are those who trust in riches and the wisdom of this world, and would have no one unless he should come to them along the lines of their own previous thought.

Such men walk by sight and follow the wisdom of this world. All of them, except Nicodemus, rejected the apostles at Jerusalem. They rejected Paul at Athens and most of them turned from him at every place he went. Often they are a pleasing class of men, gentle and strong in friendship for the time. People love them. Jesus had love for the young man who came to him, but that did not make him accept Christ, did not save him. He went away sorrowful, for he was rich. The truth is, our present tendency is to excuse, to modify and partially justify those who "ARE financially and otherwise prosperous" without question or memory of how they became so. You know well how very many men get into power and wealth, but when they are once in we sometimes make little distinction between them and the others who came to possessions along the currents of honest life and noble action.

The deeper truth is, it is exceedingly difficult for a rich man to enter the kingdom of heaven. If a man loves God and loves his brother and is doing what he can to honor God and save his fellows, however much money he makes he will not be very rich. He will see uses for $100 for every one dollar he has. But your mind turns to those who are already cultured and rich, but have not become Christians. The sorrow is that most of them in becoming rich have like the young man who came to Jesus surrendered themselves to the spirit of riches, and thus have put themselves in the most difficult situation possible to be reached by the gospel. "Those who live in mansions and are served by men in livery" have not even the zeal for Christ that Wendell Phillips had for the freedom of the slaves. He used his fortune, made another as he lived and used that, denied himself luxuries and livery all for his brother in black—for his temporal freedom. I know the palliations, excuses and sympathies which lead us to condone, but these do not lessen the danger and the likelihood of wealth making its possessors seek to be served instead of leading them to use their means to serve others. Does not, then, the suggestion of special preachers and preparation for the rich and cultured tend to promote the wealth-getting spirit? This is already too dominant. We need being warned against it.

We are now living after the material rather than the spiritual, even in the church. To correct this tendency we need to commit our ways unto the Lord, to trust also in him. To seek those things which are above. Did not you and I both love our good brother ——? Why did the dear boy quit preaching the gospel of our Lord Jesus Christ? Simply that his parents' love of larger wealth or of keeping intact what they had might be gratified. If he had had to stop and work with his own hands that they might have food and clothes and home, and given his life in the discharge of so high a duty, there would be no sadness, but joy, in the memory of such nobility. But to leave the immediate work of Christ and give such talent and such a life as his that one or two people might live in palaces and be served in livery is a warning to us that we already have too strong a leaning toward the standard of what gold can do for us. Shall we thus labor for the temporal good of the few, while the many have not the gospel of Christ?

Such surrender to the demands of culture cannot be made when we rightly appreciate "Thou shalt love thy neighbor as thyself." We do need a deeper spiritual insight—an indwelling of the Holy Spirit. We need more godly lives and must remember that love suffers long and is kind to all classes; but we need no special class to proclaim the blessed truths of the gospel "to the rich and cultured." They are our brothers—of our kind—have a common Father, are invited to a common feast—salvation.

We must seek to educate the children of God so that their presence will bless the cabin, and they will not be ashamed before kings. Christian teachers are in this work. So it seems well that God shall call good and strong men as Van Dyke and Faunce to the college centers that they may enter in and possess the field for him. The American colleges have the best talents of the nation; let them have the best men to minister the bread of life. But the same men when filled with the Holy Spirit can talk to the Salvation Army ranks as well, or soon learn to. Preach the thought of the first editorial, seek the Spirit of God, find this and the "new problem" will be solved.

Your brother in Christ,
J. HOPWOOD.

Our Educational Institutions and Interests

How Educational Day was Observed in the Springfield (Ill.) Church.

I gladly respond to the request for a word as to "how Educational Day was observed in our church." We heartily welcome this new "Day" among us. It has a message to bear to the churches, a message that must be heard. There has been no day in the church calendar whose celebration seemed more timely than Educational Day. It afforded an opportunity to lay close to the hearts of every one a phase of Christian work which posesses peculiar interest for young people and parents alike, a work which it is patent to every one should occupy a place in the economy of the kingdom second to no other interest.

The work that Christ regarded as fundamental and which he spent his life doing was not the raising of money, not the committing to writing of doctrines, but the preparation of men.

This fundamental duty of the church to prepare men, needs to be pressed home upon every individual conscience, for the rank and file of our churches do not feel it.

If we had had an Educational Day 25 years ago our educational conscience would have been by this time aroused and our educational activity doubled.

1. The Educational Conference of the Christian Churches of Illinois, called by President Hardin and held with the Springfield church in May, was an excellent preparation for us for the celebration of Educational Day. At this far-reaching conference the interest of our local brethren and sisters in the cause of our colleges was naturally greatly stimulated and given definite shape. That this was the result for many of our churches in Illinois besides our own is certain if the delegates who attended that conference did their duty. It is the present plan to hold another such conference at some future date, and there is hope of much good resulting to the cause in this state.

2. We further prepared for the day by turning our prayer-meeting the Friday night previous into an open parliament for discussion and prayer on the subject of our duty as a church toward Christian education.

The prayer-meeting is a very important meeting in our church. It is our religious clearing house for the mutual exchange of ideas concerning the interest of the church. It is our storage battery of prayer and power.

3. At this meeting the young people of the congregation, just home from college, were asked to present practical phases of the educational problem.

These enthusiastic messages from our college boys and girls constituted an interesting and profitable feature of the meeting.

No better date in the year could be agreed upon for Educational Day than the first Lord's day in July, the time when the young people are returning from their year's work at college, the time when the voice of the graduate is heard in the land and the thought of every one is turned toward education.

4. "The Function of the Teacher in the Kingdom of God," was presented in the Sunday morning address, in which was pointed out the debt of gratitude that we owe to the teachers among us in the past and the obligation towards them and their work that rests upon us in the present. They are bearing burdens that belong to us all, they are doing a work in whose glory we ought all to claim a share.

We need more literature setting forth the educational work of the Disciples of Christ.

Besides a few masterly addresses that have been delivered on this subject recently there is very little if anything.

We are writing the lives of our pioneer preachers, our heroic missionaries and our literary men. The choicest volume of all might be written on "Lives of Great Teachers among the Disciples of Christ," or "The Annals of our Schools and Colleges."

5. The specific needs of the college in our state and toward which as a church we have the greatest obligation were presented.

The greatest need of Eureka College, as Pres. Hardin puts it, is friends. Eureka needs friends, friends who love her, friends who pray for her interests, friends who keep posted as to her needs and endeavor to supply them promptly.

6. We made a contribution to the treasury of the National Educational Board.

It is to their recommendation we owe the institution of Educational Day, to them we owe the success that attends its observance, to them we owe the nucleus of a literature on this subject. They cannot live on taffy or good will. Somebody must pay expenses.

7. The interests of educational work and our own financial obligations toward it were carefully discussed in the current meeting of the official board of our church.

This above all is the place in the church where intelligent and lasting impressions are received and where definite obligations are assumed and responded to. Be sure and observe Educational Day and all other days in your official board if nowhere else.

There is no reason why a single church should fail to observe Educational Day. It is not yet too late. Any day in August or September will do as well as July.

J. E. LYNN.

College Matters in Missouri.

The next meeting of the Educational Conference will be in Jefferson City, the day before the state convention, in October.

Many of our preachers were away from their churches on Educational Day; and these ought to preach their educational sermons in August or September. The college and the cause go hand in hand.

Chancellor Hardy remarked lately that of all the wise things that Alexander Campbell did in hs life, the wisest and best was the founding of Bethany College, by which our plea has been placed in the hands of educated and able men, prepared to defend it and direct it intelligently. It is just as wise to sustain our colleges.

When I came to Christian University, four years ago, a certain man said: "The Lord is against that college." Since then about one hundred young preachers have studied here, and they have brought into the church about two thousand additions, and are now turning about a thousand souls a year to God! My doctrine is, the Lord is never against his own work.

The Fulton Orphan School has done a good work, and deserves to be placed out of debt at once. We need schools endowed to educate helpless orphan girls, and prepare them for lives of great usefulness. The Kentucky Orphan School has done a work that moves heaven with joy and fills many an earthly home with gladness; and our Missouri Orphan Schools have just as good a work before them. They ought to be endowed so that no other students need to be taken into the rooms that orphans should occupy. We have hundreds of orphan girls untaught, but these colleges are compelled to take other girls for tuition.

The Bible College at Columbia does a double service—teaches Bible lessons to the young ladies of Christian College and offers Bible lectures to the students of the State University. Every state university needs such lectures to infuse as far as possible the Christian element into secular education. Likewise our people owe the college a double service—to put up a suitable building for it and to encourage State University students to attend its lectures. It is a shame that where we have such Bible lectures less than one-third of the University students from Christian homes attend. "Make it unanimous."

The oft-asked question is, "Why have we no great university of the Christian Church in Missouri?" Here is ananswer: Because we do not establish well our smaller colleges. "He that is unrighteous in a very little is unrighteous in much." We do not yet deserve a large university, are not yet trained up to it. If we cannot conduct creditably a small college business, how shall we be expected to "do a big business?" Plant the small tree in deep soil, and the mighty oak will grow. Suffer a word of advice: Do not be hasty about the large school. How much honor would it be to a mother to feed one large, fat son to satiety, and starve two or three smaller children to death? Seize the smaller opportunity, and the larger will come. Do the present duty. As the Greeks used to say, "Milk the present goat, and pursue not the one that is fleeing away." Our first pressing duty is to endow the colleges we have. We shall see about the "great university" later.

Do you knnw that we cannot build a great university till we awaken a great interest in college matters? Now how shall we kindle this interest? I answer, By making our present work succeed. Success creates enthusiasm. If your protracted meeting succeeds, the interest intensifies. So the endowment of our present schools will develop sentiment for greater things. Failures never create sentiment. Who ever became enthusiastic over a dragging business? Give our colleges a support and the brotherhood will be aroused with a new spirit to do a work not yet dreamed of. Our people are not careless about education, but they lack a stimulus to enthusiasm, an incitement to give for endowments. Teach them the good our colleges are doing and the vastly greater good they could do if strengthened, and then let some good man lead with a handsome offer for each college. Others will quickly follow till we are ready to endow a great university, and we shall have the smaller colleges to prepare students for the large one.

The Orphan School at Fulton.

For nine years this school, located at Fulton, and occupying a most healthful site and one of the best buildings owned by the Christian Church, has in the face of many hindrances done a work for which it merits enlargement.

It has graduated from the literary department seventy young ladies; from the department of shorthand and typewriting, twelve; from the department of voice culture, five; from the piano department, four; besides, many of its undergraduates are filling positions as teachers in the public schools. From year to year it has helped orphan girls and others of limited means as its endowment permitted. During the session just closed, in which it enrolled one hundred and six boarding pupils, it gave aid to about forty students. In former years the number receiving aid bore about the same proportion to the number enrolled.

The benevolent purpose of educating orphan girls and co-operating with those in indigent circumstances has been steadfastly kept; but we have rejoiced in a large patronage from many wealthy Christian people, without which the institution would have perished; for, all told, its income from benevolent sources has not exceeded four thousand dollars annually, while it requires about fifteen thousand to keep up its curriculum and pay all current expenses.

The debt created in building and by the failure of some of the subscribers to meet their pledges remains unpaid. There is also a debt of five thousand dollars due to the fact that in the first years of the school the income fell short of the running expenses.

Although there is a debt of about thirty thousand dollars, several wealthy friends have authorized the president to go ahead, pledging their moral and financial support. But this does not mean that all our debts are paid, and that we have no need of money. Our needs are many, unless it be proposed that the school shrivel and shrink into inefficiency and fall below the measure of our ability as a great people.

If under conditions heretofore prevailing so much good has been wrought, and God has so signally blessed us, what might not be done if the generous people throughout the state would pay off all our debts and endow us with two hundred thousand dollars?

Our thanks rise with each returning day to God, source of all good, for the results that are the rich fruitage from all our schools, and we shall not sin by ceasing to pray for their enlargement and perfection; but we plead for generous offerings from the people so richly blessed with means, so that our school, unfettered by debt, may be enlarged and go beyond the fondest hopes of its founders. Missouri needs all our schools to fit its people for an era of multiplied opportunities and enlarged responsibilities. J. B. JONES.

Results of the Educational Conference.

I am often asked, "What do you now think of the work of the Moberly conference?" The conference met in the interest of our colleges in Missouri. Over one hundred delegates were present from different parts of the state. The conference was called by order of the state convention in response to an urgent request from Christian University, that the brethren in Missouri should at once make effort to enlarge the endowment of the University.

If any one ever imagined that every obstacle to a great cause could be removed by one sitting of a conference, he must have been over hopeful. The enemy of all good never permits a great blessing to flow so smoothly as that. It was not expected that the conference would endow the University or promise money at all. The gift of Bro. Garrison was a surprise to most of us. Neither did we expect that the friends of the several colleges would drop their own tasks and burdens to bear those of the University. No one was asked to abandon any other good work for this. Some persons may thus have expected too much, but many expected too little.

Not a few feared that the discussion would assume the character of a petty wrangle over conflicting interests. That was destined not to be. Education in Missouri is one cause, and with men who discern the magnitude and value of the work before us, it does not admit of internal contention. Others feared that even if agreement prevailed, nothing would come of it. But we may note some of the real results.

1. A far better understanding in regard to the work of each college has been reached, and accordingly many of the imaginary conflicts have vanished.

2. A definite policy was reached for Educational Day, and a definite recommendation made regarding it.

3. A clearer understanding regarding the attitude of the religious papers in the state toward our colleges has been attained, so that a greater space is directly devoted to the general interest of the colleges, and to special objects known to be acceptable to all.

4. The brethren of the state now see where private or public benevolence to colleges is needed and for what purposes it is to be bestowed.

5. The educational policy of the brethren in the state for one year is defined by agreement, and efforts to accomplish the tasks before us are not to be construed as partisan, sectional or selfish.

6. The condition of our colleges is better known, their merits better appreciated, and their needs better understood. This makes them more dear to all Christian people and more certain to receive funds and patronage than ever before. This is leading to an effective canvass for funds for these colleges. Apparently a new feeling toward the schools has sprung up and men are much more ready to consider a plea for beneficence.

7. The appointment of an executive committee to push on the work authorized leads to a more concerted action of the schools and to a common understanding of the plans and progress of each. It is important that this committee will report to the next conference, and new plans be considered looking to a still more successful work in the future. It is to be hoped that the Moberly conference gave a new impetus to college enterprise in Missouri.

"Being Dead, Yet Speaketh."

The morning mail bore me a letter from a highly esteemed brother and collegemate of another state. Upon opening it these sadly significant words were noted: "Old ——— College has closed her doors at last." The words fell like a pall upon my soul, and they linger with me still, like the last, sad message of a departed friend and benefactor. Yet they brought me no unexpected tidings. For years the beloved college was on the verge of dissolution. In truth, she was never strong and vigorous and thrifty, save in stalwart thougnt and character. Yet, how we prayed, and toiled, and hoped, that even in some mysterious way she would be rescued and saved to a needy world. But she is no longer among us to cheer and bless, save in cherished and grateful memory and through the lives of those whom she has blessed.

As I think of her through a mist of tears and with a tender memory, I recount many deeds of truest heroism and actual greatness. And when God makes up his final account, the many worthy acts and actors of the days of the dear college will not be forgotten nor passed by. The countless sacrifices of the noble faculty are worthy to be embalmed in immortal verse. They were men and women among earth's truest heroes and heroines. I hold him who gives his all in unremitting and unrequited toil for the culture of his fellows, among the noblest scions of the race. The faculty of the dear college were men and women of rare worth, Christians, true, who had imbibed deeply the spirit of the lonely teacher, for they served us well and through keenest sacrifice. Scholars, they were a true and exalted type, and worthy. Teachers with a noble personality deeply engraved into the warp and woof of my entire being. From them we learned abiding lessons of manhood, scholarship, faith, hope and life. "Being dead yet speaketh" this school through many lives who were trained within her sacred walls, and are now winning names of worth as servants of their fellows. But how sad it seems! Can it be the old bell will never call anxious students to chapel and class room again? Must the halls, once busy with ennobling thought, moulder and their walls mingle again with their native clay? Will the noble edifice pass into other hands or further the ends of ruthless and uncultured gain? Must her fountain of inspiring thought be forever dried? Like a lone star on a dreary night she lingered till the gloom engulfed her. Though her life was brief and never brilliant, we are deeply grateful for it. But why must men blunder so? When will Christians learn the lessons of service and stewardship and thus avoid so much of sadness, so much of wreck and ruin? The world is dying of selfishness and ignorance. When the eternal records are disclosed will read, "——— College, killed by the selfishness and ignorance of her friends." But I thank God and my brethren for her brief and useful life. She, though, "being dead yet speaketh," and will while God speaks through men, for she has launched good and useful lives who will prove worthy heirs of their smitten Alma Mater. So let me drop the mantle of forgiveness o'er her foibles, cast a wreath of affection o'er her righteousness, implant the tendrils of grateful appreciation in her memory, and turn from the sad scene a sorrowing but a wiser and better man. Peace to her ending, kindness over all!

Christian University.

Christian University, situated on a beautiful eminence overlooking the city of Canton, Mo., was chartered in January, 1853, and opened in 1855. The building is one of the most commodious and valuable in the brotherhood, and is in excellent condition. It is surrounded by a campus of 18 acres of bluegrass with stately trees, and contains besides an artesian well and an ever-flowing fountain that supplies the city with water, three buildings, a cottage, a well furnished boarding hall and a president's home. As these front the town and the Mississippi River, they are most attractive places to live. The entire grounds are estimated to be worth $50,000 to $75,000, but it would be difficult to duplicate them at any sum.

It is almost a half cantury since President Shannon, then being removed from the State University for preaching the gospel, came in the course of an evangelistic tour to Canton; and while passing over the hill that looks down upon the town and great river, he said to his companion with much feeling, "Here is the place to build a university that will forever magnify the gospel." On that very hilltop they built it, and for nearly five decades it has tried to maintain every holy truth. These fathers of learning among us erected a majestic college building, one of the best our people have ever had, which will last a hundred years, the admiration of every visitor.

The university has sent out hundreds of young men and women into the broadest fields of usefulness, and is every year adding recruits to this well-equipped army of Christian workers. But the time has fully come for enlargement in every depertment of this institution. Its permanent growth depends upon its immediate endowment. Accordingly, the Missouri Educational Conference has undertaken to raise $100,000 at once for this purpose; and to this end calls upon all the Disciples in the state and elsewhere who are willing to help, to make donations to this important fund.

The university now has about $18,000 endowment, the greater part of which is loaned on real estate securities bearing good interest, and the rest is in personal notes of donation not yet collected, but much of which bears regular interest, and the greater part is collectable. For many years not a cent of funds coming into the treasury has been lost by investment or otherwise. The most rigid rules for the safety of funds are observed in all their management. The endowment has steadily grown for years.

The University is out of debt and has $17,000 endowment. It has a faculty of 22 members, selected from various universities North, East and South. The newly elected chancellor, J. W. Hardy, is making a promising effort to raise a large endowment. The University carries a Classical, Scientific, Ministerial, Commercial, Musical, Art and Correspondence Bible course, all of which are conducted in a competent way.

Give Christian University the means of liberal enlargement, and it will be an imperishable crown of glory to the Christian people of [The above schedule is as it appeared in the Year Book for 1897 except some corrections concerning which we had information and have made. There may be other errors, but beyond our reach to correct at this time. In some instances the valuation of property may be too high and in other instances too low. Some of our schools have added both to their property and to their endowment since the schedule was published, but of these we have not the figures now at hand by which to correct the schedule. In the matter of faculties, students, and graduates, the figures given serve only in a general way. In the main our schools have greatly enlarged both their faculties and the number of students enrolled. However, there is much information in the schedule as it is for our readers and for meditation.—EDITOR.]

Missouri. It is to be hoped that every Disciple in the state will remember it along with the other colleges in the state that greatly deserve our sympathy and support. Our sacred honor, our immortal plea and our imperative duty bid us to let no college founded for good purposes and sustained heretofore by heroic sacrifices come to weakness by our lack of generosity. CLINTON LOCKHART.

Bethany College.

The readers of the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST have heard of Bethany College. Many of them know a good deal about Bethany College. A considerable number of them may have contributed to the support of Bethany College. Not a few of them may have visited Bethany College. Some of them have attended Bethany College and are proud to possess a diploma from Bethany College. All of them, it is presumed, desire the prosperity of Bethany College. The readers of the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST are able to ensure the prosperity of Bethany College. Bethany College is entitled to the support of the readers of the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST because of the work she proposes, and is prepared to do. It is a work which the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST readers are interested in. It is the work of the higher Christian education. Bethany College aims to emphasize "higher" and "Christian" in the phrase "higher Christian education." Bethany College has a clear and definite idea of what is meant by "Christian education." It is "Christian" according to the New Testament.

Bethany College will begin the session of 1899-1900 on Monday, September 18th. The prospect for students is better than at the corresponding date for several years past and the prospect is improving every day. President Kersey and Professor Miller are now giving their whole time to the work of canvassing for students, and other members of the faculty and friends of the college are also helping in that line.

The Ladies' Boarding Hall of Bethany College is being refitted and refurnished, and by the time the college opens all the rooms to be occupied by young ladies will be clean and cheerful, comfortable and cosy. It is the determination of the college authorities to make Phillips Hall as largely as possible a Christian home for young ladies.

Bethany College is still loyal to the principles and purposes of her founder in the department of ministerial education. Bethany College is sound, but not fossilized. It is her object to send out a class of preachers who shall proclaim with tender power the glorious gospel of the Son of God, and who shall be intelligent, aggressive and loving advocates of the grand plea made for union by the Disciples of Christ.

Bethany College—"the mother of colleges" among the Disciples—is engaged in no unfriendly rivalry with her own daughters or her own sisters. She wishes all our colleges well. She knows that no one or two colleges can minister to the growing demands and needs of a great and growing brotherhood. But she wishes and expects her share of our aspiring young people to tread her halls, and she will not apologize for using every lawful means to secure that share.

It is the opinion of the writer that the paramount issue for the Disciples of Christ is the adequate and speedy endowment of their colleges, and he would here heartily endorse what President Zollars is so well and forcibly urging on that subject. Bethany College has hosts of friends. They are more than able to endow her. They will endow her. Let all who feel like having a part in that splendid enterprise write to President J. M. Kersey, Bethany, W. Va. GEORGE MUNRO.

Bethany College, Aug. 9, 1899.

Eureka College.

Fifty-one years of successful work will justify the claim of this college on the attention of the reader. Steady growth from the small beginning of half a century ago has characterized all these years. Now the institution is enabled to offer courses of study far in advance of many colleges which make great pretensions. Six buildings, including Lida's Wood and Burgess Memorial Hall, both of which are new, meet all demands for the student life in both class room and college home. The college property has been thoroughly renovated and repaired this season. Within the past four years a large debt fund has been secured and the endowment funds have been extensively increased.

Eureka College has always kept a good faculty. It is the settled policy of its trustees to afford the young people who enter its classes the very best up-to-date instruction to be secured. In pursuance of this policy the faculty has been strengthened for next year. No college in the land will be able to offer better facilities for 1899-1900.

The present indications point to a large increase in the number of students. Faculty and former students are working hard to realize this hope and prospect.

The true glory of any college is to be found in the men and women sent out to do good in the world. Judged thus Eureka College wears a beautiful crown. Her children are found everywhere and in all lines of usefulness. Six and possibly eight missionaries, former students of Eureka, will soon go to the Foreign Mission fields. Many of the leading pulpits East and West are being filled by the men trained here. Men and women are admitted on equal terms and they are prepared to fight life's battles side by side.

An interesting feature of the opening of the next session will be a convocation service to be held in the Tabernacle on the campus, Tuesday evening, Sept. 12, at 7:30 o'clock. F. G. Tyrrell, pastor of the First Christian Church, Chicago, will deliver the address. Eureka is moving out for larger and better things.

J. H. HARDIN, President.

Christian Female College.

The first charter ever granted by the Legislature of Missouri for the collegiate education of Protestant women was that which incorporated Christian College at Columbia, Mo., January 18, 1851. In November, 1849, Dr. Samuel Hatch and Prof. Henry H. White came from Kentucky to Columbia to assist D. P. Henderson, then pastor of the Christian Church, in founding a school of the highest order for women. James Shannon, LL.D., the newly elected president of the University of Missouri, was an early and ardent friend of this school. A small residence was first used as a temporary home for the college, but in August, 1851, a handsome brick manor house, with 29 acres of ground, well set with bluegrass and forest trees, was purchased and in September school opened in this building, largely increasing its boarding capacity; in 1884 the original building was raised one story, and in 1889 a new brick chapel was built. The following are the names of the presidents and the years of their election: John Augustus Williams, 1851; L. B. Wilkes, 1856; J. K. Rogers, 1858; Geo. S. Bryant, 1877; W. A. Oldham, 1883; F. P. St. Clair (May), 1893; Mrs. Luella Wilcox St. Clair (November), 1893; Mrs. W. T. Moore, 1897. During the school year 1898-'99 the increase in the boarding department fully demonstrated the need of more room, and at a meeting of the curators in January arrangements were made for s larger future. Plans were adopted for new buildings including a large dormitory accommodating 150 students, a conservatory of music, art studio, gymnasium and a new chapel with a seating capacity of 1,500. The new dormitory building is of Elizabethan style, built of pressed brick and Bedford stone, heated by steam and lighted by electricity. The students' living rooms are arranged en suite, two students occupying a bed chamber and a study, each room having a large clothes closet with hooks and shelves. The interior finish of the building is in hard wood; floors are of white maple, highly polished, obviating the necessity of the unhygienic carpet. All modern conveniences have been provided, including a passenger elevator. Each floor has its suite of bath and toilet rooms. The main building, when completed, will contain rooms for the accommodation of one hundred and fifty students besides those reserved for the use of the family and faculty. Other apartments are a suite of three drawingrooms, library, reading room, public and private offices, infirmary, dining hall 47x49 feet, matron's suite, kitchen, pantry, store room, sewing room, laundry, etc.

This building has a fine south frontage of 229 feet, with a wing at the west, extending north 112 feet. There are three stories above the ground floor, the roof is of slate and the entire building is practically fireproof. The plan is the result of the best ability of two experienced architects, and for educational purposes, comfort, convenience and perfect sanitation is unequaled by any school for women in the Southwest.

The curricula of study have all been recently raised and enlarged. In the academic courses the degrees of B. L., B. S. and A. B. are granted, all articulating with the University of Missouri. Courses leading to graduation are also offered in music, art and elocution. In April, 1899, Mrs. W. T. Moore and Mrs. L. W. St. Clair were elected co-principals of the college. This college has an alumnæ of 542, including many of our representative women. No parent can make a mistake by educating a daughter in Christian College.

MRS. L. W. ST. CLAIR.

Columbia, Mo.

Cotner University.

The opening of the eleventh session of this institution will take place Tuesday, Sept. 12th. While the crowd of other duties, incident to the redemption of the property, has prevented as early advertisement as usual, many circumstances conspire to make the outlook for opening hopeful. The bright prospect of reaching a settlement of our financial difficulties has given an impetus of new courage. It is felt that to secure, free of debt, so beautiful and well located a property in the heart of this great Western empire is to drive a stake for the permanent advancement of our cause in what some day is to be the greatest stronghold of our brotherhood. Never, throughout the West, have crops promised more bountifully. The early and latter rains have been granted and the comforts of prosperous homes seem assured to thousands once in straitened circumstances. Now is the time to build for the future in the cause of Christ. Mortgages should be lifted, not from our homes simply, but from our churches and schools. Let the watchword of this Jubilee Year be the enlargement of our work. Send us students and so give opportunities for usefulness. Our courses of study have been arranged to meet the wants of the many. The Medical College is conducted by able physicians and earnest Christian men. The four college courses offered are thorough and compare well with those of the best institutions about us. We open our doors with special welcome to students for the ministry and those preparing for missionary work. Situated in this city of schools, the libraries of the State University, state and city libraries, in addition to our own facilities, are offered free for the use of our students. We have an excellent normal department and departments of elocution and music. Expenses are low. The location is beautiful and healthful.

Butler Bible College.

The Butler Bible College is a distinct organization, with its own board of trustees, separately incorporated, consisting of men well known among the Disciples of Christ in Indiana. At the same time, however, that it maintains its separate identity it takes advantage of certain opportunities accorded it by the trustees of Butler College. Its recitation rooms are in the buildings of Butler College, its students have the privileges of the dormitories, libraries, laboratories, gymnasium and other equipments of Butler College, and its matriculates are admitted to the classes of the college of arts upon the same terms as the matriculates of Butler College.

By an agreement entered into by the trustees of Butler College and the trustees of the University of Chicago the College is affiliated with the University upon terms which present the following advantages to students:

1. At each commencement of the college the bachelor's degree of the university will be conferred upon the member of the graduating class designated by the college as having sustained the highest average rank during the whole college course.

2. Every recipient of the bachelor's degree from the college will receive a certificate showing that he will be entitled to the bachelor's degree of the university upon the completion of one quarter's (twelve weeks) additional study at the university.

3. Free tuition for one quarter in the university will be granted to those who within one year after graduation from the college present the above-mentioned certificate and become candidates for the bachelor's degree of the university.

4. Three fellowships, yielding free tuition for one year, will be granted annually to graduates of Butler College, nominated by the college.

The regulations to which the college submits in consequence of the affiliation in no way compromise its independence, but are intended solely to enable the university to assure itself that the standard of work is being maintained at its present grade. SCOT BUTLER.

Hiram College.

THE LAST YEAR.

The enrollment of Hiram College last year reached almost four hundred and fifty, the largest enrollment that the institution has ever made. Every term showed an increase over the corresponding term of any previous year. The personnel of the student body is very fine. We have a well-matured class of young people drawn from more than twenty-five different states and countries. We had about one hundred students who were preparing for the ministry and missionary work. The graduating class numbered forty-five from the regular courses. This does not include the graduates in the special departments, but simply the graduates from the regular courses. Sixteen of our graduates will enter the ministry. The rest are divided among the various callings and learned professions.

THE OUTLOOK.

The outlook for the next year is very promising. We are receiving a great many calls for catalogues from all over the country. We receive calls for catalogues in every mail and many write that they are coming. The indications are that we will open with a larger attendance than we have ever before had. We are also glad to announce within the near future, Hiram is to be supplied with a large telescope and observatory. Work will be begun on the telescope in a very short time.

THE JUBILEE YEAR.

The jubilee endowment movement is progressing very satisfactorily. Large numbers of names are continually being received. We have six men constantly at work visiting the churches throughout Ohio and other states.

THE JUBILEE COMMENCEMENT.

The commencement in June next will mark the completion of fifty years of history. Elaborate preparations are already begun for this commencement. Several days will be given up to various features that have been planned for and it is expected that hundreds of thousands of people will visit Hiram on this occasion. Full announcements will be made at an early date. We hope that our friends everywhere will plan to be present on this occasion. The success that has crowned our labors in the past and the encouraging outlook for the future fills us with hope. Respectfully,

E. V. ZOLLARS,
President Hiram College.

Christian College.

Bro. A. P. Aten, of Hutchinson, has been chosen president of the Kansas Christian College at Harper. Evidently, the directors have made a wise choice, as he is a living example of the power and effect of the Christ's gospel upon the character and reputation of man, well-educated, and has had an experience of about nineteen years as a college president.

He and his college have fine prospects ahead, and the brotherhood especially of Kansas should work to make the prospects a realization.

Southern Christian Institute.

The Southern Christian Institute, Edwards, Miss., is unique in its character. We believe it to be the least sectarian of any of the church schools, and yet most intensely religious. It was established and is maintained by the people who desire to be called Disciples of Christ, or Christians. The Bible is made a very prominent feature in the work. It is presented in its historical relation as a connected or related message from God. The student is urged to study every passage in the exact words of Holy Writ.

Our theory also is that a purely literary or biblical education is insufficient. The world is made up of a varied industry and the young man, to be a leader, must know how to lead his people to fulfill the commandment to subdue the earth. Skill in the hand elevates and dignifies labor. Therefore we put great stress upon our industrial department.

The school has four departments, viz., Literary, Biblical, Musical and Industrial.

The aim of the Biblical department is, not only to fit young men to preach, but to teach young men and women to study the Word of God, in which is found all knowledge that will lead a people to be industrious, frugal, respectful and moral. The Bible is carried into the class room as students usually carry a general history. The student is taught how to divide it, and is taught to study it with the reverence due to its sacredness and with the common sense dueto its perfect construction. To this department we invite ministers of all denominations. We assure you beforehand we will not teach you in the tenets of your church but if you desire a knowledge of the Word of God, you will find nothing superior to this.

In connection with this the Bible is systematically studied in chapel every morning. For example, the Book of Matthew is taken up and studied chapter by chapter and verse by verse.

J. B. LEHMAN,
President and teacher in Bible and Normal Department.

The Eugene Divinity School.

Of this school J. A. Bushnell, president Board of Regents, in his announcement for 1899-1900, says:

"This growing institution, located in the city of Eugene and adjacent to the campus of the University of Oregon, with which its relations are most cordial, had its inception in the fertile brain of the present dean, E. C. Sanderson, through whose efforts mainly the school has been brought to its present state of efficiency. In the autumn of 1895 articles of incorporation were obtained with J. W. Cowls, W. H. Osborn, J. H. Hawley, J. A. Bushnell, J. D. Matlock, J. T. Callison and P. J. Flint, as a Board of Regents. The school opened October 6th, 1895, in a rented but commodious building, the attendance being very satisfactory. The foundation of a library was laid this year, which has steadily grown until it contains several hundred volumes.

"The fourth year, 1898-'9 was in every way satisfactory. During the summer of 1896 the opportunity of acquiring a splendid plat of ground adjoining the university campus presented itself and was promptly taken advantage of by the board, upon which has been erected a good building at a cost of over $5,000. The property now represents about $7,000 and is all paid for.

"These things were made possible by the liberal donation of Mrs. L. E. Cowls, widow of the late Judge Cowls, of McMinnville. He was one of the first regents and gave the first financial encouragement to the school. At his death Mrs. Cowls was elected to succeed him as regent and gave $1,400 toward the new building, one part of which is the "Cowls Memorial Chapel." She has since given an Endowment Note of $2,500, as a nucleus for the school's permanent endowment. Others have added to this fund. Through bequests and other gifts this fund will continually grow and increase the power of the school in the Lord's work. From this school will go forth in coming years scores of young men fully equipped to preach the pure Word of God."

Wm. F. Cowden, superintendent of missions in the Northwest, who spent a week at this school delivering a course of lectures on "The Christian Ministry," adds this testimony: "I am greatly pleased with Brother Sanderson's work. He has met with marvelous success in his effort to establish a worthy school for the education and training of young men for the ministry, upon asubstantial basis and with assurance of permanency.

The Bible School is not an annex, but a separate institution, complete in its kind, and yet sustaining such a relation to the State University that its students be secure in all its advantages for advanced education and yet enjoy the full protection of a religious atmosphere which he succeeds in maintaining in the Bible School proper.

Kentucky University.

All friends of higher Christian education rejoice in the continued and growing usefulness and prosperity of this historic and well-known institution, which is in its one hundred and first year. It has recently added two new departments—the Medical and Normal Colleges. The university comprises five associated colleges.

"These are the College of Liberal Arts, which offers courses that lead to the degrees of bachelor and master of arts, of literature and of science; the College of the Bible, which, conferring no degrees, has courses for undergraduates in the liberal arts and for bachelors of art; the Medical College, a member of the Association of American Medical Colleges, which confers the degree of doctor of medicine on its graduates; and the Commercial College, which offers a merchant's course and a fuller business course and special courses in phonography, typewriting and telegraphy," and a Normal College, with courses leading to county and state certificates, a state diploma and professional degrees. All the colleges are in Lexington except the Medical, which is in Louisville, Ky. These colleges have good equpments in the way of buildings, apparatus, gymnasium and campus, and have full and capable faculties. The coming session promises to be one of the best in the history of the institution. The attendance last year was nearly seven hundred (700). The uiversity has a safely invested endowment of $260,000, and only a small debt, which will soon be paid. With a progressive educational spirit, and a fixed purpose to continue to do thorough work in looking to the interest of both students and patrons, it appeals confidently to the brotherhood especially, and to the general public, for support.

The institution regrets to lose Prof. J. C. Kemper, the accomplished scholar, able teacher and Christian gentleman, from the School of Modern Languages, but it is gratifying to state that Professor A. C. Zembrod, an A. M. of Heidleberg, of 1895, and a successfull teacher of modern languages for more than twelve years, has been secured to take the chair.

The Normal College will be in charge of Prof. J. C. Willis, an A. M. of Wooster, and an experienced and successful teacher in normal schools, and also in other lines of educational work. Both of these new members of the faculties are in the prime of life, and very active, wide-awake men. The university offers among the best educational advantages for the least possible cost, fees and tuition in the College of the Bible being only $20, and in the College of Liberal Arts and Normal College only $22 for the entire session.

Next session opens Monday, Sept. 11.

R. LIN CAVE.

Add-Ran University.

Add-Ran University is located at Waco, one of the most central and largest cities in Texas.

It is located on University Heights, one of the coolest summer resorts in the South. Its main building is abont 200 feet long and nearly as deep, and has four stories and a basement. It is thus one of the largest school buildings in the country, and has a large campus of fifteen acres.

The courses of study are grouped into the eight following departments:

College of Science, Literature and Arts, College of the Bible, College of Oratory, College of Business, College of Music, College of Art, Academy, Primary Department.

The faculty numbers about twenty resident instructors engaged wholly in University work. Several are Ph. D.s. Dr. Addison Clark, for 25 years president, has resigned the active administration to younger hands, but remains as professor of philosophy and dean of the Bible College. Dr. Albert Buxton, who takes up the work as chancellor, is well known to the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST readers. He was president of Northwestern Christian College at the time of its unfortunate destruction by fire. Dr. Frank Marshall, who returned from the mission field in Japan this summer on account of his wife's health, is one of the newly elected professors. Drs. Parks in science and Eskridge in classics still remain. Prof. Easley has been appointed registrar. If space allowed, it would be pleasant to name the entire list of able and worthy teachers. Prof. Hamner is very popular for his leadership of the University quartette.

Drake University.

H. O. Breeden, pastor Central Christian Church, Des Moines, Ia., and editor Christian Worker, has a two-column editorial in the last issue of his paper devoted to Drake University virtues and interests. He calls Drake University "the strong young giant among Western educational institutions" and dwells with exceptional praise npon its "versatile and indomitable chancellor, Wm. Bayard Craig. It is to the wisdom and energy of Chancellor Craig that Pastor Breeden attributes the wonderful growth of the university during the last year; also for the money raised ($65,000), and the money proposed to be raised ($100,000). The editorial concludes with the following strong endorsement:

The brotherhood throughout the West have just reason to be proud of Drake University; its past is most inspiring, its present most satisfactory and its future most promising. The institution is not alligned with conservative ideals or committed to the dead calm of inertia or stagnation, but always progressive and open to the reception of new views without being committed to a fad. It is open to receive the truth from whatever source it may come, but takes its bearings constantly from the ancient landmarks which the fathers set up. The brethren throughout the West can send their sons and daughters to Drake University with the confident assurance that they will receive the highest instruction, from the most competent teachers, with the most ample facilities, at a minimum of cost.

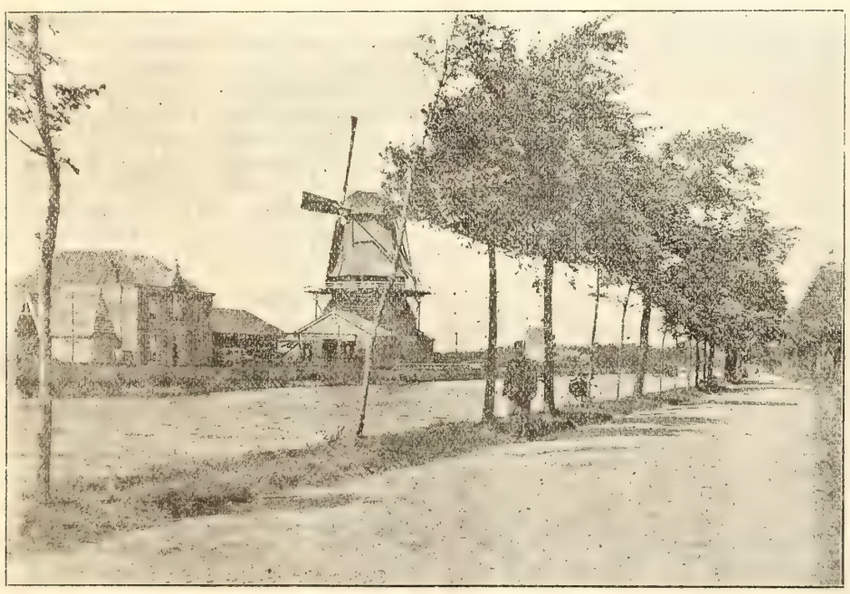
Wheeling Through Europe.—II.



HOLLAND.

It was very early on a gray and misty June morning when the ship steamed up the River Maas to Rotterdam. There is a dyke on either side of the river and the fields are below the level, as if the river were flowing along an elevated viaduct. The expected windmills are there and occasionally the thatched roof of a cottage is seen, tiptoeing to peek over the dyke at us. Statuesque cows stand pensively on the dyke, their figures sharply defined against the sky. In fact, nearly everything one sees in Holland is seen against the sky, for the land never rises high enough to form a background. Sailing up the Maas one does not need to be told that he has reached Holland, for "Dutch" is written largely on every feature of the picture. The whole situation seemed as foreign as one could imagine, till a boat came down the river with a band playing "El Capitan." Then we were at home again. It rained a gentle, persistent drizzle, but experienced weather prophets said it would stop soon, so we knocked the crates from our wheels and prepared to go ashore. Our faith was rewarded and we landed under a clear sky.

Most voyagers who disembark at Rotterdam leave on the first train. I don't see why they should, for if one wants to see things Dutch he will see more of them in Rotterdam than in any other three cities in Holland. The streets are as narrow and crooked, the houses as sharp-gabled, the canals as numerous and the language as Dutch as one could wish. The "sights" of Rotterdam are not of the first order, but we spent the day knocking about the city and incidentally seeing most of the things which are starred in the guidebook. St. Lawrence's Church, for instance, is said to be one of the most notable churches in Holland. It is a garbled monstrosity with some good details but incongruously put together in no particular style of architecture. It reminded me, as did most of the Dutch churches, of that sort of nonsense rhyme to which each member of the company contributes a line without knowing what the others are writing about. Whitewash and high wooden pews add the final touch to the disfigurement of the interior. The six Calvinistic churches of Rotterdam have a curious scheme for interchanging ministers. There are seventeen Calvinistic ministers in the city and none of them is connected with any particular congregation. They serve in rotation and no minister preaches a second time in any church till he has preached in all of the others. Each church has from two to four services on Sunday, and most of the ministers preach only once a week.

Holland is full of art galleries, which are generally called museums. We struck a bargain day at Boyman's in Rotterdam and saw a fine collection of Dutch masters, especially rich in Rembrandt drawings, for the equivalent of two cents in American money. But the principal sight in Rotterdam is Rotterdam. Even the statue of Erasmus, who was born here something more than four centuries ago, was of rather less immediate interest than the old woman who had a stand on a side street (which was really a canal with a sidewalk on one side) and sold mussels at the rate of seven for two-fifths of a cent, including vinegar to dip them in. She wore a tattered gown, but her headdress was of spotless white, the ample, flowing sort which is worn in South Holland, and above each temple there projected a little spiral coil of gold wire, exactly like a pair of horns. We conversed with her to a limited extent in pantomime, took her picture and bought some of her wares as an evidence of good faith. Toward evening we pulled out of Rotterdam regretfully and rode down to Delft, ten miles over a brick-paved road by the side of a canal. In riding such a road as this, or in looking about from the deck of the steamer on the Maas, one gets an impression of flatness which no prairie view can give. The country is more than flat; it is concave, like a platter, with dykes for the edges, and the constant presence of high-level canals, which are themselves generally lower than the sea, keeps one constantly in mind of his perilous position.

A TYPICAL BRICK - PAVED DUTCH ROAD.

The matter of language in Holland is worthy of extended treatment. It must not be supposed that we go as far as Delft before we discovered that English was not the vernacular here. The stewards on the ship were Dutch and they assured us that English was spoken fluently all over Holland, but since some of them could scarcely speak the English that their business required, we were not much encouraged. I suspected then, what I have since discovered to be a fact, that it is a national weakness of the Dutch people to think they speak English. The fact is that they have to try to speak almost all civilized languages, for their visitors are from all nations, and none of them ever learn Dutch. Our linguistic equipment consisted of a fair stock of English, such German as one learns in reading to a limited extent in the works of the philosophers (which is of little service in ordering dinner), an amount of French which for conversational purposes may be set down as zero, a few set phrases and the names of about a dozen things to eat in Dutch, and a moderate facility for pantomime.

THE NIEUWE KERK AT DELFT.

It was as we were leaving Rotterdam that I scored my first linguistic triumph. Approaching a policeman and pointing to a certain street I said with an interrogative inflection, "Delftschevaart?" I listened to his elaborate reply in Dutch with such an expression of intelligence as my facial muscles could command, gave him a courteous "Dank, mijuheer," and followed the direction indicated by his gestures. I am pretty sure he thought I understood him. This was a great encouragement and when we were well out of the city I ventured to address a complete sentence to a man by the roadside: "Is het de wey naar Delft?" He answered promptly, "Ja," and I counted this my second triumph. I have wondered since if he wasn't a Frenchman and if he didn't think he fooled me as I thought I fooled the policeman.

Shortly after this episode and before reaching Delft, we stopped to eat. I had ordered bread and butter, milk, cheese and eggs for two by means of some German, a few words of Dutch and much pertinent gesticulation—most of the articles being in sight. It was then that Damon rose to the occasion and, venturing for the first time upon the treacherous sea of modern foreign language, exclaimed with good, sonorous, Illinois accent, "Goot!" Taking it altogether, the language is perhaps the most constant source of amusement in Holland. Generally we compromise on German, for somehow one cannot resist the impression that if only he speaks bad enough German he will be speaking intelligible Dutch. So I speak the worst German I can command and the Dutchman speaks the worst German he can think of, and between such a pair of competent ignoramuses a misunderstanding can be developed on any assigned topic in less than three minutes. At first I could not ask questions in Dutch except "Is this the road to Delft?" and "Can you give us a bed for the night?" nor understand the answers to these unless they were simply affirmative or negative, and could not order anything to eat except coffee and rolls and milk and soft-boiled eggs. After awhile we wearied of soft-boiled eggs and it took two days of hard work to get them fried. Still, the Dutch must be credited with a cheerful readiness to meet the traveler half way in his linguistic difficulties, and they seem flattered and pleased if a foreigner speaks a few words of their language. But outside of the large hotels, which we avoid, and the Hague, which is thoroughly cosmopolitan, they do not speak English.

The thing to see in Delft is the potteries, but they are not open to the public for fear the secrets will be stolen. There are two principal churches in Delft, as in most other Dutch towns, called the Old Church and the New Church. In this case the New Church is a century and a half older than the Old Church, and it has the added distinction of having the highest tower in Holland—375 feet. The tower is out of all proportion to the rest of the edifice but, considered simply as a tower, it is as fine a specimen of Dutch architecture as one will find. We discovered by a chance inquiry that no one was ever permitted to go into the tower except during one week in the year, and were at once fired with a desire to ascend it. The verger, who spoke enough English to understand our request, was horrified at the idea and, by way of closing the argument, said that it would require the burgomaster's permission. "Well, where is the burgomaster?" Following his directions we sought the City Hall, which is called the Stadthuis, presented our request and were refused, till we told the officials we were representatives of American newspapers. That produced the desired effect and the concierge was sent to escort us. The tower is high enough and the country flat enough to give a view all over the kingdom, but bird's-eye views in Holland are generally disappointing on account of the murkiness of the atmosphere. Every house in Delft has a red tile roof and most of the streets are shaded waterways, which together made a view worth climbing for. The total absence of blue tones in a city where one involuntarily expects to find nothing else is rather a shock to the porcelain-loving visitor, but on second thought one would not expect to find Delft pottery on the sidewalks.

It is only a step from Delft to the Hague, the capital of Holland. The local correspondent of the Chicago Record, whom we met by chance, gave us much useful information which is not down in the guidebooks, and the secretary of the American delegation to the Peace Conference saw the flags in our buttonholes and came out to meet us. He told us about the Fourth-of-July celebration which was to be held in the New Church at Delft by the American delegation to the Peace Conference. It was a disappointment to learn that the House-in-the-Wood, where the meetings of the conference are held is absolutely closed to visitors. After a few hours at the Hague, and a few more at the neighboring seaside resort, Scheveningen, we rode through the Wood in which the House is situated, and on through Leiden and Haarlem, with many stops, to Amsterdam. The little island of Marken, which we visited by boat, lies in the Zuyder Zee, a few miles from Amsterdam, and is inhabited solely by fishermen and fisherwomen, who preserve the peculiar customs of their ancestors. The men wear bloomers and doublets; the women short skirts of enormous fullness and gaudily figured bodices with white sleeves. Everybody wears wooden shoes. They are picturesque, and they know it. They have been photographed ever since cameras were invented, and it takes money now to get them to stand for a picture. Unfortunately, it was a cloudy day when we were there. Keeping to the north, we crossed the Zuyder Zee, a nasty and treacherous piece of water, turbulent, choppy and shallow, into Friesland, the most primitive and unvisited part of Holland. Our circuit through Friesland, made for the most part on the top of dykes which afford an excellent point of view, revealed many peculiarities of architecture, costumes and customs, and long before reaching Arnhem, which is near the border of Germany, we had learned to like the Dutch people. They are clean, sober, industrious and obliging. Their gravity is imperturbable. In repose they are solemn but not sorrowful of countenance, as one would be at the funeral of a distant and unknown relative, and their rejoicing is of a serious and well-ordered sort, finding expression in set formalities rather than in spontaneous demonstrations. Withal, they are polite with a kindly and generous politeness, which comes from the heart and goes to the heart. Passing workmen, farmers and teamsters lift their caps and give a quiet and respectful greeting as we pass, and, with the exception of one gorgeous doorkeeper in a uniform, resplendent enough for a major-general, to whom we failed to give the expected copper, I do not believe the ill-will of a single Dutchman followed us from Holland into Germany. RUNAWAYS FROM THE POPE.

Most Englishmen have given up all hope of France. Desperate decadence has indeed set in across the Channel, and as England and France are such very near neighbors, the French national downgrade produces both alarm and regret on our side. For every possible reason the British people would be willing and eager to see France strong, prosperous and noble, so long as she was peaceful. Alas for "La Belle France!" Priestcraft and infidelity seem to have sealed her doom. When a nation is crucified between the two thieves of sacerdotalism and superstition, she is about to sink into a sepulchre from which there is no resurrection. The scene enacted the other day at Roubaix, in the north of France, was sufficient to seal the eternal disgrace of "La Grande Nation." The lion-and-bull-fight has disgusted the public opinion of all Europe. But, after all, may we not still cherish some feeble and lingering expectation of the dawn of a better and brighter day? There are some few faint signs of amelioration. Londoners are this week intensely interested in a demonstration got up by that chief of the English Methodist leaders, the Rev. Hugh Price Hughes, who has imported the most romantic deputation of French religionists seen in England for many a year. On Sunday afternoon the front part of the platform of St. James' Hall, Piccadilly, was crowded with Frenchmen, every one of whom was, a very few years ago, a monk or a Roman Catholic priest. Every one of these men had, at an immense sacrifice, come out of the Church of Rome. The most celebrated of this interesting group was the Abbe Bourrier, formerly a parish priest in Marseilles, who seems destined to be the leader of a new reformation in France. Bourrier made an immense impression on the English audience, although his words had to be translated. He is a tall, well-formed man, with a clean-shaven face. He is editor of Le Chretien Francais, a paper which has sprung into great power in France. It is to be noted that he does not use the word Protestant in his addresses or his writings, but constantly professes that his one desire is to make Frenchmen Christians. He admits that Protestantism is not united in France, and also that it is not popular in that country. He says, "We hold that where Christ is there is the church, and we press on to that great feeling of unity that where Christ is there is our country." He thinks that the perfect religion of the future will combine all that is true both in Romanism and Protestantism. He would be satisfied if Romanists could only be got to read the Bible and to believe in Christ. Abbe Bourrier possesses, in a full measure, that faculty of light and graceful combined with felicitous phraseology, which peculiarly characterizes the average cultured Frenchman. He says that the Pope believes in the stability of England, for he invests his money there. It is evident that the new and only remaining hope for France lies in the very direction to which our own great movement points. France can only be saved by the union of the best elements that have survived in her nationality, on the basis of the ancient gospel. Bourrier and his friends are going to pave the way for our own missionaries. The time will come when our representatives will step on to the shores of France to kindle the fire of enthusiasm for the true faith. The work attempted by Delaunay was before its time, but the time will come.

THE BIGGEST RELIGIOUS SHOW ON EARTH.

General Booth is certainly the religious Barnum of the age. He is a wonderful sensation monger, though he is far more than that. Sometimes this wonderful and indomitable old man arranges a display which attracts thousands of people and repels thousands of others—those who are certainly the more refined and thoughtful of the community. When Mrs. Booth, the "Mother of the Salvation Army," died, he made the occasion one of a mighty, popular demonstration, going through London in a chariot like some triumphant hero, and charging throngs of people a shilling each to see the dead body of his wife, lying in state. He is now home from a trip to Australia and is celebrating his seventieth birthday by a Salvation Army International Exhibition at the immense Agricultural Hall. This is truly a remarkable display, and he is the only man in the world who could have arranged it. The vast hall is gorgeously decorated, and the missionary show is something unparalleled. Forty nationalities are illustrated in connection with the work of the Army in all parts of the world. This spiritual autocrat and Protestant pope is certainly a masterly leader of men. Unfortunately, his work is built, not on truth, but on a peculiar combination of tact, will, enthusiasm, magnetism and self-interest. There is an immense amount of self-seeking and self-aggrandizement in the leaders of the Salvation Army. Their names are trumpeted and their offices are magnified through all the earth. None of the great Booth family have practiced the art of hiding their light under a bushel, but they have made big bonfires of all the many bushels which other people have at times tried to clap over their overobtrusive personalities. General Booth knows how to win thousands of recruits every year, but he does not know how to keep them. The leaking out is constant and enormous, and it has to be made up for all the time. Had he based his work on the rocky foundation of New Testament doctrine, instead of changing the ordinances and crystallizing a form of prescriptive teaching very well understood, he would have seen erected a lasting fabric instead of a crumbling system. I venture to find the same defect in his work, admirable though it is in some of the merely human sides, which must be candidly recognized as fatally characterizing Mr. Moody's work. The Bible is made a plaything by both of these popular and earnest men. They pay to the apostles just as much homage as they please, no more. Go through England to-day and you will find but feeble remnants and results of Moody and Sankey, which for a time seemed to carry all before it. On the contrary, Spurgeon's work is as solid as an adamantine rock.

THE OLD STIFFBACKS GOING.

During the great Wesleyan celebrations connected with the completed restoration of Wesley's Chapel in City Road, London, I have had opportunities of noting peculiar signs of the times. It is very evident that forward movements are in process everywhere in the religious world. Moving about and talking with the Wesleyan Methodists in some of their great representative gatherings, it is difficult to trace any of the old stiffback, uncompromising severity which was once upon a time associated with Methodism. Here and there can be seen a veteran, bearing with stately dignity the Puritan marks in manner, in beard and in gesture, talking gravely and reverently to hollow-eyed enthusiasts, eager, zealous and pale. But, broadly speaking, the gatherings of present-day Methodists represent an up-to-date style of bright, happy, light-hearted men and women, believers in the adage of a time for everything, and fully convinced that the thing for the time on hand is enjoyment. What a change is manifest in the semi-social religious functions of our day! Music is very much in the ascendant, and much of it is not sacred, but secular music. The Psalms have gone out of fashion, and David cannot keep up his monopoly at all the religious gatherings, excepting those for actual worship. You will see brilliant uniforms, pretty dresses and marks of jubilant gaiety on all sides whenever Christians come together in the interests of the different movements which they are trying to promote for the benefit of man and the glory of God. The Methodists are showing their conviction that religion has its social and humanitarian obligations as well as its spiritual claims. And the Baptists and Congregationalists are following on along the same progressive lines. Time was when religion meant nothing more than the gathering together twice or thrice a week of earnest and devout people for worship. But a new impulse has laid hold of thousands of minds with tremendous power. The idea is exploded that the religious communities are under no obligations beyond those of their purely religious functions. The old Wesleyans were perhaps the most conservative of all, except the case-hardened hyper-Calvinists, those spiritual Gradgrinds of the English churches. Now the notion is being acted on that while the eyes, ears and hearts of the faithful should be wide open to the needs of the destitute and afflicted, the faces of Christians should not be measured by the yard, their voices should not be as harsh as the echoes of the file, the nutmeg-grater and the undertaker's screwdriver; but their minds should be inclined towards the brighter side of life, both for the sake of their own mental and physical health, and for the sake of others. The duty of the modern preacher is to prove that there are pleasures for the Christian quite as attractive as the frivolities which tempt the giddy, the silly and the ungodly. And what the individual preacher should do, the religious community as a body should do. Come out of the meeting house into the world! This is the cry of modern Methodism. And instead of being less spiritual, it ought under the new regime to become more so. Jesus did not spend most of his time in meeting houses, but poured the power of his sympathetic presence into the community of men wherever they were to be found congregated. Modern Christianity has not yet gone out to the multitude, but it is beginning to move out.

New York Letter.

As this leter is being written on the fast "Black Diamond Express" it may show a few quivers and shakes characteristic of this fast age in which we live. Scranton, Penn., is the objective point. Preaching two or three sermons on the occasion of the first anniversary of that church at that place is our mission. Of the church at that place we will speak next week. During the vacation when we comes in touch more or less with new faces and force in in society, we are often led to ask the question, "Is the world growing better, or worse?" In answering this question one may truly say, "Both better and worse," and neither be a pessimist or an optimist. The good old Dr. T. L. Cuyler, to whom all listen with reverence and respect, in a recent address on this question said: "In trying to take a common-sense view of things I can see that in several important respects it is a worse world than it was when as a young man I began preaching." Among these things he mentioned bossism in city government which he considered almost hopeless on account of the heavy vote always polled in the ignorant tenement districts, and public schools could not educate fast enough. Bossism in the state is, in the Doctor's opinion another grave and growing monster. Inebriety, too, is on the increase he thinks and education is the only remedy for it. The race problems as developed in our negroes and Indians is, he says, grave enough for us to tackle without adding the various races of the Philippines. The spirit of American bragadocio is also on the increase; and it is not a good omen either. The enormous increase of both wealth and poverty in this country is dangerous because the rich feel secure in their possessions and the poor hate and distrust the rich, In early days there was less inequality of position and all classes were happier and more contented. He said the only effectual remedy for all this is education in its highest form, on a Christian basis. Ethics are good, but we need more pure, simple gospel. Ministers must preach and apply the gospel fearlessly, said he. But the world is growing better because of the great missionary efforts being made; Christian associations, college settlements and manifold forms of aid are doing wonders. The churches, as always, are leading in all good works and private beneficence on a comprehensive scale show that many of the rich believe themselves God's almoners.

Dr. John H. MacCracken, the newly elected president of Westminster College, Fulton, Mo., is only 23 years old and is said to be the youngest college president in the United States. He is a graduate of the New York University over which his father, Dr. H. M. MacCracken, presides. The young president has just returned from Germany where he studied and presented a thesis for the Doctor of Philosophy degree on "The Philosophy of Jonathan Edwards," on which he received the degree and also the added distinction of "magna cum lande"—the highest title in the gift of the University of Halle. If the son can only do in proportion for Westminster College what his distinguished father has done for the University of New York, great and successful will be his work.

One of the practical results of agnosticism was painfully evident at the death and funeral of Robert G. Ingersoll at Dobbs' Ferry. His wife and daughters could not be induced to leave the dead body, even to eat or to sleep, but sat by the side of his lifeless form by day and slept on cots by his side at night. Even their meals were served to them beside his dead body. They could not bear to take leave of his decaying dust, for of a future life they had no hope. To them his death was eternal. How totally different is the death of the Christian, who in the dying hour can say, "I know whom I have believed and am persuaded that he is able to keep that which I have committed to him against that day." Agnosticism is fruitless in life and hopeless in death. Col. Ingersoll's family are to be pitied in this awful despair.

The Church Army Tea Saloon, No. 2, was opened a few days since at Atlantic City, New Jersey. It is located on one of the piers upon which thousands of people congregate daily, and is fitted up as handsomely as any bar in the place. Signs on the ocean side as well as the interior read:

ATLANTIC CITY BRANCH.

THE U. S. CHURCH ARMY TEA SALOON AND COFFEE BAR.

Are you a Tea-Totaler? Try it!

The first tea saloon was opened five weeks ago on Allen St., New York, where already it is patronized by more people than any liquor bar in the neighborhood. Many "beer growlers" are sent now for tea cold, tea hot, tea coctail and tea plain. The tea saloon is a success. S. T. WILLIS.

The New Law.

PROHIBITS THE USE OF ARSENIC OR ALUM IN FOOD ARTICLES.

The law enacted by the last legislature, a copy of which was recently pulished in our columns, and which prohibits the manufacture or sale of any article intended for food or to be used in the preparation of food, which contains alum, arsenic, ammonia, etc., places Missouri at the head of the states in the matter of sanitary legislation.

Laws restricting the use of alum in bread have been in force in England, Germany and France for many years. In this country, in Minnesota, Wisconsin, Michigan, Ohio, Kentucky and several other states, direct legislation in reference to the sale of alum baking powders has also been effected. In several of these states their sale is prohibited unless they are branded to show that they contain alum, and in the District of Columbia, under the laws of Congress, the sale of bread containg alum has been made illegal.

Following are the names of some of the brands of baking powder sold in this state which are shown by recent analysis to contain alum. Housekeepers and grocers should cut the list out and keep it for reference:

JACK FROST ..... Contains Alum
Manf. by Bain & Chapman Mfg. Co., St. Louis.
SHEPARD'S ..... Contains Alum
Manf. by Shepard Baking Powder Co., St. Louis.
BON BON } ..... Contains Alum
HOTEL }
Manf. by Grant Chemical Co., Chicago.
CHAMPION ..... Contains Alum
Manf. by H. P. Coffee Co., St. Louis.
CALUMET ..... Contains Alum
Manf. by Calumet Baking Powder Co., Chicago.
FORBES' ..... Contains Alum
Manf. by Forbes Bro. & Co,. St. Louis.
PERFECT ..... Contains Alum
Manf. by Perfect Baking Powder Co., St. Louis.
EDDY'S ..... Contains Alum
Manf. by Eddy & Eddy, St. Louis.
MAMMA'S ..... Contains Alum
Manf. by F. B. Chamberlain Com. Co., St. Louis.
K. C ..... Contains Alum
Manf. by Jaques Mfg. Co., Chicago.

Hundreds of private, or grocers own brands, made from alum, will under the law become contraband.

Texas Letter.

I am surprised at what I am about to say; and you will be surprised when you hear it. The pastorate of a church of 1,000 members would seem to be work enough for one man, and it is. But sometimes the busiest hands and the most burdened shoulders are compelled to take on additional work; and so it has been in my case. The Christian Courier for eleven years has been struggling for existence, ambitious to become a great paper in Texas and the adjacent country. Circumstances have been such as to make the battle a hard one. But it has steadily won its way in spite of these, and now occupies a place where new arrangements are an absolute necessity. Its brave editor, W. K. Homan, can no longer be expected to do the double work of editor and business manager. No one man can do it. The trustees, therefore, have urged me, in addition to my work as associate editor, to assume its financial responsibilities and become business manager. The position was unsought and unexpected; and coming to me in this way, and realizing that some one must take it, I have consented to do it. Relying upon God, who has always guided me, often in unexpected and undesired ways, and upon the friends of the paper, I mean to leave no stone unturned in the effort to build it up and make it still more worthy of the great cause we plead.

C. McPherson, under the heading, "First Principles," is doing some fine work in the Courier. Bro. McPherson's clear head and trenchant pen never appeard to better advantage. These fundamental questions must not be forgotten. The older people among us understand them, but not so of thousands of the young, and the stragers about our gates.

S. D. Perkinson, of Denton, has been called indefinitely as pastor of the church in that city. That is right. When such a man as Perkinson finds a field like Denton, it seems the part of wisdom on both sides to stay with it. The doctor does it, the lawyer does it, the merchant does it, why not the preacher also?

B. B. Sanders, our corresponding secretary, has the following report for June and July: Additions, 75; subscriptions to the Courier, 21; cash received in the field, $169.50; pledges taken, $279.00, which is a gain to the missionary treasury, above his salary and taveling expenses, of $209.60. Who can beat this?

Ordinarily the types treat me so well that I do not kick, even when they do mutilate me. But in the last Texas Letter there is just a little more than I can bear. In speaking of that big watermelon, which weighed 79 pounds, to simplify the thought I added that it was about the weight of "an eight-year-old boy;" when, lo! the printer makes me say, "an eighteen-year-old boy." Clearly that printer never saw an average "eighteen-year-old boy," of Texas. He knows only the scrubby boy of some sterile clime.

Brownwood is a fine example of what consecrated pluck and perseverance will do. Several years ago a few brethren put in a foundation for a church, and their money gave out, and they stopped rather than go in debt. Pretty soon they made another effort, and the walls were almost completed, when they had to stop again. A third attempt enclosed the house so they could use it. And now A. J. Bush has been with them again, and they have had a good meeting, and their house, an elegant one, will be dedicated by Bro. Bush the second Sunday of October.

Cincinnati in October.

Much has been written and much more will likely be written concerning the attractiveness of the above city this coming autumn. This article will treat of but one of the salient features of the Jubilee Convention. Among our returned missionaries will be G. L. Wharton. Is there a brother or a sister, interested at all in the cause of missions, who would not travel a long distance to look into the face and listen to the voice of this consecrated missionary? He has spoken to us twice, here at Bethany Park, on India. On one occasion his theme was "New India," and the recital of what had been actually done in that dark land was an inspiration to those who heard him to press forward and accomplish still greater things in the future. The other address, on "The Needs of India," was, in spite of Bro. Wharton's assertion to the contrary, a "finished address," in the highest sense. The rapt attention of the large audience present gave evidence of the masterly presentation of the theme as well as the deep and widespread interest in the cause of missions. Bro. Wharton will be at the Jubilee Convention. Will you not also be there? BETTIE WILSON.

Missionary Combination.

It is no sign of diminished interest in the missionary cause that workers are calling for new and better methods of operation. Not only are our own papers discussing this subject, but a secular paper recently said, "Why so much talk about women's missionary societies? Are the men not needed?"

Now, of course, Christian women are touched on account of the wretched condition of women in heathen lands, but if they would lift the burden of heathendom they must, for the sake of the cause and for their brother's sake, call on him to help.

Why not drop the word woman out of the words Christian Woman's Board of Missions and continue the work on the same plan, but make it a duty resting upon men as well as women to belong to this society. For organized, continual, systematic giving is the plan. The auxiliary will never move forward to its greatest work until men and women work together, as God intends that they should, in this missionary society. Some of our noblest and most intelligent women have made a life work of the C. W. B. M. cause, and of course, it would not be right to remove them from the places of trust they occupy and put men in their places, but the work might and ought to be so increased that more workers, both men and women, would be needed, though it is a fact that must be admitted that one officer might do more work if all the boards were consolidated.

Now a consolidation that would mean just one missionary day a year, the collection to be divided among the various missionary causes, would lessen the offering, for if on account of bad weather or any other cause two missionary days are brought together, there will be no larger collection than if one day was being observed. Why not have in each church a missionary society consisting of both men and women who regularly pay each week or month a certain sum as dues or offerings?

Let this society meet once a month on one of the prayer-meeting nights, if they think best, and that prayer-meeting night ought to be the best one of the month.

Sunday afternoon might suit better, but however it might be arranged it ought to help the missionary cause as well as the spiritual life of the church. MARY P. MARTIN.

Sweet butter can't be made in a sour churn. The stomach is a churn. A foul stomach fouls the food put into it. When the food is fouled the blood made from it is fouled also. Foul blood means disease. Cleanse the churn and you have sweet butter. Cleanse the stomach and you have pure blood. The far reaching action of Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery is due to its effect on the stomach and organs of digestion and nutrition. Diseases that begin in the stomach are cured through the stomach.

"Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery has proved a great blessing to me," writes Mrs. Ellen E. Bacon, of Shutesbury, Franklin Co., Mass. "Prior to September, 1897, I had doctored for my stomach trouble for several years, going through a course of treatment without any real benefit. In September, 1896, I had very sick spells and grew worse; could eat but little. I commenced to take Dr. Pierce's medicine and in a short time I could eat and work. I have gained twenty pounds in two months."

Union open-air church services begin at Kingman July 2, 1899, at 7 o'clock P. M. The Methodists, Presbyterians, United Brethren and Christians unite in these services, and Bro. S. S. McGill, of the Disciples of Christ, preaches the first sermon.

Each minister on his own evening is to conthe services in his own way. We hope to see much good from these union meetings, and some of Satan's temples may be undermined and thrown down with a Jerico crash.

Bro. Hanna, pastor of the Christian Church at Harper, spent some time visiting Bro. McGill and church at Kingman, the last week.

Bro. Coates, of Lerado, thinks he will enter the Kansas Christian College this fall to study the languages. He can quote, interpret and apply, correctly, Scripture passages in a very interesting way.

Bro. McGill is dean of the Bible department in our new college at Harper. No one need fear that they will be misguided in the study of God's Word under such snch a dean.

Notes and News.

The Marion county Christian convention will convene with the church in Hannibal, Mo., Sept. 4, 5 and 6, 1899.

H. CLAY WHALEY, Sec.

The yearly meeting of the Disciples of Christ, of Ashtabula county, Ohio, will be held with the church at Geneva, commencing Friday, Aug. 18. A good pragram has been arranged for this meeting. H. N. Allen is the pastor of the church in Geneva.

Bible Institute and College Opening,

CANTON, MO., SEPT. 4-6.

An attractive combination is a Bible Institute in connection with the opening of Christian University. Very much interest is added by the fact that on opening day the institute will be held in the university and be combined with educational addresses and special music. The institute will be addressed by W. F. Richardson, D. R. Dungan, J. W. Hardy, A. F. Sanderson, J. Carroll Stark, Levi Marshall, Pres. C. Lockhart and several other speakers. All cordially invited. Entertainment free.

Christian Union.

I have just returned from a four weeks' vacation, commencing with the Detroit convention. I had arrangements with the Congregational pastor whereby the two congregations were united for the months of July and August, Rev. Edmons holding forth during July and myself through August. So much for Christian union. The Mankato Disciples are noble and consecrated and we are expecting advancement.

Dedication.

Last Lord's day was a happy day to us. It was the consummation of years of toil and prayer for a church house. Pres. J. H. Hardin, of Eureka College, officiated. He is a great success. Brethren, send for him. We now have a pleasant and commodious house, and we believe the cause of our Lord will prosper here as never before. I never saw greater zeal or sacrifice than these people have manifested. God is richly blessing us, and we are happy and thankful.—W. D. DEWEESE, pastor.

Kankakee, Ill., Aug. 11, 1899.

An Open Letter.

To the members of the Ministerial Association of the Disciples of Christ in Eastern Ohio:

BRETHREN:—The 36th annual meeting of the association will be held in Alliance, O., September 5-7, 1899. It will be held in the city where it was organized, 35 years ago. Its membership is large and honorable. Not all can be present personally. Will you not be present by letter? Address me at Kent, O., until September 4. I would be glad to hear from all living persons who are now or have been members. Yours truly,

F. M. GREEN, Pres.

Kent, Ohio.

That Reunion.

Bro. J. M. Van Horn is ever busy planning and executing something good for the Lord's cause, and I think that English reunion is one of his best conceptions.

A meeting of all the present workers, or those who have wrought in England under the Foreign Society, together with their converts in this country, would not only be very pleasant and profitable to us, but it would have an excellent influence on the Jubilee Convention and the brotherhood at large.

With all the money that has been spent, and with all the work that has been done, and its grand results, I do not believe that the brethren generally realize the great importance of the English field. In my judgment, outside of America, England is the most important field in the world for our work. By all means let us have this reunion. To see and hear such men as Moore, Earl, Van Horn, Haley, Durban, Abberly, Small, et al., will not only enhance our interest in the English work, but will enkindle anew within us the spirit of world-wide evangelism.

Publishers' Notes.

"QUEEN ESTHER," by M. M. Davis, Christian Pub. Co., St. Louis, publishers, is a delightful little cloth-bound and illustrated volume of 132 pages; price, 75 cents. From the Book of Esther and ancient history the author gleans the information that he weaves into the charming little work, and brings out the life of the Queen so clearly that one cannot help admiring her on account of her noble womanly qualities. Here the story is told how an orphan Jewish maiden, in captivity, arose until she became the queen of the King Xerxes, and was the means in the hand of God of saving the Jewish race from massacre in all the parts of the kingdom of Babylon. As some of the Sunday-school lessons for October will be in the Book of Esther, this volume will be found to be of special interest to all active Sunday-school workers.—Gospel Messenger, Mt. Morris, Ill.

SAMPLES FREE.

Sunday-schools will soon begin to order their supplies for the fourth quarter. If you are not using the series published by the Christian Publishing Co., of St. Louis, send to them for samples of Sunday-school literature. On receipt of your request a sample of each of the various kinds needed in modern Sunday-schools will be sent by mail for your examination.

"MARY ARDMORE."

Have you a friend or acquaintance that you think should be taught the fundamental principles of Christianity? If so, persuade him to read J. H. Stark's late book, "Mary Ardmore." The story itself is interesting from beginning to end, and the doctrines of the Christian religion are brought out in the progress of the story. See that your friend is supplied with a copy of "Mary Ardmore." It is a splendid book to place in the hands of the young men and women of to-day. Price, $1.00, postpaid.

MORMONISM.

A valuable work on the errors of the Mormon doctrines is lately from the pen of D. H. Bays. The title of this boak is "Doctrines and Dogmas of Mormonism Examined and Refuted." The author is familiar with all the strong points on which the Mormon Church relies to sustain its teachings. D. H. Bays was a strong advocate of Mormonism for many years, and his long association with the leaders of the Mormon Church justly qualifies him to speak with a full knowledge of all the facts concerning the subject of Mormonism. It is a book of 460 pages, and the price is $1.50, postpaid.

HUGH CARLIN, or, Truth's Triumph, by J. H. Stark, is a well-planned and well-developed religious story, dealing with some of the modern phases of religion in a very practical and striking manner. It takes high rank as a religious novel. 185 pages, cloth, $1.00. Christian Publishing Co.
